Another endorsement that must have acted as a final clincher to success of the event was a letter sent to Kennedy by the city's popular mayor, William A. Gunter, which okayed the move in no uncertain terms. This appears elsewhere on this page and should serve as a model of tact and propriety for others similarly situated.

As pointed out in another Fashion Show campaign made by Will Mack and Elliot Johnson out in Jonesboro, Ark., newspaper display advertising was not by any means confined to ladies wear. Drug stores, furniture dealers, jewelers, motor car agents and others came into the deal for the dual purpose of aiding the Red Cross and a chance to share in the wide publicity accorded the occasion.

Two issues of the cooperating newspaper we have at hand indicate that a leading women's wear store was selected as the key advertiser, as you will note from the accompanying layout of ads. Others too numerous to use at this time were included in the issues preceding and following the performances, every one featuring the name of the theatre. Just those three ads reproduced here, a five-column by 19 inch, a five-column by 15 inch and a four-column by 15 inch, represent a total of 3,220 inches of what is classified in show-business as free space. Several thousand additional inches were included in smaller ads.

Show Well Staged!

On the afternoon of day set for the show a "Parade of Fashions" was offered as an opening number, followed by a presentation of street wear models. Vaudeville numbers were presented during intermissions in the fashion show, with Frank (Bayday) Woodruff's Country Club Orchestra on the stage. An accordionist also rendered special numbers, as did the Paramount Special Quartette, while settings were being changed for presentation of the feature.

The curtain arose of a garden setting with a tall rose-decorated fence in the background. A local dance artist, seated in the center, then offered a Society waltz and a jazz number. Following the opening number the 10 debutantes appeared in smart Spring costumes, each representing one of the merchants who helped make the show a success. Shoes and gloves were provided by a leading shoe dealer.

As a result of the above the Montgomery Chapter of the American Red Cross has a tidy sum to its credit to aid in feeding some 3,000 destitute people in the city; the newspaper gained in advertising lineage and reader interest, and the theatre reaped both revenue and good will from the four shows.

It was smart business on the part of Kennedy and the newspapermen to tie in the Red Cross for a percentage of the box office on the Fashion Show, for without this organization grave doubts are entertained by the writer as to availability of the debutantes for their part of the show. They take their Society seriously down in Montgomery, as they do in many other cities both South and North, and while they'll go the limit for a worthy cause, they will not be "promoted" for just an occasion.

Red Cross and Debutantes!

However, there can be no doubt that the Red Cross and debutantes angles formed the real backbone of Kennedy's show and due credit should be given him or others who were responsible for lining up the several factors necessary to the successful promotion of the event. It is also evident that the newspaper played an important part in the advance campaign, as indicated by support from both editorial and advertising departments. When a conservative newspaper like the "Montgomery Advertiser" gives front-page space to a style show you can bet your bottom dollar that it was keenly interested.

We hope that other members of the Round Table Club will take a leaf from the campaign books of Kennedy, Mack and others we've recently recorded as sponsors of Spring Fashion Shows and engineer similar events. If you succeed in winning wholehearted support from your newspaper, merchants and some other tied-in organization, don't be afraid to hold a second show if you sell out for the first. Remember, you have put across an intensive campaign that has been liberally endorsed by leading people of your town and that you are in a position to cash in on what has transpired in the wav of publicity and advertising. Size up the local situation carefully—and then shoot the works.

Mayor Gunter Endorses Style Show

City of Montgomery
Alabama
Feb. 27, 1932.

Office of Board of Commissioners
W. A. Gunther, Jr., President
W. J. Orum, vice-president
William P. Screws, Commissioner

Mr. R. M. Kennedy,
Paramount Theatre,
Montgomery, Ala.

Dear Dick:

I read with much interest the article in Sunday's Advertiser which announced that the Paramount Theatre and the Montgomery Advertiser would hold a STYLE SHOW AND FASHION EXTRAVAGANZA on March 2nd and 3rd and the Local Chapter of the Red Cross would share in the receipts of the theatre these two days.

I am sure that the people of Montgomery will welcome the chance of seeing this unusual production and at the same time help the splendid work of the Red Cross and I think the Montgomery Debutantes of this Season should be congratulated for offering to model the beautiful clothes to be shown in this revue. Our Montgomery girls and ladies are known the south over for their beauty and poise and I am positive they will do their share to make this program one of Society's outstanding events.

The tremendous success of the midnight show for the unemployed of the city held at your Paramount Theatre a short while back proves what our Montgomery people are capable of doing and I know that you will enjoy the same success with the STYLE SHOW as you did with the big midnight unemployed show.

If there is anything I can do to help make this a bigger success, please call on me.

With very best wishes,

Very truly yours,
(Signed) W. A. GUNTER,
Mayor

The above letter from Mayor Gunter to Manager Dick Kennedy of the Paramount Theatre, is a hearty endorsement of the Style Show and Fashion Extravaganza, which will b held at the Paramount Theatre today and tomorrow. A percentage of the gross receipts of the four shows will be given to the Montgomery Chapter of the Red Cross.

(Editor's note: The above is a reproduction of the letter of endorsement sent Kennedy by the Mayor of Montgomery, Ala.)

WALL MADE A NOVEL TRAILER BY ADDING SCENE IN NEWSREEL

To advertise a coming attraction, "Trapped in a Submarine," Thomas Wall, manager of the Modern Theatre, Boston, Mass., used a newsreel shot in conjunction with the trailer.

The newsreel shot of the M-2, the British sub that sunk a short time ago off the coast of England, came from Paramount News No. 53 and showed the fated ship taking part in maneuvers that led to the accident. This was inserted in the trailer and used for a week in advance of opening. It proved a novel innovation and received many favorable comments.

Extra publicity was gained on this picture by sending special invitations to the Commander of the Charleston Navy Yard and enlisted men to view the attraction on opening night.

Wall certainly had the thinking cap on when he seized upon the opportunity to insert the shot of the sunken submarine. It was a novel idea and a perfect tie-up with the title of his coming attraction.

SALE OF HOUSE AND POLICY WORKS BEST FOR ROBERT RYDEEN

Five changes per week at a dime admission any time of the day won't allow much in the way of sensational exploitation, but patronage can be built up through general exploitation of house and policy, according to Robert J. Rydeen, manager of the Garrick Theatre, St. Paul, Minn.

Greatest efforts, in his case, are put forth in appeal to family patronage in an endeavor to create a home-like atmosphere. When patrons reach the Garrick they are made to feel that it is a place where they can unbend and act in a natural manner, not one of those houses where a heel-clicking usher tries to out-soldier a member of the Kaiser's old army.

You'll hear more from Rydeen in the future and just for a starter he calls attention to a little gag that can be filed away for next Xmas season, even if it is a long way off right now. The snap show reproduced here is very small and does not clearly show the attractive fireplace arranged for the inner lobby. On the mantel are cutout stills of stars surrounded by Xmas wreaths and the stockings that you see hanging from mantel edge each represent a current attraction of the week. A sign reads: "See What Santa Claus Has Brought You." Fire effect was placed in the pit of the fireplace.

We also note that he recently put over a full page cooperative page with local merchants, using the missing letter gag in the ads to spell out the name of his theatre. All this publicity cost him was a few passes.

Fall in line with the other soliders in this big army, Bob, and let us know what you have been doing to pep up Spring trade. 'Tell 'em, we'll sign off.

Great in Story Great in Drama Great in Acting

Many showmen would be surprised to learn that hundreds of theatres must depend almost solely on the circulation of a weekly newspaper for their advertising to reach a public distributed over a wide area.

Here is a good example of a weekly ad which George Miller turned out each week for one of the papers through which he broadcasts his attractions.

From the standpoint of perfection many so-called smart ad men will turn up their noses at an ad of this kind, but let them try a hand at working with small town weekly papers and see if they can do better. We doubt it. If you are turning out better weekly ads than this one send a few along and we'll take a look at them ourselves. All aggressive showmen welcome constructive suggestions.

FLASHLIGHT PHOTOS!

A good way to take flashlight photos at small expense has been found by J. E. Lykes, manager of the Loew-Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

He uses a 100-watt, 64-volt lamp in a 110-volt line, but cautions against leaving the lamp burning for more than 2 minutes at a time. The lamps can be bought for 40c each and will last for many weeks.

We have a sample photo at hand taken in this wise and it is sharp enough to reproduce all detail. This method might be used to excellent results when taking small photos of displays in lobby and the inner foyer, where a flash is needed to make a clear reproduction.

DANNENBERG WAGED INTENSIVE CAMPAIGN ON CLEVELAND SHOW

An intensive campaign marked the efforts of Sid Dannenberg, Warner exploiter in Cleveland territory, when he sold "Alias the Doctor" for the Uptown, Lake and Variety theatres in the city of Cleveland.

Trailers were used on all three screens two weeks in advance, along with an especially designed still that carried the catchword "Exposed" and had the "dynamite motif" as a background. Additional copy included the word "Fake" written in red and copy at base stated, "He Lived a Lie to Save Another from Disgrace."

The newspaper campaign included a Classified tie-up with a leading paper; a special controversy story two days in advance and regular stills and art papers four days in advance.

Other effort included 300 street car cards in red and blue color; 100 hanging cards calling attention to the giveaway of an auto; special exploitation front for the Lake, and letter mailed to Academy of Medicine for bulletin board.

Dannenberg is an aggressive exploiter out in his territory and has been turning in a lot of good work. We'll tell you more about his brand of showmanship just as soon as further information comes to hand.

ROSE SECURED GOOD RESULTS WHEN USING OLD HALLOWE'EN GAG

Excellent results were secured by Walter B. Rose, manager of the Strand Theatre, Brockton, Mass., in connection with "Passionate Plumber" through use of a gag adapted from a well-known Hallowe'en stunt.

In selling the show, Rose plugged both Keaton and Durante, for both are very well liked in Brockton.

In advance, a large display head of Jimmy "Schnozzle" Durante was placed in the foyer. However, Jimmy's famous "schnozzle" was missing from the display head. A large grotesque "schnozzle" (nose) was separate from the display head.

Patrons were asked to pin Durante's nose on the display head; first, being blindfolded and then being compelled to walk a few steps to the object. This idea was adapted from the old Hallowe'en gag of pinning the tail on the donkey.

The lobby stunt was the center of attraction all week previous to the picture's opening. It not only made a fine attention-getter but it caused a lot of talk about town too, all of which helped immeasurably in publicizing the picture.

NEWSPAPER'S MORGUE COMBED BY DRACHMAN FOR DREYFUS STORIES

Old newspaper files were combed for stories on the "Dreyfus Case" when the picture by that name was played by F. E. Drachman, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Tucson, Ariz.

Excerpts were taken from the collection of stories and through a tie-up made with the paper were printed in a story that carried a two-column head. Considerable work was involved in digging up the old yarns but this was more than repaid by publicity received.

Keeping Up With The Times!

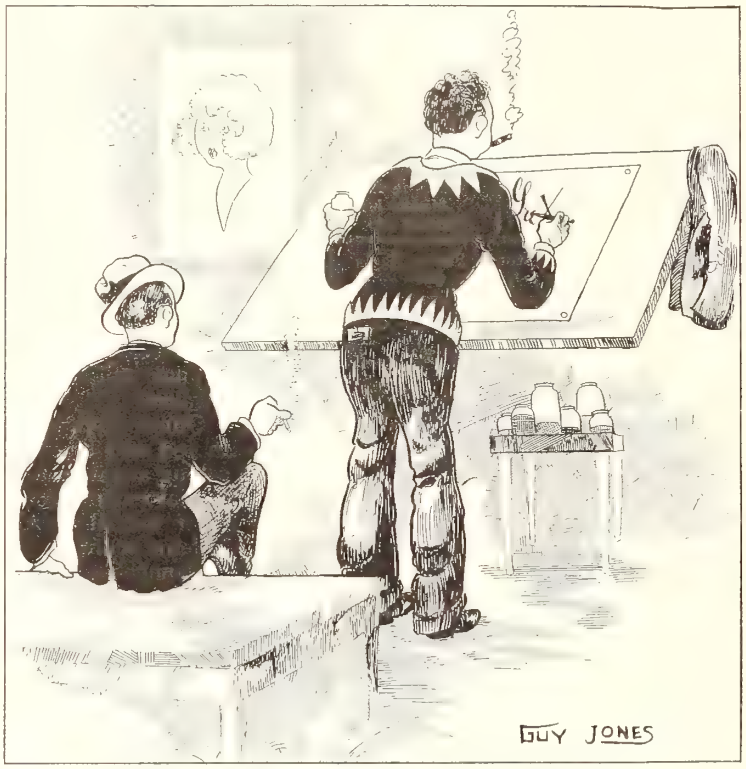
By GUY JONES



When the usual kibbitzer asked this artist whether it was difficult to turn out something new all the time, the artist told him that it was just as easy as turning out some of the same tripe that Hollerwood hands us with each new batch of releases. It's all the same but painted with different colors or adding a slightly different twist. Maybe he's right at that.

THRILL-O-METER WAS USED BY O'DONNELL FOR HORROR PICTURE

An ingenious contraption called a "Thrill-O-Meter" was used for advance publicity on "Rue Morgue" by C. E. O'Donnell, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Baton Rouge, La.

This thrill-o-meter was constructed by building a lobby cut-out and using the figure of a gorilla.

The display was arranged so that its base covered the lobby scales. Then under the scales platform, a water bag was placed, filled with colored liquid. The hot water bag was attached to a glass indicator tube which ran up the center of the cut-out.

At various levels on the indicator, small cards were placed with copy such as:

200-220....You like to be thrilled!
160-180....We advise you to be accompanied by an escort!
120-140....Its thrills will chill you! Wear an overcoat!
80-100....You have an average heart and can stand the supreme thrills in "Murders in the Rue Morgue!"
40- 60....Don't enter unless accompanied by a friend!
- 20....You're too young to see this picture without your parents!

We believe the above description will enable the average person to construct a similar gadget, if the spirit so prompts him, and we are indebted to O'Donnell for passing along the information.

Credit Dannenberg

In our issue of March 16 we erroneously pinned the title of Warner Publicity Chief in Cleveland, Ohio, on "Hank" Harold when it should have been Sidney Dannenberg. This was done in connection with a page layout of newspaper ads. Information now discloses that Dannenberg masterminded the ads and that Harold was responsible for art direction and layout.

WE HEAR FROM TAN BOON BEE IN FAR AWAY PENANG, S. S.

Competition in show-business is just as keen in Penang, Strait Settlements, as it is in many sections of our own United States, hence some of the stunts put over by Tan Boon Bee, manager of the Majestic Theatre in that far-off country should be of interest to his fellow showmen in all parts of the world.

He was recently congratulated by the Paramount office in Singapore on the occasion of his full-page ad on "Smiling Lieutenant," which was printed in red and blue ink. It would not reproduce well on account of the colors so we can't very well show you this one, but take a look at another full-page ad he carried on "Viennese Nights," which is part of a spread we are reproducing.

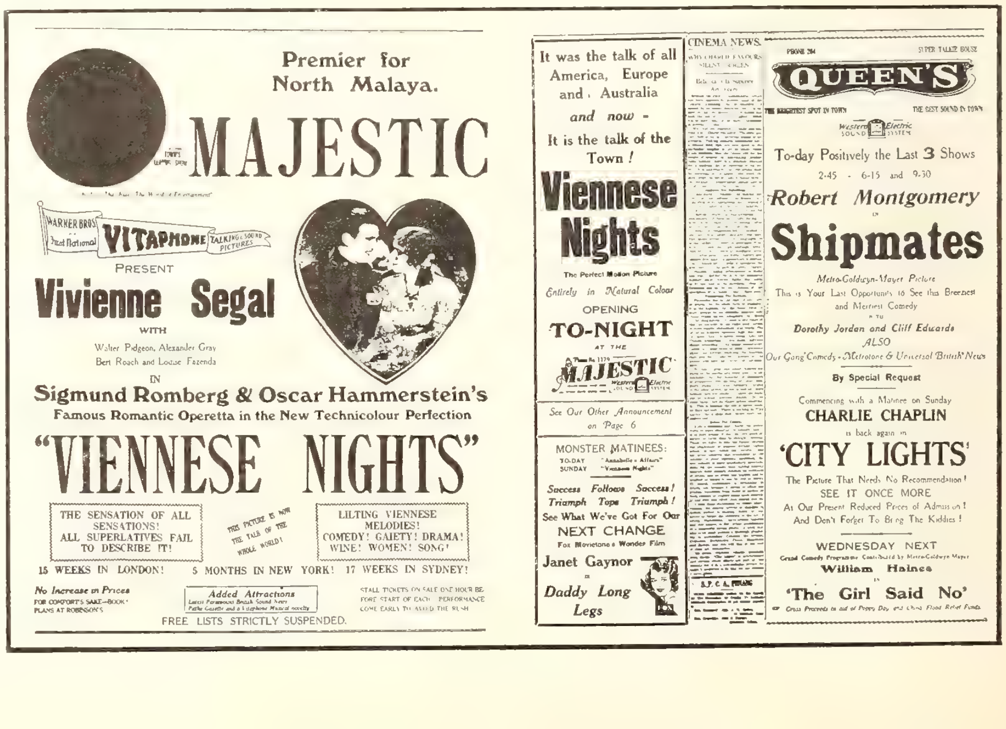
That big dot up in the left-hand corner which reads, "Starting Tonight," was run off in red, likewise the border around the heart-shaped cut of the two principals. Also note that the following page carries another ad on the same picture, both of the ads quite capturing the page from opposition—which was pretty strong with Chaplin in "City Lights."

Two other photos, which to our regret have been lost since type was set, shows a novel front constructed for "Daddy Long Legs" and a bally used for "Bad Girl." The front of the Majestic building's entrance to the upper stories was decorated with a full length figure of Daddy Long Legs and you may believe us when we tell you that it presented a thoroughly novel appearance.

The popular vehicle for transportation in Penang appears to be the "ricksha" and several of these human-powered carts were the means of circulating his six-sheet paper on "Bad Girl." Members of the native population were also engaged to carry large individual letters that spelled out the title of the picture.

Yes, Tan Boon Lee lets his city know that there's a show in town, or coming, when he has anything to do with it, and according to information we have at hand he's one of the live-wire showmen in his part of the world. Another example of his aggressive method of advertising is brought to our attention by a reproduction of a page ad in the Paramount house organ that circulates in that zone. This was run on occasion of signing a contract for that company's product, Tan taking a page to let his patrons know about the deal and to list a number of outstanding coming attractions.

This is the first time we've heard from this Far Eastern Round Tabler and it is to be hoped that he will regularly favor this department with other accounts of his activities in Penang's show world. His stunts are interesting to us and we feel sure that other members will get a kick out of knowing what show-selling methods are followed out in foreign countries. Those already set down bear a striking similarity to our own and serve as a reminder that "East Is West," no matter where you go.



Premier for North Malaya.

WE OFTEN WONDER

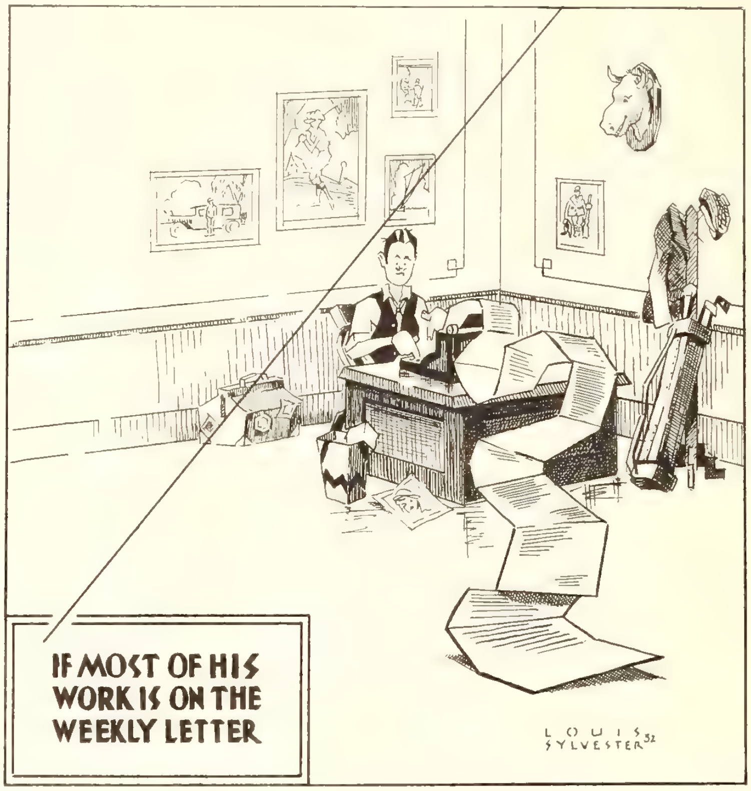
By
LOUIS SYLVESTER

Lou Sylvester has been wondering, and so have we, and so have a couple of thousand other showmen, whether the greatest part of a manager's job today is the writing of that weekly letter. Less detail and more cooperation should be the newer order of things. Spending several hours making up a lot of hooey for the benefit of a home office that probably does not take the trouble to read it through is too much like wasting time.



IF MOST OF HIS WORK IS ON THE WEEKLY LETTER

DANIEL STIMULATED INTEREST WITH GAG ON BARRYMORE BROS.

Interest was stimulated in "Arsene Lupin" by L. O. Daniel, manager of the Queen Theatre, Austin, Texas, by starting a controversy in the newspaper over comparative acting abilities of John and Lionel Barrymore.

An advance reader in the local papers stated that Manager Daniel wanted twenty-five judges to decide which of the Barrymores was the greater actor at a special preview screening of the picture.

"The first 25 letters delivered to the theatre with name and address and telephone number plainly marked, will be selected as bids for the job of judging," Daniel explained. The private showing was held Friday morning prior to the picture's Sunday opening.

Over 100 requests came in asking that they be one of the 25 selected to act as judges. The ones finally chosen included many prominent names of people about town.

And then to follow up on the same idea, the Friday evening paper carried an article (together with a cut of Lionel Barrymore) that the 25 judges couldn't agree and that it was up to the public themselves to judge.

Better than average business testified to the amount of publicity derived from use of the stunt described above and the "judging" angle caused considerable gossip about town.

STRATTON NOW ALL READY TO PRESENT A NUMBER ONE SHOW

A recent letter from W. L. Stratton, lessee of the Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho, discloses that he has made many improvements in this house since taking it over about one year ago.

When he started operations last March about all he had were walls and a small booth. Since then the booth has been made over, new sound equipment installed, seats renovated and repainted orchid and green, and new carpets laid throughout. A new foyer has been built and a motor-controlled curtain installed on stage, which, to our way of thinking is A-1 equipment for a 216-seat house.

Now that Stratton has things ship-shape around his theatre, we'll be looking for some information concerning his selling methods. He does considerable advertising, even though his house is a small one, and as there are many others similarly situated, his ideas are sure to be appreciated.

A FEW NOTES ON WHAT LEE GOLDBERG'S BOYS ARE DOING IN KENTUCKY

We are indebted to Lee Goldberg, Warner zone manager, who headquarters at Louisville, Ky., for a few notes on what some of his boys have been doing for the worthy cause of showbusiness.

First to come to our attention is a full page of theatrical news prepared each Sunday for a local newspaper by F. M. Kendall, manager of the Warner houses in Owensboro, Ky. Two 6 by 10 inch ads appeared at the bottom corners of the page and the balance was devoted to news of current and coming attractions. Star and scene mats were used for illustrations.

Next we have a little 4 by 5 card prepared for "Charlie Chan's Chance" by Leon Pickle, manager of the Warner houses in Henderson, Ky. One side is devoted to feature copy and the other is headed: "Now, You Egg Eaters, Figure This Out and Get a Free Pass—John has 10 dozen eggs; Henry has 30 dozen eggs, and William 50 dozen eggs. All three must sell their eggs at the same price per dozen and bring home the same amount of money. The first ten correct answers will receive a free pass."

Then there's Leon Pickle, whom you've heard about from time to time in this department. He recently promoted a novel full page co-operative ad in connection with his campaign on "Fireman Save My Child," and you'll find this illustrated and described in another story. He also sent out an exceptionally good letter on "Sin Of Madelon Claudet," calling attention to rare dramatic power and appeal that this picture possessed and stressing the personal endorsement angle.

Lee Goldberg has a lot of fast stepping men down in his zone and we are mighty glad to be able to pass along information on what they are doing for showbusiness. We don't have to tell you about their boss, for he's one of the best known showmen in the South. Thanks to him for his co-operation.

NO THE "HATCHET MAN" IS NOT A PICTURE ABOUT WASHINGTON!
THE HATCHET MAN WITH EDWARD ROBINSON
Roy J. Hufford

This production came along at the right moment. In fact, many a patron developed the notion that it had something to do with the Washington Bicentennial Celebration. So don't get mad if you get questions like this when you play it. It's all in a day's work.

MANY NOVEL STUNTS USED BY BRODIE TO SELL AVIATION FILM

Many excellent selling angles were used to put over "Hell Divers" in a campaign made by Ellis Brodie, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Haverhill, Mass., consisting of a newspaper tie-up, novel front, airplane bally and other productive effort.

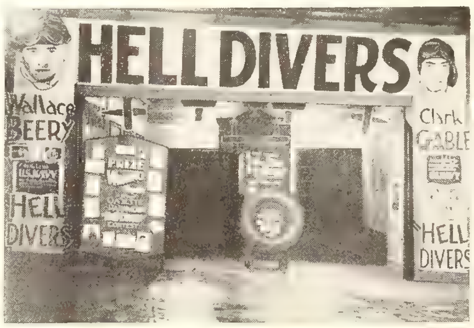
After many attempts in the past to crash a hardboiled local newspaper, Brodie finally succeeded in tying up for a classified page gag, whereby single letters placed in brackets in various ads were assembled by readers and formed into a sentence pertaining to the picture. This was run on a Wednesday and Thursday prior to opening and winners were announced on the following Saturday, or opening day. The classified manager was so gratified with the response that he will undoubtedly look with favor on another move along the same lines in the near future.

The lobby was decorated 10 days in advance with a large 40 by 9 rubber tire which was promoted from a local dealer. Copy stated that it was the same size used by the U. S. bombing planes in the picture. The display was further set off by placing an airplane propeller at base of stand and a model dirigible above.

The local Navy recruiting station was also contacted and permission secured to use "A" boards in a choice location for the regular one-sheets which stated that the picture has been made with the cooperation of the U. S. Navy Department. The local recruiting officer also aided in planting a reader in the newspaper in reference to four local boys who were aboard the U.S.S. Saratoga and others who had been assigned to battleships.

One of the accompanying photos will convey a fair idea of the false front made out of compo-board. The background was painted a vivid yellow and lettering was all done in bright purple and orange. About 25 cutouts of airplanes, made by the house sign artist, were hung around the outside edge of the marquee. The photo shows the cutout letters of title over entrance and cutout heads of stars at either side.

While complete plans for an airplane bally did not fully materialize on account of a severe snowstorm that left two feet of snow over the local airport, permission was grudgingly obtained from police authorities to tow one of the planes to the theatre, where an usher was placed on duty to prevent the curious from climbing all over the wings and into cockpit. But for the storm, the plane would have carried out the original plan to circle over the city, with large siren going full blast.



Unlike the usual policy in most sections of New England, this picture was single featured, and in order to satiate a public long trained in the art of exacting two pictures for the price of one, the theatre was lucky enough to have the Laurel-Hardy comedy, "Come Clean." Mention was given the short on marquee and space in ads generally devoted to the extra feature was used for the comedy.

Brodie certainly deserves credit for putting over a well rounded out campaign and for his success in crashing his newspaper for that long awaited tie-up.

STEIN PROMOTED TWO COSTLESS DEALS WITH NEIGHBORHOOD STORES

Just to let his fellow Club members know that I. J. Stein, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Astoria, L. I., is on the job, we can report that he has been active in putting over a couple of costless tie-ups in his neighborhood.

On "Rainbow Trail" he contacted a soda fountain proprietor near the theatre and sold him on the idea of paying for the printing, distribution and mailing of 10,000 heralds. Over fifty per cent of the copy plugged the picture and the balance stated that the stub would entitle the holder to a five and ten cent rebate on sodas and sundaes for the current week. Stein also promoted a horse for this picture and had one of the ushers ride it around the neighborhood. A placard on his back played up theatre, attraction and playdates.

His other tie-up was made with the distributors of Life Savers and resulted in the promotion of six cases of the confections for give-away in envelopes carrying copy for "Silent Witness." These were distributed in the theatre, street and at candy stores.

It will be seen that Stein is pursuing his usual custom of promoting deals that will produce free advertising and publicity for his theatre and there can be no doubt that stunts of this sort are decidedly popular these days. We'll tell you more about this Round Tabler's work just as soon as we get a further line on his activities.

HIGH SCHOOL DANCE TEAM HELPED HOBBS WITH MINUET STUNT

Patrons of the Hippodrome Theatre, a house at Pottsville, Pa., managed by Herwood E. Hobbs, were recently treated to an added attraction that was promoted without cost to the house.

As a personal favor to Hobbs the local High School made arrangements to present the School Minuet on the theatre stage as a Washington's Birthday attraction. Fifteen students took part in the number, attired in their own special costumes and accompanied by their own music. It was the first time the attraction had ever been made public.

A neat little local interest stunt for which Hobbs deserves full credit for promoting, in view of the fact that it did not set the theatre back one extra cent.

Students Demand Cut

Students of Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y., recently presented a demand on local theatre interests for a cut in admission from forty to twenty-five cents on account of hard times. Unless the demand is met, the petition stated, a resolution to boycott the theatre. The local house is on the William Smalley circuit and is managed by George Miller.

MANY NOVEL STUNTS FEATURED "FIREMAN" CAMPAIGN BY DOUGLAS

Effective outdoor advertising, attractive front and lobby displays, novelty advertising and sundry other stunts combined to put over an excellent campaign on "Fireman, Save My Child" for Roland Douglas, manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa. Incidentally, the popular use of fire apparatus was shelved in this case for reason that the local department had just finished a big ballyhoo for the unemployment fund and therefore likely to prove a dud as a stunt for the picture.

WALGR
Fireman Save my Child

Outdoor advertising included the posting of ten 24-sheets, with special streamer date running across the top instead of bottom, nine days in advance; use of 50 3-sheets on special poster boards in choice location throughout city; the placing of a large cloth banner on building being demolished in main portion of city, and window panels in 100 prominent downtown stores.

You will note by one of the accompanying photos that something decidedly different in fronts was used. Those large cutouts of Brown at either side were covered with real trousers, coats and vests and the innovation caused much comment. Even the horses' heads in the center of this display were made particularly effective through use of a shadow box with black velvet background.

For an advance lobby display a large frame box measuring 12 by 14 was used in a spot by the stairway where it attracted attention from every one who came inside the theatre. Catchy copy surrounded a large, special cutout of Brown, with fireman hat on head and his mouth wide open. Three 3-sheets painted blood red, with large heads of Brown taken from poster 3-sheet, but touched up with paint to resemble an oil painting, were placed in the outer lobby.

Barrel displays, such as described in this department some time ago and illustrated in the small photo here, were used to excellent effect out on the sidewalk in front of theatre. Each barrel had a large head of Brown on the pole, which was made to revolve by use of small motor inside the barrel. Later on the barrels were taken inside the lobby. This display attracted a great deal of attention.

Another stunt used in connection with this picture and one that can be put into effect on any occasion, was a tie-up with the "Correct Time Service." Through this arrangement, every sixth person calling for correct time was given a plug on the current show. Since there is an average of about 2,300 calls per day, it meant that over 380 people received daily notice on the picture.

The ranks of local unemployed furnished two men who took part in a street ballyhoo. Both were dressed in rubber coats on which was painted title and name of theatre. Old-time fireman hats topped off the costume. They worked the department stores, cafeterias, boxing matches, factories and other points where good circulation could be secured for hand bills. The fact that publicity was given to their former connection with the mayor's office brought word-of-mouth publicity. Three other men, each with a red axe, were used to keep the people in line at the box office.

For short notice it appears that Douglas and his crew put over a fine campaign. As he states, a fellow can't arrange a million stunts in a few days and his town is one that will not stand for too much sensational publicity on pictures.

SELECT CANVASSED BY O'DONNELL WHEN PLUGGING NEW FILM

As one means of publicizing "Broken Lullaby," J. K. O'Donnell, manager of the Haines Theatre, Waterville, Me., sent out letters to the intellectual element in his town. The list included professors of a nearby college and all High School teachers. Description of the picture was brief but poignant.

Other effort included advance telephone calls; a street bally of nine boys carrying placards on opening day; a window display of war relics, and a lobby display of guns, helmets, sabers and flags.

This is the first flash we've had from Waterville in quite some time and it's gratifying to know that O'Donnell is still hitting the old ball.

Hot Weather Recipes!

Forthcoming issues of this department will carry many interesting stories relative to the boosting of box-office receipts during the summer months. One of these articles is a pip of a yarn from that well-known showman, Frank Whitbeck, and there will be many more from equally prominent theatre and advertising executives. Help the good work along by sending in your remedy.

ALL RANDFORCE MEN NOW MEMBERS!

CHARLES STEINMAN makes his headquarters at the Republic Theatre, Williamsburg, Brooklyn, and from that point supervises the Commodore, Marcy, Roebling and Meserole, all in his district. He can probably be classed as the veteran of the Randforce circuit, having put in many years in this game. Charlie at one time acted as general manager for William Brandt, of Brandt Bros., and his wide experience as a showman also includes the handling of vaudeville. He has a most likable personality and is well thought of throughout the trade.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

HARRY DAVEY is another supervisor and he holds forth at the Ridgewood Theatre, Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn. In addition to managing the Ridgewood he looks after the affairs of all Randforce houses in the sections of Ridgewood and Richmond Hill. He is also an experienced showman, having acted as manager of the Strand Theatre, New York City, and as general manager of the former Calderone Circuit, Long Island. He was also with the Irving Theatre Corporation as general manager and prior to taking his present post was supervisor for Fox on Long Island. As a side line he acts as vice president of the Lion's Club, Richmond Hill.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

GEORGE LANGBART is supervisor number three on our list and he hangs his hat at the Carleton Theatre, Flatbush avenue, from which point he caters to the ritzy Park Slope section of Brooklyn. His territory also takes in supervision of the Parkside, Duffield and Leader theatres. George is a real Bug on the subjects of Presentations and Service and a strong supporter of Mrs. Rita McGoldrick's section in the Motion Picture Herald.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

LOUIS GOLDFARB manages the Kinema Theatre out on Pitkin Avenue, Brooklyn, and like most every Randforce man he, too, is an experienced motion picture man. At one time in his career he followed the exchange end of the business and prior to going with Randforce was manager of the Fox Theatre at Corona, L. I. Pitkin avenue, his location in Brownsville, is one of the busiest thoroughfares in the city of Brooklyn, and Louis is getting his share of the theatre-going crowds.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

MURRAY ALPER is the manager of the Commodore Theatre at 329 Broadway, Brooklyn, and his is one of the busiest spots on the Randforce circuit. However, Murray is also an able showman and the handling of big crowds doesn't faze him at all. He recently became the proud and doting father of a baby boy and maybe that will explain why he has always been a nut on putting over Baby Contests. Okay, Murray, keep up the good work.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

HARRY WACHTEL manages the Riviera Theatre on St. Johns Place, Brooklyn, and this Randforce man is located near Monty MacLevy's neighborhood. Both he and MacLevy are located in a section of the city that will bring out the fighting qualities of any showman. They're flanked on all sides with stiff competition and good results at these houses rate some kind of a medal. We're glad to have Wachtel with us and hope that he'll keep us informed on what's going on in show business over in his neighborhood.

WITH the following list of managers elected members of this organization, it is the Round Table Club's pleasure to report that the Randforce Circuit of theatre men of Brooklyn and Queens, N. Y., now has one hundred per cent representation in this department.

Formerly under the Fox banner, the forty-odd houses comprising the Randforce Circuit were taken over some time ago by Messrs. Frisch and Rinzler, both well known exhibitors in the Metropolitan district and active in the Fox theatre chain prior to enactment of the decentralization policy. Samuel Rinzler was district manager for Fox in Brooklyn and on Long Island and Louis Frisch had charge of maintenance of all Long Island houses. Frisch now holds the office of president and Rinzler is vice-president.

Supervisors include Erwin Gold, Bensonhurst; Sidney P. Levine, East New York; George Langbart, Park Slope section; Charles Steinman, Williamsburg; Harry Davies, Ridgewood and Queens; George Davis, Brownsville, and Monty MacLevy, who in addition to acting as publicity supervisor for the entire circuit, has charge of the Savoy Theatre, Brooklyn.

In the booking department we find Irving Kaplan holding down the job of Chief Booker, with Jack Birnbaum acting as Booker. Maintenance is in the hands of Purchasing Agent Irving Goldstein and the accounting department is presided over by David Newnan, C. R. Stanton and R. Hodes. Felix Charney superintends projection.

So there you are, you fellows who have yet to become a member of the fastest growing organization of showmen in the whole world. Why put it off any longer? C'mon in and let's make it UNANIMOUS! It won't cost you a nickel to join and your membership entails no responsibility other than lending a helping hand to your brother showmen. Surely, that's a worthy cause. There's an application below. Sign it and send it in NOW! Thanks. "Chick."

SAM FRIED also has the distinction of being ranked as a veteran in the art of show-business and he holds forth at the Parthenon Theatre, Wyckoff avenue, Brooklyn. Before joining Randforce, Fried at one time held an executive post with the Jolson Theatres in New England and some of his past posts took him to theatres in Boston, Staunton and Summerville, Mass. Fried's likeable personality is one of his assets in this game and has been a help putting over many a tie-up with newspapers, etc. He recently engineered a big campaign on "Fireman," of which we may have more to write about in the future.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

HERBERT MARK is in charge of the Supreme Theatre, a Randforce house on Livonia avenue, Brooklyn, and he's another of the gang to be introduced to the big army of showmen in this organization. Herb operates on a straight picture policy and displays the usual Randforce aggressiveness when it comes to putting over shows. Prior to taking his present post he managed the Terminal and Cross Bay theatres for the Fox circuit.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

LOUIS SCHNITZER manages the Benson Theatre, a Randforce house in the Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn, which brings him in contact with Supervisor Erwin Gold. Lou is another one of the newcomers to the circuit and we're glad to introduce him to the rest of the fellows in this Club. Next time you see Eddie Schnitzer, of the Fox Exchange, give him our regards, Lou, and keep up the good work in the business of selling shows.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

W. L. NOLAN, known among his friends as "Wally," is the manager of the Maspeth Theatre, Maspeth, Long Island. He's another Randforce man with a wealth of experience in this game to his credit, having served with Loew, RKO, Publix and the A. H. Schwartz Century Circuit of Brooklyn. He's quite a hunk of a man, is "Wally," standing over six feet in his stockings, and all his energy goes into the business of selling shows. We are glad to welcome him into this Club.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

JOSEPH HANLEY is skipper of the Colonial Theatre, a large house located in the Broadway section of Brooklyn. He's another veteran showman in line for introduction to his many fellow Club members and now that he's with us we'll be looking for some news from his section of the big borough. George is a former member of the A. H. Schwartz Century Circuit and prior to that connection worked with Eddie Hyman at the Brooklyn Strand Theatre, where he helped his boss put over many a stunt that received mention in trade paper exploitation articles. There's no doubt but that he knows his way 'round theatres and we're mighty glad to welcome him as a member of this organization. You'll hear more about Hanley in the future.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

BEN REISNER'S name completes the list of new Club members from Randforce ranks and he manages the Carroll Theatre on Utica avenue, Brooklyn. We're sorry we haven't room for the reprinting of a fable he sent in, which packs a wallop in its moral. More about this at another time. Right now we're concerned with getting Ben introduced to his host of fellow showmen and with the show tips that he and his brother managers intend to contribute to this department. Let 'em come along, boys.

INCREASE OF STAGE SHOWS IN THE COUNTRY IS SEEN BY JOSEPH WEBER

Occasional Name Acts Successful

Due to the success of the tabloid "Girl Crazy" and Ted Lewis and his stage show at the Indiana, B. V. Sturdivant, zone manager for Publix in Indianapolis, has come to the conclusion, he says, that while there is not a market for stage shows every week in Indianapolis, the public will pay for de luxe shows at intervals of two or three weeks.

As a result the Indiana has booked such shows as Bill Robinson's "Hot for Harlem," "The Camal Quarter Hour," The Mills Brothers and Guy Lombardo and his Orchestra to appear at intervals of two and three weeks.

Sturdivant said that the plan of booking "name" shows at intervals offered a solution for the theatre in the cities that have trouble with either a regular stage show policy or an all-film policy. This plan, he said, gives the public a chance to recuperate before another show is presented and gives the theatre a chance to reach more people with the trailer for the following attraction. The Indiana sets an admission top of 65 cents for the stage show performances and 50 cents for the all-film policy.

Warner May Extend De Luxe Showing of Stage Musicals

Warners is following the lead of Publix and Balaban & Katz in Chicago, showing an abbreviated version of the musical comedy, "Follow Thru," at the Mastbaum in Philadelphia this week. The Warner Artists Bureau is behind the idea, which, if successful, will be adopted in other de luxe houses of the circuit.

George White, "Scandals" producer, has been conferring with William Goldman, general manager for Stanley-Warner in the Philadelphia territory. White, interested in the idea, may work on the preparation of short versions of "Flying High," "The Vagabond King," "Hit the Deck," "Desert Song," "Three's a Crowd," and others as probabilities at the Mastbaum.

Cody Plans Stage Tour

Bill Cody, western player for Monogram on the Coast, will leave on a personal appearance tour of the southern states upon the completion of his current film.

Screen Players on Stage

Julia Hanley, Sharon Lynn, James Ellison, screen players, will play in "I Love an Actress," at the Pasadena Community Playhouse, during the week of April 23.

RON BAGGOTT & DON MOORE

Here is a team of organists who have taken the organ and given it an entirely new and spectacular renaissance.

They are featured at the RKO Downtown theatre, Detroit, and are the only "live" talent on the theatre's programs. They're "selling" themselves, more so even than the organ, and from all reports are putting it over in great style.

Incidentally we will get a more conclusive story from the "boys" and print it in an early issue. Look for it.

Crawford Air Time Cut

Jesse Crawford, for many years organist at the New York Paramount, will in the future broadcast on Sunday nights only over a National Broadcasting Company-WEAF network. He was formerly heard six times a week.

Composes for Comedy

Bernie Grossman, Broadway composer, has completed seven new songs, in collaboration with Dave Silverstein, for the current Mack Sennett short on the Coast, "Hatta Marri," featuring Harry Gribbon, Babe Kane.

Colleen Moore On Stage

Colleen Moore and her "Church Mouse," company opens at the El Capitan theatre in Hollywood on April 17. In the cast are Jameson Thomas, Helene Millard, Cyril Chadwick, Russell Fillmore, Charles Campbell.

Head of American Musicians' Association Bases Belief on Increase in Number of Musicians Employed Recently

An increase of stage shows throughout the country was indicated by Joseph N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians, in his assertion, in Kansas City last week, that there has been a great increase in the number of musicians employed by theatres in recent months.

He said he believed economic conditions were showing a remarkable improvement over last year and cited figures regarding employment of orchestras in theatres to bear him out. In 1931, he said, there were 2,500 musicians employed in theatres throughout the country, while this year there are some 7,000. These figures, of course, apply only to members of units affiliated with the American Federation, but in addition there is a small percentage of unaffiliated musicians employed.

The Federation executives said the comeback by musicians is due largely to the growth of stage presentations. The Federation's campaign against "canned music" in picture houses is continuing, he declared, although not as aggressively as in the past. Coupons expressing the signer's desire for orchestra music are still being received at Federation offices. The American Federation has 4,000,000 members, he said.

Weber, accompanied by Mrs. Weber, arrived in Kansas City from Cedar Rapids, Ia., where he was the principal speaker at the Midwest Conference of musicians' associations, held April 3 and 4. While here he conferred with members of Local No. 34, Kansas City Musicians' Association. He also visited St. Louis and Cincinnati before returning to New York headquarters.

RKO "Theatre of the Air" Is Discontinued After 3 Years

The RKO "Theatre of the Air," radio hour of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, broadcast its final program on Friday evening, April 8, over WEAF and a National Broadcasting Company network.

The program has been discontinued after three years of regular weekly programs, during which numerous vaudeville and film stars were featured. Miss Fanny Hurst, author of "Symphony of Six Million," spoke at the final broadcast.

Bowes Signs Baritone for Air

Tom McLaughlin, 22-year-old baritone, has been added to the Major Bowes Capitol theatre radio program as featured artist over the NBC network.

STAGE SHOWS

Baltimore Keith

Week ending April 2

The program opened with Vaughn De Leath singing from the wings. She was discovered before the microphone in the center of the stage with a piano and man pianist. She offered a cycle of songs including "I Love the Rain," "I Don't Know Why I Love You But I Do," "Good Night Sweetheart," "Pale Moon Shining," "Carolina Moon," with whistling like Downey, then other songs in the style of Bing Crosby, Kate Smith, and so on. She gave a medley of songs as an encore.

Next came Murray and Dexter, with comedy dialogue, songs and hokum, but slow moving. Russ Columbo followed with a cycle of songs before a microphone, assisted by Con Conrad at the piano for some numbers and pit orchestra for others. His songs included "I Can't Forget the Night I Met You," "I'm Sorry, Dear," "The Song Is Ended," "All of Me," "Time On My Hands." For encore he did a violin solo. His stage personality is cold.

Detroit Hollywood

Week (split) ending April 6

Eddie Loughton introduced Bobbie Brooke, soprano, as the "California Nightingale." She wound a petulant voice about "Sweethearts," from Maytime; "Indian Love Call," from Rose Marie, and "My Hero," from the Chocolate Soldier. The Merrymakers, Hollywood stage orchestra, followed with "Stop the Moon." Interpolations by voice, trombone, violin, piano and clarinet and monkey motions by Eddie Loughton helped to put this number over. Dick Henderson, billed as the international comedian, breezed through a Scotch monologue, passing up the heavy Lauder accent. He burlesqued a couple of popular songs, including "Tiptoe Through the Tulips," and handed out Limey music hall and pub stories. The house went strong for Henderson.

Betty Jane Cooper and the Lathrop Brothers was the class act of this bill. Betty Jane is a fair acrobatic dancer. The act opens with two of the Lathrop Brothers on the stage starting to sing "Sweet and Lovely." Betty Jane interrupts the song and declares that she was sent on the stage to sing a song the name of which she has forgotten. She tries several and with each trial removes an article of clothing—old burly stuff. She finally gets into a heavy tap. One of the Lathrop Brothers does what appears to be a difficult jumping split, landing with great force on the stage. The other two, paired, go through a strutting style of tap that needs no apologies.

Portland Fox Paramount

Week ending April 7

Arthur (Pat) West, with his 225 pounds, returned to Portland as master of ceremonies with Fanchon & Marco's "Gobs of Joy in Bermuda."

The snappy stage show opened with a blues song, enhanced by the graceful ensemble of sunkist beauties and a group of youthful funsters. The "Beautiful Lady" chorus was well costumed and the jovial Pat West, with his diminutive donkey drawing a dog cart, were at all times in front and center.

Lee and Port proved to be exceptional comedy dancers. Padro put over a sheaf of card tricks in an expert manner.

Elmer Herling, the singing sailor, has a remarkable voice and used it admirably in selected song numbers. Even "Pat" himself put on a song parody to good advantage.

Rose Marie Carter and Myrna Modie complete a strong stage cast.

Del Milne and his Paramountiers provided the instrumental music.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending April 6

Carmine di Giovanni scores again in his fourth successive week at the Saenger. This week the Metropolitan grand opera tenor sings from "Rigoletto" during the orchestra overture by Lou Forbes and the grand orchestra, a clever and interesting musical melange this week. Charlotte Murrie is also featured with this group. Herbie offers his last songfest before finishing an engagement at the Saenger that has lasted over two years.

San Antonio Sadler's

Half week ending April 9

The concert orchestra under the direction of Eddie See started off the three new vaudeville acts which were highly entertaining as well as talented.

Strongheart, the canine of motion pictures, was put through some clever and fancy tricks by Ruton, the master dog trainer.

Roscoe (Nig) Allen, dressed as the old-time parson, came out with some comic dialogue and songs of a revival nature that made a decided hit with the tent show auditors.

The two Ciska Sisters were on next and did two tap dance turns that went over great. These pretty girls are only amateurs but they know their steps.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY!

The new firm of Keit-Engel, Inc., is certainly the talk of the whole music industry. . . . Joe Keit, formerly head of Remick's, now has the controlling share of the new firm, with Harry Engel and Harry Link the other partners. . . . Link, formerly of Santly Bros., enjoys one of the finest reputations in the professional field and has just become a partner in the new firm. . . . Some of America's foremost song writers are represented in the firm's new catalogue, headed with the following songs. . . . "When Lights Are Soft and Low," by Arthur Freed and Peter Tinturin; "Roses Are Red, Violets Are Blue," by Sydney Clare, Charlie Tobias and Vincent Rose; "Every Little Bit of Me," by Al Bryan, Joe Young and George W. Meyer; "There's Romance in the Air," by Joe Young, Carmen Lombardo and George W. Meyer; and "One More Night in Your Arms," by Arthur Jarrett and Mickey Mickel. . . . I might mention here that any one who missed the formal opening of this firm missed one of the grandest parties in the past two years. . . . Keit and the two "Harrys" did their darndest to make every one feel the good old days were back again, and did they succeed? . . . Well, I'm tellin' you. . . .

Potatoes are cheaper, etc., and Lou Breese has been playing that song with a lot of other stuff about depression and love, etc., that song writers turn out. . . . And so it was recently announced that the big shot orchestra leader of the Minneapolis Minnesota theatre will be married in June. . . . The exact date hasn't been set; it probably depends on the price of potatoes; . . . but the young lady has been selected and she is Miss Capitola Howe, little blonde. Nothing is said about her being good looking, but she is a model, so we'll take that for granted. . . . Good luck, Lou. . . .

There is another romance in the music business, that of Lucille Tyson and Abe Glaser. . . . Lucille has been with Shapiro, Bernstein for the past eight years and Glaser is the manager of the "ork" department of Con Conrad. . . . It was while he was working for Shapiro, Bernstein that the romance budded and bloomed into love . . . you funny thing (plug). . . .

ORGAN SOLOS

LARRY McCANN (Seattle Fox-Paramount) is an organist who is making himself very popular not only with the regular patrons of this house but with the many students of the nearby University of Washington. For Homecoming week, Larry incorporated in his solo all the college songs dear to the hearts of the students. The organ was appropriately draped with U. of W. blankets and he wore a yell king sweater. The usual songs, such as "Boola Boola," "Bow Down to Washington," "Collegiate," "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," "Washington Fight Songs," were sung by the audience and Larry offered for his finale his own singing of "Betty Co-Ed."

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) titled his group "April Fool." An inverted slide and a song without words chiefly characterize the April fool angle. "Call Me Darling" and "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" are first played straight, and then parodied as they would be after a year of marriage. The other number on the program is "Shine On, Harvest Moon."

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) is offering his community singing songs in groups of twos and threes now and, though it is just another way of putting on tunes, this one seems to agree with the patrons. There being no stop between numbers, the audiences naturally get into the spirit better and sing even more lustily than before. Bernie is still greeting them with his own inimitable salute and the RKO theme song and this reviewer has yet to catch a solo when Bernie doesn't get a great reception when his name is flashed on the screen. Tunes, featured this week, are "Carolina Moon," "Carolina's Calling Me," "Cut Down the Old Pine Tree," special on "Apple Tree" and "Sycamore Tree." Bernie closed this interesting solo with his own edition of the North Shore Daily Journal, and gave them the current news and local gossip to the tune, "Spend an Evening in Carolina," and, as usual, received a very fine hand.

LESTER HUFF (Indianapolis Indiana) presents "Old Fashioned Movies." After showing a group of old-time slides, the projectionists turn on a sequence from one of the Paramount Screen Souvenirs, "The Curse of An Aching Heart." The singer, Thurston Spengler, in comic makeup starts singing "The Curse of An Aching Heart." Just then the ushers start down the aisles calling peanuts and popcorn. This brings one of the biggest laughs that any organ program has received in some time here.

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Astoria Triboro) presented a solo recently in which he told the audience that the songs he had chosen would make a good film scenario and form the plot for a picture. Clever dialogue and gags afforded this organist an opportunity to build up a continuity for his usual community song-fest that worked up into a most entertaining presentation. Songs used were: "Kiss by Kiss," "Love You Funny Thing," "One of Us Was Wrong," "Can't We Talk It Over," and "Just Friends." A clever comedy angle was used for the closing number. It was the song "Rhymes," with words missing and to be filled in by the audience. A goodly amount of applause was given this popular organist.

OVERTURES

YASHA BUNCHUK (New York Capitol), conductor of the Capitol Grand Orchestra, has this week compiled an overture of selections of Irving Berlin melodies with special arrangements by Harold Sturr, of the Capitol music staff. The tunes included are "Say It with Music," "He's a Devil," "All Alone," "Because I Love You," "Blue Skies," "How About Me," "Puttin' on the Ritz," "Some Sunny Day" and "Soft Lights and Sweet Music." Bunchuk and his aggregation of versatile musicians continues to be an outstanding feature of this Broadway house.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Grand Orchestra offered "Tender Interludes," made up of selections from the works of Victor Herbert. The arrangement was a new one and proved especially pleasing, many of the selections being ones seldom heard. The finale was especially well received, the organ accompaniment assisting in making it unusually impressive. Joaquin Garay sang George Gershwin's "Of Thee I Sing" in his effective manner.

HAROLD RAMSEY (Dallas Palace) and his Modern Rhythm Band even outdid themselves over Ramsey's opening of his engagement. Aided and abetted by an enormous bunny on the stage curtain for atmosphere the orchestra gave an arrangement of Rubinstein's "Kamenoi-Ostrow" with the addition of a background of organ music by Raymond La Pere. The rhythm numbers of the pretentious program began with "Music in My Fingers" and swung smoothly into "When We're Alone," which featured a clarinet trio. Messrs. Sims, Hancock and Crites gave the audience "You're the One" while a brass trio and the drums had their inning also. "You Try Somebody Else" with Pianist Pem Davenport soloing was followed by "One Hour With You." This is the second week of Ramsey's highly successful baton wielding and his popularity is attested by the fact that his part of the program has continued to stop the show this week as well as during practically every show in his initial week.

FRED SCHMITT (Denver Denver) and orchestra took the symphonic arrangement of "Home" and played it as several different master musicians would have played it. First they played the theme, then as Rachmaninoff might have directed, then as a minuet by Paderewski, as a Rhapsody in Blue by Gershwin; the violins predominated when played as Kreisler would have liked it, and at the end with a military effect as Sousa would have given it. While this orchestra maintained their usual high standard of music on this overture, it did not prove as popular as most of their offerings.

BENJAMIN KLASMER (Baltimore Hippodrome) directed his Hippolians through "Overture 1732-1932" which included a medley of well known patriotic songsof the United States. A special film was worked into the offering, scenes from the American Revolution and Washington's life, finishing with a large piece of wet clay being molded into a head, a likeness of the First President.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 124.—(A) Describe a simple wet battery cell. (B) What is the voltage of a simple wet battery cell? (C) How much amperage may be obtained from a simple wet battery cell? (D) For what use were batteries primarily intended? (E) Which is the primary and which the negative of a wet battery cell? (F) What is the comparative area of the copper and zinc of a wet battery cell?

Answer to Question No. 118

Bluebook School Question No. 118 was: "(A) What is the candle-power per square millimeter of the ordinary arc crater floor? (B) How may the total light-giving power of the crater floor of an ordinary arc be computed? (C) May the square millimeter light-giving power of a crater floor be appreciably decreased by using an oversized positive carbon?"

The number who "got by" on this one indicates some hard study and investigation on the part of a great many. This is made very apparent by comparing some of the answers received on the last two questions, with those on this one.

Those coming under the wire on 118 were Lester Borst, Evans and Rau, Frank Dudiak (who has again entered the school after an absence of something like two years), Barney Devieth, G. E. Doe, Bill Doe (and Another Doe, all of Chicago), Henry Edwards, Seymour Carroll, Pat O'Brien, George Thompson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, T. L. Danvol, Richard Singleton, Larry Tipton, William Broadbent, John Williams, Sam and Andrew Wells, Mike McGuire, Alonzo Zerach, F. G. Garrison, Tom L. Andrews, P. E. Garling, Tom Hazleton, Fred Tomlinson, John Wentworth, L. R. Dyker, Richard Felt, Dan Granby, Frank Lampton and John Gregg, James Devoy, Andrew Davis, H. D. Tyler, P. L. Toeping, N. D. Garling, John Ladd and Dave Morrison, R. L. Little and James Hughes, J. C. Harrington, Henry Sicmann, Frank Borker, A. Gibson and H. D. Moss, Richard Michaels, H. G. Tonlin, Dave Ladd, Tom Wignath, P. F. Daniels, Charles Tamper and George Baker, D. U. Talley, Dan Roxbury, Don Taberson, Alex Grey, Tom Foster and Frank Dalbey, Chick Peters, L. M. Davis and Robert Robey, Frank Oliver, William Bogert, S. May and George La Mont,, Robert Davis, J. L. Peters, Phent Davis, Don Garrison, D. L. Warren, Andy Rangor, Thomas C. McGruder, T. G. Graves, D. Goldberg, P. L. Davis, D. Samuels, Dave Bitdoll, H. T. Daniels, Frank Granger, Frank Borker, Dan L. Simmons, D. L. Graves, Dave Andrews, Will Peck, F. D. Roller, Samuel Dexter and Dave K. L. Knight, Jack Billings, S. Emmerson and T. D. Tuttle, Jim Mack and Henry Rann.

Good! Examination of the list discloses the fact that nearly all those who have been sending acceptable answers have made good on this one, plus quite a few whose answers have not, in the past, been good enough to be included. Again I have thought best to let various ones answer different sections of Question 118. First we will listen to D. U. Talley on Section A. He says:

"I have sent in answers regularly each week for eleven weeks, and each week it has been 'thumbs-down' for me. Guess I had better do some real work or quit the School —and I'm not a quitter, Brother Richardson, whatever else I may happen to be. I therefore looked up the candle-power matter in the Bluebook, and everything else I could get my hands on. Then I wrote one of the highest authorities I know of on carbon arcs. Out of all this I found the candle-power of projection arcs (straight arcs) is now set at approximately 160 per square mm; or a little above that figure if the arc be handled just right and the carbons free from excessive moisture."

A most excellent answer, and now we will listen to Frank Dudiak on Section B. He says:

"Let us assume the luminosity to be 160 c.p. per square mm. of crater area. We then have the algebraic formula: C is equal to area times 160, where C is equal to the total c.p. of the crater, A the square millimeter area of the crater, and 160 the c.p. per square millimeter of the crater floor. Assuming the crater to have an area of 100 square mm., substituting we have—

"C equals 100X160.

"C equals 16,000 candle power."

Correct, old friend. You may go up to the head of the class. And now as to Section C, we will listen first to Lester Borst, who puts it thus:

"All carbons, regardless of type of arc, reach their peak of efficiency at one position and at the maximum current the carbon will carry without overload. It then follows that operating a carbon below its maximum capacity will result in loss in efficiency just about in exact proportion to the decrease. The ordinary straight arc will not, however, be seriously affected if operated within 10 per cent of its maximum current capacity.

"But to get at the meat of this question, a straight arc having ⅝-inch positive, operating at 50 amperes, will deliver a measured candle-power of 50,000. [Assuming the arc to be properly adjusted and carbons of good quality and in good condition—F. H. R.] Substituting a ¾-inch positive for the ⅝-inch one, we shall find the total candle-power to have decreased to 47,000, which drop is due to the comparatively large, cool mass of carbon surrounding the crater, the size of which may not be appreciably decreased, but the temperature of its floor is.

"The greatest efficiency drop caused by the use of a too-large positive carbon, however, occurs with the high intensity arc, because of the great care used in establishing the correct diameter for any given flow."

I have printed this answer, though I cannot vouch as to the exactness of the figures supplied, nor is there time to consult the engineers as to the matter. May I ask the National Carbon Company arc department to tell us whether or no Brother Borst's "47,000 c.p." is correct?

With regard to Section C, Brothers Evans and Rau say:

"If an over-size positive carbon be used, the light-giving power of an ordinary straight arc is considerably diminished, because the increased bulk of carbon near the crater cannot be heated to the same temperature that the crater floor of the correct-sized carbon can. There is a relatively large mass of comparatively cool carbon lying close to the crater floor. It is only natural that this has a tendency to lower the temperature of the crater floor itself, thus reducing its candle-power per square millimeter and therefore the light-giving power of the crater as a whole."

Educational Takes Series of Six Shorts Based on Operas

Educational has acquired a series of six Operalogues, produced by the Kendall de Vally Operalogue Company in Los Angeles. A world-famous opera in condensed form is the basis of each number of the group. The shorts will concentrate upon the musical element in each case.

The first, "Milady's Escapade," based on "Martha," has already been completed. Howard Higgin directed an operatic cast composed of Wynne Davis, Willow Wray, Ivan Edwardes, Jack Howell, John Lince, C. Van der Belen, and a large chorus.

Pathe News Has Department To Make Industrial Films

A new commercial department has been organized by Pathe News to engage in the making of business and industrial pictures. The department, it is said, will specialize in such subjects as pictorial courses in salesmanship, department store films, political assignments in association with a motorized truck company, and social and personal assignments. Both standard and 16 mm. sound on film will be available to accounts; RCA Photophone equipment to be used exclusively. Frederic Ullman, formerly of the Pathe News editorial department, is in charge of the newly organized department.

Approves Trade Name

The Federal Trade Commission has vindicated the Sanford Mills and their selling agents, L. C. Chase & Company, in use of the trade name "Leatherwove," used chiefly as a trim on theatre seats.

Rudulph Play to Be Staged

A new play entitled "Snooty," written by Gerald K. Rudulph, former newspaper and magazine editor and for the past three years director of publicity of RCA Photophone, will be presented by the National Players at Washington during the coming stock season. Clifford Brooke will again be associated with Steve Cochran and his National Players. According to present plans, "Snooty" will be given a Broadway production next fall.

General Play Company is representing the author.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it... lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

IT PAYS TO PROMOTE!

Here's another example of M-G-M's helpful service to theatres. We urge you to get behind "NIGHT COURT" just as we urged you to promote "Tarzan, The Ape Man." Here's how the State Theatre in Boston promoted "Night Court" to record business!

A FEW of many things that got THE DOUGH in Boston!

(You can do it, too!)

1. Thrilling trailer that told them about "Night Court" a week in advance!
2. House-front decked out with valance.
3. Enlarged thrill-ad No. 5 outside theatre.
4. Used extra ad space. Note selling campaign on this page.
5. Street car dash cards. Window cards.
6. Furnished 66 country papers with publicity.
7. Special ad run by paper free following Mark Hellinger's daily syndicated column.
8. Newspaper contest: "What Would You Do If You Were Judge?"
9. Promoted 40-piece band for opening night.
10. Tie-up with local dictaphone company.
11. Radio publicity on angles of picture affecting local public.
12. Lux tie-up with 1-sheet posters of Anita Page endorsement.
13. Posters, snipes covered town.
14. Fire siren on advertising truck.
15. Monster balloon and 12-foot banner illuminated.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 107, No. 4 April 23, 1932

THE CURSE OF THE WORD

THAT diligent and whimsical gentleman, "Observer," who writes the pungent paragraphs of Page One of the newly constituted "Hollywood Herald," presents in the last issue a paragraph reflecting a movement of vast importance, if it interprets the situation aright. In fact, it promises the return of the motion picture to the picture screen, in these words:

> Three recent pictures indicate distinct development of new styles in sound picture treatment. In "This Is the Night" (Paramount), "Symphony of Six Million" (RKO) and "The Trial of Vivienne Ware" (Fox), there is a combination of camera mobility in story telling with the use of background music to further enhance dramatic values, which is worthy of serious study. Incidentally, it is interesting to note that directors of all three pictures are veterans of the silent days: Frank Tuttle, Gregory La Cava, William K. Howard.

Now that will be something. If we may have motion pictures along with the words and music, the consuming public will be delighted and perhaps persuaded to pay for them.

Talk has been permitted to do the motion picture vastly more damage than the present surveys of the sound revolution have indicated. With large audiences the motion picture has come near to talking itself right out of a job.

Words are too smart.

Something of the condition is reflected in a few lines from a recent letter to the editor, written by Mr. H. E. Jameyson of Fox West Coast Theatres in Kansas City, in the course of which he remarked:

> "We need more effortless entertainment and less of the type that makes intellectual and cultural demands on our patrons."

Mr. Jameyson is in a perfect position to observe, in the operation of mass audience theatres, and with the background of an experiment in the "little theatre," for the intellectuals, behind him. His story is, in equivalent terms, that of every exhibitor in the country outside a few population centers.

Now, as we were saying, it is the word that is at fault in sound pictures. Sounds, especially music, can be and often are emotional. They do not necessarily carry much thought content, no matter what musicians may contend about their art. But words differ from sounds, in that they are abstractions and abbreviations for ideas, concepts, ratiocinations and all that sort of thing. Words are nothing to bring between an audience and its process of taking its predigested pleasure through the eye and ear. Too many words can ruin any amusement. There is, beside the general intellectual handicap of the word, the inescapable fact that the word is limited in its meaning and content to groups, cliques, sections and locales. There are just a few world-wide nouns, a few fairly international adjectives and positively no universal verbs. Now it chances that verbs are the only words with any action, go or velocity in them.

It is more than apparent that the motion picture, to continue and maintain its wide acceptance, must either vastly reduce its word content or must cover the same market with a larger array of diversified and specialized but less costly product for smaller audience units, the many minorities which compose the whole. This is precisely what has happened in the industry of the printed word.

Between the printed word and the screen is one tremendous difference. The printed word started with the classes and worked downward into the masses. The motion picture is now struggling with something of a reversal of that process, and temporarily suffers some loss of ground with the masses.

No one maker of pictures will do much about this, but by the inexorable processes which operate among the arts, just as truly as they do in organic life, the evolutions indicated will take place. The motion picture industry, which ever concerns itself so much with practice and so very little with analysis, principle and theory, will have to arrive at the end result by the costly process of cut-and-try. Meanwhile, the immediate commercial indication is for more background music, fewer words and shorter, simpler ones, with all the pictorial glamour and action in between that the camera can achieve.

ROMANTIC ENGINEERING

TUESDAY morning at 7:30 o'clock Governor Ely of Massachusetts stepped up before a microphone and fired off a Revolutionary musket used at Lexington that morning of the battle 157 years ago when in the words of Emerson the embattled farmer "fired the shot heard around the world." With the technical connivance of the sound experts of Schenectady, the same gentlemen who shared in bringing sound into the motion picture, the old musket's last word was radioed around the world. The first shot started something, the last one has resulted, so far as we can note, only in some press items. It would have seemed fairer, and even better publicity practice, to have handed the musket at Schenectady to William Hale Thompson of Chicago, who has spent a lot of time shooting off in that direction.

VIVE LA FAN!

DELIGHTFUL encouragement for the future of this industry is afforded by the evidences of the Broadway fan stampede at the opening of "Grand Hotel" the other night. The milling mob was not there because of the picture at all. It was pure demonstration of the continued potency of personality and the lure of those glamorous persons, the stars. The appreciation of a story, a play, a picture entails some slight mental effort, the possible exercise of intelligence, but the worshipful adoration of a screen personality operates on blind impulse, which is charmingly automatic, instinctive—and profitable to the purveyors.

Eluding McCarthy In Far Tahiti

GEORGE Bowles, master showman and bearer of glamorous tradition, has at last eluded and escaped from Jeff McCarthy and his wiles of thralldom in the service of the motion picture.

Three times Mr. Bowles has gone deep into retirement, forsaking the Great White Way forever, and three times Mr. McCarthy has lured him back. Now the persistent showman has quit, forever, maybe.

Bowles has gone to the end of the world to do it, and within certain civilized limits he has, as they say in the vernacular of beche de mere, gone fa' Tahiti.

The story of it all transpired just this week, with the arrival of a letter from Mr. Bowles to The Quill, official organ of the Theatrical Press Representatives of America, Inc.

Some time, every man has had his day dream of retiring from the moil of civilization to the idyllic South Seas, where emerald waters break in showers of pearl on the gleaming palm-rimmed beaches under azure skies—where cocoanuts and fish and yams abound, where dancing maidens greet the white man in bevies, wearing the tiare blossom over the left ear in the Tahitian sign meaning "Welcome, Stranger."

Bowles has made the dream come true.

At that late afternoon hour when Papeete bestirs itself and gathers on the hotel verandas to sip vermouth cassis, Bowles, in his immaculate white ducks, strolls over to the Blue Lagoon and sits in the cool shade, reflecting on the gorgeous calm that has come into his life, the while making whimsical grimaces at the harbor front where the ships come in with mail from the States, bearing the plaints and woes of his old coworkers of Broadway.

Bowles, one of the best known showmen of New York, took his rise in the world with Barnum & Bailey's circus and arrived presently in the legitimate production field of Broadway.

Seeks Happiness, But Alas!

With due concentration on his life plan, Bowles presently made good on the ambition of most of the Broadwayites, circus men and vaudevillians of the Great White Way. He had Enough, and so he quit and went literally and joyously up to Westport, Conn., and established a model poultry farm. He was happy and well and content, when along came "The Birth of a Nation," upsetting the show world in general and J. J. McCarthy in particular. McCarthy drafted Bowles, who chaperoned Mr. Griffith's great picture through its ordeals of censorship and ultimate showing in Chicago, and in time took it to the Antipodes, with a long run in Australia.

Again, having profited neatly, Mr. Bowles fled the wiles of Broadway and sailed for France. He was, and is, a worshipper of Stevenson, so he sought out a retreat in Barbizon, scene of "Tales of the Forest," which was to be home forever.

Then came "Broken Blossoms" and Bowles had made the mistake of leaving his address with McCarthy. There was another round of the road. After the "Broken Blossoms" run, Bowles said his last farewells again and sailed—this time for a remote village in the south of France. There he would sit in the sunshine until the end of a contented life.

Read It and Weep

But along came "The Big Parade" and that blandishing McCarthy again! Besides the franc had fallen. Bowles fell again, and again came to Brodway and "the road." He replaced his crumbling francs with American dollars and sailed away again.

This time Bowles is not to be interrupted. He plans to stay nowhere, so that nothing can mar his plans. He is off on the trail of Stevenson again, deep in the South Seas, pausing just now in Tahiti. He plans, when he thinks the end of the long, long trail is near, to spend the last days at Apia in Samoa, where Stevenson sleeps on the mountain top.

All the memories of this yarn were awakened the other day when the busy little "Quill" came along containing the letter from Bowles. It is in the words of a man who has found what he is looking for, with maybe just a grin at the bitter Broadway of today, tossed in. He writes:

> Paea, Tahiti (Oceanie).—This is by way of an answer to old friends who have written via the recent boats. Letters arrive monthly and I'll say there's nothing like being on the ground if one is after information.
> Helen Worden had a dream when she wrote her interesting story in the N. Y. World-Teley about "community life" in Papeete. She must have meant "The Blue Lagoon Hotel." This very excellent hostelry, where the TPROA girls, Arlene de Haas and Katharine Zimmerman, stopped when here, is conducted by my good friend, Mr. John Pitcairn. There is a central dining hall, built over the lagoon, with a great roof garden overlooking the sea, a charming view of the mountains, Mt. Diademe in full profile. There are many little bungalows where hotel guests live, coming and going by the different boats. But it is in no sense a settlement.
> Here's a Blue Lagoon menu card dated last Monday, including the works from Tahitian Raw Fish with Cocoanut sauce to Pappyra Poi and coffee at 25 frs. per plate ($1). I dined there the other night with my "vahine." (Please get it straight—"vahine" means woman, not "native," nor native butler).
> A man speaks of his "vahine" here as a Frenchman does of "his femme." It means the same. Might be his wife, his mistress or just a girl friend. No white man in Tahiti without a vahine.
> Several hotels of the Blue Lagoon type on the island, guests having their little cottages with electricity, baths, toilets and all modern conveniences. They dine in the center building, where there is a restaurant, a lounge, library and verandas over the sea.
> You see, we are quite civilized. Tahiti is no savage South Sea island, but a lovely spot with all the luxuries of tropic life—if you have the price. Seven hundred automobiles and only one road around the island after leaving Papeete.
> While it is possible to live here for almost nothing, a life of this sort means isolation in the unfrequented parts of the island. If one must live "native" he must earn his food somehow—climb the trees for his fruit, cultivate the soil for his taro and potatoes, penetrate the mountains for his wild bananas and oranges, and brave the surf of the outer reef for his fish.
> Perhaps he can get a surplus to sell as natives do for a little money to buy bread, coffee, sugar, pepper, salt and tobacco. Clothes and fuel cost practically nothing, but there are no jobs for foreign white men.
> As French is the language of Papeete and Tahitian the speech of the island, one is at a serious disadvantage without a knowledge of one or both.
> Fellows contemplating coming here should understand there is no chance for getting work whatever. No one should come without a little capital to secure a home and a sure income of about $50 a month. On this he can live decently in a quiet part of the island not yet penetrated by "rich Americans." If he wants to live indecently, it will cost a lot more.
> The hard luck stories from Broadway and the American theatre are most distressing. They make me thank God that I am out of it for good.

Mr. Bowles is out of it for good—maybe—unless Jeff McCarthy gets him again.

KENT ELECTED FOX FILM PRESIDENT; TINKER NAMED CHAIRMAN OF BOARD

Stockholders Re-elect Eleven Directors and Approve Plan To Reduce Stated Value of Capital Stock to 12 Millions

W. C. Michel Executive Vice-President; Changes Most Sweeping Since Reorganization of Board One Year Ago

Sidney R. Kent was elevated to the presidency of the Fox Film Corporation by the board of directors at a meeting in New York on Tuesday afternoon. Following the annual meeting of stockholders, at which 11 out of 12 directors were re-elected and at which approval was made of a plan to reduce stated value of capital stock, the Fox directorate met in special session for organization purposes and also elected Edward R. Tinker chairman to succeed Harley L. Clarke, who asked to be relieved of the duties of that office although he continues as a board member.

Kent assumed the presidency seven months ahead of schedule. The terms of his deal with the Chase bankers and with Tinker specified December 1, next, as the date when he would succeed Tinker, but the manner in which Kent first tackled the job at Fox and his method of operating since then so impressed the bankers and Tinker that they decided within recent days to make the change at once. Tinker's Fox contract with Chase is for one year, expiring December 1. When he took over the reins for the bankers late last year Tinker agreed to remain with Fox at least one year although he did not say he would not continue after that time.

General Management to Kent

The move by which Kent replaced Tinker in the presidential post, less than one month after Kent joined the company and three months following his sudden resignation from Paramount Publix, will enable Tinker as board chairman to concentrate chiefly on activities concerning the financial structure of the various Fox interests, while it gives to Kent full title to the general management of one of the industry's important companies, with complete authority over production and distribution. Operation of Fox Theatres, comprising some 500-odd houses, is vested in the Skouras Brothers, who will report to Kent only on important problems. In announcing the action of the board, Tinker said:

> "The election of Mr. Kent to the presidency of the Fox Film Corporation is a recognition of his ability as an executive and of his position as a leader in the industry. It is in keeping with plans formulated for the future of the company some months ago. It is the best possible assurance of continued improvement in the product of the company and of its restoration to a position of prosperity."

Earlier on Tuesday, stockholders reelected 11 directors: Winthrop W. Aldrich, David K. E. Bruce, Matthew C. Brush, Harley L. Clarke, Philip R. Clarke, Samuel W. Fordyce, Charles W. Higley, George M. Moffett, Edward R. Tinker, Cornelius Vanderbilt and Frank O. Watts. Stockholders elected Kent a board member succeeding Winfield Sheehan, who later was re-elected to the vice presidency. Sheehan is on an extended leave of absence, scheduled to terminate on June 9.

Advancement of Tinker to board chairman and of Kent from executive vice president to the presidency was immediately followed by the elevation of W. C. Michel from a vice presidential post to that of executive vice-president. The complete executive personnel of the Fox Film Corporation:

Chairman of the Board—Edward R. Tinker.
President—Sidney R. Kent.
Executive vice-president—W. C. Michel.
Vice-president—Winfield Sheehan.
Vice-president—James R. Grainger.
Vice-president—Richard A. Rowland.
Vice-president and Treasurer—C. E. Richardson.
Vice-president—Leonard A. Woolams.
Vice-president—Glenn Griswold.
Secretary—H. G. Fahlbusch.
Comptroller—Sydney Towell.
Assistant treasurer—W. S. Bell.
Assistant secretary—Felix Jenkins.
Assistant secretary—J. H. Lang.

Revision of the corporation's top executive line will not be followed by any radical changes in policy, according to a spokesman for the corporation, nor does the management contemplate at the moment any further changes of the executive roster. The changes made by the company this week were the most sweeping since the reorganization of the board a year ago. They are one of the final changes of many made over a period of several months.

Stockholders took action on the proposed change in the company's financial structure when they approved a plan to reduce the stated value of capital stock from $90,780,000 to $12,628,300. The proposal was made and action taken on it in order to enable the company to write some of its investments down to a nominal figure and to set up adequate reserves for revaluation of other assets. Investments in the stock of Fox-Theatres Corporation, Fox Chicago Theatres Company and in the equipment of its Kodo-Chrome Laboratories will thereby be written down to $1, and in addition, reserves will be increased from $2,233,095 to $40,030,525.

At the stockholders meeting, the voice of Jacob Conn, an exhibitor of Providence, was heard in protest against the balloting which resulted in the election of directors. Conn is a familiar figure in minority stockholders' defensives having participated loudly and widely in the fight of the minority holders of Pathe Exchange, Inc. which last year sought to dislodge the deal by which the Radio interests purchased assets of Pathe and later merged them with Radio Pictures. On Tuesday of this week his battle cry had to do with the policy of Fox with regards the poster renting situation and, along with some Class A holders, he claimed the election of directors was illegal because it was controlled by the voting trustees, which include Albert H. Wiggin, Frank O. Watts and Harley L. Clarke, and because of this alleged illegality, Conn threatened to speak to the government about it. The basis of this protest is supposed to hinge around the company's by-laws by which Class A stockholders have the right to elect nine directors out of 12 after the corporation fails to pay four quarterly dividends of $1. Formation of a stockholders' committee to oppose the election was threatened.

Conn voiced a word of praise for Sidney Kent, calling him "the greatest man in the industry," and at this point he related the fact that Kent "is not given enough authority in the Fox organization." Conn did not know that Kent would be elected president two hours later.

Edward R. Tinker, a New York banker, was elected president of Fox Film Corporation on November 17, 1931, succeeding Harley L. Clarke who was then named board chairman. Clarke relinquished the presidential post after less than 20 months following his purchase of a controlling interest from William Fox. Tinker's election culminated many weeks of negotiations and planning on the part of Clarke and Chase banking interests. Chase was brought into the Fox situation through Clarke's General Theatres Equipment Corporation and through financial support of Fox after Halsey, Stuart and Company withdrew from the situation. Because of his dominating influence in General Theatres, Clarke had been regarded as the controlling personality in Fox Film since William Fox sold out his interest.

Tinker Former Chase Executive

Since General Theatres Equipment, Inc., went into receivership, however, the Chase National Bank, as the holder of notes against bank loans to the company and to Fox, has been in actual control of the holding company which controls Fox Film. The fact that Clarke was not re-elected chairman this week was taken by Wall Street as formal recognition of the fact that he no longer controls the company and is retiring in favor of the noteholders and debenture holders.

Tinker, a former Chase executive, and president of the Interstate Equities Corporation, was selected in 1931 as being mutually satisfactory to Clarke and to the Chase concern. Immediately following his election, Tinker went on the Fox board as a Clarke nominee. He then set about to rehabilitate the various Fox corporations and to reorganize them economically along the lines which he had followed in other industries and in banking circles. The remoulding process reached a climax only a few weeks ago when Tinker traveled Westward and established a production cabinet at the studio in place of a one-man policy of operation, and when he brought Sidney Kent

BROADWAY STAGE FROM CAMERA EYE

Noted Critic and Essayist Points Out Screen Values of Current Stage Offerings

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

WE ARE NO LONGER CHILDREN

Theme: After many years have elapsed can we (she or him) recapture the glamour of the first blossomy It?

No, my children of Eros, says Leopold Marchand, in one of the finest comedy-dramas of the season, "We Are No Longer Children," adapted from the French by Ilka Chase and William B. Murray.

We open on a Parisian cafe. Roberte is waiting for her lover, Jean. He comes in, from the opera, and a little later enter the girl he is going to marry and her father. Roberte and Jean are living together. We are spilled into the web right at the start. The drama clinks from the curtain's rise.

Some years later, in the second act, Jean is happily, dully, restlessly married. In comes Roberte, also restlessly married to a big pipe and drain man. Jean and Roberte feel the upheaval of the first libido jamboree. They love-clinch when the guests are out the room. Sex is mightier than marriage.

Act three: They are in Dieppe. They have both broken away from the bosoms of their families. But it is now the next morning. They have not recaptured the old Wine of Venus. It is all drained off. They both get back to their families quickly before they are discovered. Jean can't even carry Roberte any longer!

There are other excellent bits: the fine scene where Lisa Duval (played by the lovely Spring Byington) comes to give Jean his dead father's love-letters to her. Jean thought his father a model bourgeois husband. This scene is one of the most poignant scenes of ironic beauty on the local stage.

The other is the characterization of Harold Vermilyea as the friend of Jean, who also has aged and changed from a gay bohemian into a stupid business man. Geoffrey Kerr and June Walker carried off the leads excellently. William A. Brady produced.

There is an exquisite flavor and a ringing sincerity about this play. It must be screened, and if done right it will register among the adult better pictures.

Action? Another old picture superstitition. Character and plot are action. Whatever moves your heart and brain is action. Good dialogue is action.

TOO TRUE TO BE GOOD

He belongs in pictures. He would make the greatest of all dialogue writers. He can make any one say anything—and say it with a snap and a sizzle that no dialogue writer has yet captured for the screen.

George Bernard Shaw, alias England's Other John Bull, alias the Emperor of Drama, alias the Man Who Even Snores Words, alias the Terra Cotta Voltaire, has got a new play on Broadway. It would make a corking picture if Saint Barney would only loosen up and let the boys out at Hollywood do it in their own way with Barney himself as the dialogue machine.

Shaw is, after all, as a dramatist, all spray and no fountain. Take away his dialogue and there is nothing at all. His brain is an epigram factory, and all his characters are just epigram-automats.

"Too True to Be Good," put on by the Theatre Guild, has a corking first act. A woman (the bird-headed and vocally thrilling Hope Williams) is in bed with measles. Her nurse (the cutting, the uproarious, the greatest lady clown on earth, Beatrice Lillie, is a crook. She lets in a high-class romantic burglar through the window. Instead of stealing the woman's pearls he preaches to her the beauties of the gay and open life of adventure. So he pretends to kidnap her, and all three make their getaway from rich respectability to the Open Road.

The next two acts are all dialogue—most of it musty and stale Shavanism—but there is a war going on back stage that is very funny, or could be made so in the films. Like Lubitsch's trick with Chevalier in "One Hour with You," Shaw's characters talk off and on to the audience. It's cute.

But the Old Man is tiresome; he's played out; there's no longer lead in his intellectual pencil. What he needs is Hollywood. Offer the Old Man five million cold for his whole product, no strings. And make some of the grandest pictures we've ever had. They'll be better than Shaw—with Don Marquis, for instance, handling the scripts.

Gad! That Scotch has a click in it, boys!

BLOOD-STREAM

Imagine "The Last Mile" laid at the bottom of a mine, with one scene outside of the mine. But something more powerful, more terrible, more gripping than "The Last Mile" because it is underground. It is a prison mine worked by convicts.

The atmosphere of the play is smouldering hate. Negroes and white crooks have it in for the brutal warden. There is something demonic, terrible—like war or Dante's Hell—from the rise of the curtain. The air quivers with expectancy. It held me tight all the way through to the frightful end. It is not propaganda. It's a deep cut into raw life.

James Knox, white, is engineering a getaway. He has murdered a convict pit-boss. He, hunted day and night, is hidden in various pockets in the mine. The negroes feed him surreptitiously. He has secreted a stick of dynamite. He and the warden die together in the depths after it goes off.

An unusual character in this play is Gypsy Kale, an insane negro convict who believes himself to be God (played finely bv Frank Wilson). He has stolen the stick of dynamite, which he believes is a magic wand with which he is going to blow up the earth. He dies with the warden and Knox. Frank Wilson as Gypsy and Cecil Holm as Knox were perfect. There's good comic relief in the negroes.

Here is all the stuff of a crash screen thriller. Frederick Schlick is the author. The settings were by Jo Mielziner. Produced by Sidney Harmon.

THE DECOY

Just a couple little angles make the show go 'round. And an angle is simply some exaggeration or jazzing of some commonplace situation. It is doing stunts on old themes. That's all we see on the stage and screen nowadays, with rare exceptions.

"The Decoy," by Harrison King, is a play that might have jelled into something if the author had only known the angle trick. But they'll angle it up, I think, pretty well when it gets to Hollywood. For there is certainly the making of a picture here.

Gloria Kerr hasn't the least suspicion that her father is the big Tin Box Boss of Belmont. Joe Wright, the editor of a newspaper that was out for circulation and righteousness, is gone up to the roof his noodle on her. When Gloria went out socially she wondered why people sidestepped her.

In the second act Gloria as secretary of a charity organization goes calling on a lady of uneasy virtue who was down with the pip, or something, in Noonan's Questionable Lodging House. And here is the beginning of the race toward the Big Scene. She learns from the Loose Dame all about her Tin Box father. Just as Papa is going to railroad Joe on a false charge of murder Gloria throws the harpoon into the old man, and the Tin Box gives up the ghost.

Clinch in the love-beam. O sola mia! It's good for the Harlem Circuit.

HOUSE-WARMING

Gilbert Emery of Hollywood and New York and Pauline Frederick of Hollywood and New York wrote and staged, respectively, this comedy of a red piano and how it finally caused a bride to burn down the old Connecticut home.

The piano was presented by a Terrible Aunt of the new-made husband. This aunt nearly wrecks the marriage by her ancient New England ways.

It is just another pediculous play; but as Mr. Emery and Miss Frederick engineered it, you know whereto it is bound. I'd like to see Marie Dressler and Jim Cagney in it.

KAHANE, AND FRANKLIN TO HAVE FREE REIN IN DIRECTION OF RKO

Aylesworth's Schedule, Dividing Time Between RKO and RCA, Expected to Limit Activity in RKO to General Supervision

Franklin Rounding Out Staff, To Be Headed by Cabinet of Five and Augmented by Divisional Directorate of Six

With Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and National Broadcasting Corp., scheduled to divide his time about equally between the two entertainment subsidiaries of RCA, the extent to which B. B. Kahane, president of Radio Pictures, and Harold B. Frank, president of Keith-Albee-Orpheum and Orpheum Circuit, will be permitted free rein in executive direction of RKO, became more apparent this week.

Aylesworth's schedule, established during his first week as president of both RKO and NBC, and likely to be adhered to indefinitely, has him devoting mornings to RKO affairs and the remainder of the day to NBC. The obvious restrictions imposed by this schedule, it is expected, will limit Aylesworth's participation in RKO affairs to general supervisory matters, with active direction of Radio Pictures and RKO theatres vested without limitations in Kahane and Franklin. The same restrictions on Aylesworth's activities, in the opinion of RKO executives, will prevent the widely discussed appointment of John Royal, vice president of NBC, to an important vaudeville post with RKO. Royal, who has had executive experience with Keith-Albee-Orpheum and is recognized as quite a showman, may now assume fuller responsibilities at NBC, similar to those evolving upon Kahane and Franklin at RKO.

"I would certainly like to have the benefit of Royal's ability and experience in the direction of RKO theatres," Franklin said. "However," he added, "Royal's duties at NBC are so numerous that I doubt whether he can be spared."

Franklin Rounding Out Staff

With the statement that he considered the character of manpower of greater importance than physical assets, Franklin this week began to round out his theatre executive staff, which will be headed by a home office cabinet of five and augmented by a divisional directorate of six. RKO theatre operations, he said, will be placed on an individual basis, with a maximum amount of freedom granted to division managers. In addition, he promised that there would be no wholesale shifts or changes in organization and that those required would be made from within the ranks, wherever possible.

With the appointment of Herschel Stuart, former operator of the Fox-Poli circuit and recently invited to take over management of the Roxy theatre, New York, which he declined, to a post in charge of RKO theatre field men, Franklin's cabinet of five was completed this week. Other members are: Joseph Plunkett, vice president and general manager of RKO; Phil Reisman, vice president in charge of film booking; Martin Beck, in charge of vaudeville bookings, and Robert F. Sisk, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation. Stuart's appointment is effective May 1.

Four of the six divisional theatre directors were named by Franklin this week. They are: Nate Blumberg, in charge of the New York theatre division; Asher Levy, Chicago division director; Cliff Work, Pacific Coast division, and Charles Koerner, Southern division. Directors of Middle West and New England divisions have not been appointed yet, but Harry McDonald is definitely being considered for the New England post.

Other appointments of the week included that of Robert Connolly, formerly with Florenz Ziegfeld's producing organization, to a new post in charge of talent selection and program planning for the Palace Theatre, New York, with the title of "impresario." Myron Robinson, former assistant to Kahane in the RKO legal department, has been placed in charge of the real estate department, and F. H. White, whom he succeeds now has charge of the corporation's tax and assessment matters.

Appointments still in abeyance but regarded as certain to materialize in the near future are those of Maurice Goodman, RKO counsel, to the post of general counsel vacated by Kahane, and J. J. McCarthy to the production post of liaison officer between independent unit producers and RKO. Definite plans for the distribution of a minimum of 15 unit productions by Radio Pictures during the coming season have already been approved.

Will Resume Theatre Broadcasts

E. M. Glucksman, former national director of theatres, ends his association with RKO this week with the decision to abolish the post he occupied.

Resumption of the weekly RKO "Theatre of the Air" broadcasts, probably at some time in the late summer or early fall, has been decided upon. S. L. Rothafel will be in charge of the broadcasts and will take active charge of plans for them on his return from a European trip beginning May 5.

Few changes in the executive personnel of Radio Pictures under Kahane's administration appear in prospect, the executive realignment in the production and distribution company having been completed prior to the change in RKO presidents which replaced Hiram S. Brown, now a member of the board of directors, with Aylesworth.

Ned Depinet continues as vice-president, in charge of distribution; David O. Selznick, studio and production chieftain; Lee Marcus, vice-president, serving as liaison executive between home office and studio; Frank O'Heron, vice-president, serving on studio business matters; and Jules Levy, general sales manager. The only appointment of consequence which appears in prospect in Kahane's jurisdiction is that of J. J. McCarthy to supervise arrangements for independent productions for Radio distribution, and this appointment remains in an indefinite stage, for the time being.

An effort will be made by Kahane to reduce the budget on Radio productions for the new season, it was reported this week, with a plan under consideration for holding costs to a $225,000 average, per picture. Kahane is now engaged in conferences on new season product which may be terminated within the next few days. Indications are that the company will have 54 pictures for distribution next season; 40 of which will be from its own studios and the remainder from independents.

The implied assurance of David Sarnoff, marked at a dinner in New York this week in honor of M. H. Aylesworth, that RCA was prepared to stand behind its subsidiary, RKO, to the limit, was responsible for a new spirit of enthusiasm in the RKO ranks. The assurance of Franklin that no wholesale changes were in prospect and that individual ability would be given every opportunity to show and prove itself in the theatre field, accounted for some more.

Calls Man-Power Big Factor

Franklin attributed most of the ills of the theatre to overseating and weakness of man-power. The solution of the first, he said, depends upon the willingness of large circuits to join in a cooperative move designed to reduce overseating, and the second requires every executive and subordinate to prove his worth.

"It is idle to maintain," Franklin said, "that the efficiency of the motion picture industry increased anything like the proportion in which theatres have been acquired. Right up to the eve of the depression circuits over-built, investing in brick, stone and mortar, instead of brains, in a desire to dominate the industry. This resulted in overseating in practically every community throughout the country. The problem is particularly acute inasmuch as there are not enough good pictures to go around.

"Construction co-operation among theatre circuit groups will, through realignments and changes of policy, gradually solve the problem of too many seats," he said.

"Those motion picture organizations that laid more stress on the character of their man-power, rather than on physical assets, have fared much better," Franklin continued. "Those who built more modestly and expanded more soundly are finding in present conditions greater opportunities for the future.

"I have operated many theatres," he said, "and whatever measure of success I have had arises from the fact that individuality has always been encouraged where found. These lines will be followed in my present association and all possible latitude allowed men possessing such qualities. Responsibility should be definitely placed, and when it is entrusted to the proper hands we have achieved good organization.

"Division managers of our circuits will operate almost as if they were the owners of the houses in their charge and it is my into the fold in charge of management, last month.

KENT PRESIDENT OF FOX

Reports that Kent would succeed Tinker as Fox president immediately followed Kent's acceptance of a contract to become chief operating executive of the company. A spokesman for the corporation said at that time that the Kent contract did not incorporate any written reference to his becoming president although it was revealed this week that a verbal agreement along these lines had been made. He did say, however, that it would be a "logical move" inasmuch as Tinker had been desirous of unburdening himself of many presidential duties in order to give more time to important financial matters.

Tinker has been engaged in financial work for more than 30 years and is a director of more than 35 banking, manufacturing, mercantile, railway and oil corporations. Several months elapsed before he made any drastic changes in the Fox scheme of operation. On June 10, a Chase-Tinker directorate was elected. This board still continues, with the exception of Sheehan, who was replaced this week by Kent. Its members all are prominent in banking and business affairs. David Bruce is a son-in-law of former secretary of the treasury Andrew Mellon and is a director of Union Pacific Railway. Matthew Brush is president of American International Corporation while Harley L. Clarke continues as executive of General Theatres Equipment and president of Utilities Power and Light Company. The Central Union Trust Company of Illinois is headed by Philip Clarke and the firm of Fordyce, Holliday and White, attorneys, has as its president Samuel Fordyce, also one of the Fox directors. Charles W. Higley is president of Hanover Fire Insurance Company, George K. Moffett is president of Corn Products Refining Company, and Frank O. Watts is board chairman of the First National Bank of St. Louis. Cornelius Vanderbilt, country gentleman and reputed to have large interests in railway and other large public utilities, is another Fox board member.

The 563 theatres now operated for Fox by Spyros and George Skouras will be operated by a cabinet of four under final organization plans completed and made effective with the return to New York of E. L. Alperson. George Skouras will operate in Greater New York, Charles Caballero will handle Central New York, L. J. Ludwig will handle New Jersey and Philadelphia and Charles Skouras will have charge of Fox West Coast and Fox Midwesco embracing 446 houses. Each executive will have under him numerous division managers.

An agreement is expected to be reached shortly in the efforts of the three committees working out a joint plan for seeking deposits of General Theatres Equipment debentures to further reorganization, according to Harry S. Durand, of the banking firm of Mackay & Company.

Durand was a member of the first committee formed to secure deposits from holders of $30,000,000 of six per cent debentures, on which interest was defaulted April 1. None of the three committees has obtained a majority as yet.

General Theatres Equipment Corp. has reported total income of $2,803,573 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1931, and net loss of $993,703 after expenses, taxes, interest, etc., but exclusive of $1,098,280 estimated loss due to trading in Class A stock of Fox Film Corporation and failure of brokerage house which was charged against operating surplus account.

Income account of General Theatres Equipment Corporation for 1931 follows: Dividends received, $2,650,572; interest received, $153,001; total income, $2,803,573; expenses, etc., $320,867; taxes and tax stamps, $139,851; interest, $3,032,364; amortization, etc., $304,194; net loss, $993,703.

Operating surplus account: Operating surplus January 1, 1931, $3,547,825; add: discount on $446,000 principal amount of ten-year 6% convertible gold debentures retired through sinking fund, $257,597, less: unamortized debt discount applicable to debentures retired, $39,680, leaving a balance of $217,917; total, $3,765,742; deduct: one quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on preferred stock, $710,397; estimated loss due to trading in Class A stock of Fox Film Corporation and failure of brokerage house, $1,098,281; to write down to a nominal value of $1 patents obtained through allowance for developments and experiments financed by Harley Clarke, $192,952; net loss for year 1931, $993,704; operating surplus December 31, 1931, $770,408.

Tinker returned to the home office in New York early in the week from a visit to Movietone City in California where he installed Leonard Woolams as financial administrator on the West Coast. Kent's first visit to the Fox production plant since he joined the company will be made within a few days. He is scheduled to leave New York Saturday, returning in about two weeks for conferences regarding the new selling season.

In the meantime, W. C. Michel arrived in Hollywood to take charge of the studio pending the recovery of Richard Rowland from a recent operation for appendicitis. McIntire has been handling executive matters at the studio, but it is understood he is about to retire. He arrived in Hollywood from New York this week to "settle up."

On Monday, William Atkinson took over his new duties as president of the Fox Theatres Corporation, which has new offices in the film building at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

Activities concerning the company's control of the Roxy theatre in New York came to a climax on Monday when Class A stockholders of the Roxy Theatres Corp. elected Harry G. Kosch an attorney, president. He succeeds Harley Clarke who along with S. R. Burns and W. C. Michel, retire from the Roxy directorate.

The theatre will be operated as a separate enterprise apart from Fox. The Class "A" stockholders elected seven directors to the board of 12. Elected were Kosch,, Richard F. Hoyt of Hayden Stone & Company; Frederick Pope, Francis L. Robbins, Jr., W. E. Chanler, Philip W. Russel and Saul E. Rogers, former general counsel for Fox.

The Roxy has been operated by Fox as the corporation's ace de luxe operation in New York ever since a controlling interest was bought in 1927 from S. L. Rothafel. The shift in control follows the fourth consecutive omission of the quarterly dividend, which gave to A stockholders the right to elect a majority of the board. Heretofore, common holders have elected a board majority.

guess they will feel their duties and obligations keenly. We will not attempt to direct their every move from New York. The New York organization will serve to guide operations, and to co-ordinate and inspire them, nothing further."

Reassuring the theatre personnel that no sweeping changes, other than from within the ranks, were in prospect, Franklin said:

"You are not to feel because of my entrance into this situation that there will be wholesale shifts and changes. There may be, of course, some realignment."

Striking the note of the new optimism in the RKO ranks, Franklin said:

"There is a feeling prevalent in RKO that the downswing has been arrested and the upper trend begun."

Sarnoff's implication of RCA support for RKO was assumed to include financial resources of the parent company should they be necessary, although this was not explicitly stated.

The parent electrical concerns new control the RKO board, with A. W. Robertson of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Gerard Swope and Owen D. Young of General Electric, and David Sarnoff of RCA, as members.

An unofficial advisory board to serve without titles will assist Aylesworth in RKO affairs, the board to be comprised of Hiram Brown, Kahane and Franklin.

Statements that the Boston office of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum vaudeville exchange, in charge of C. S. Breed, would be closed are incorrect, according to Martin Beck, director of vaudeville for RKO. The Boston office is now booking several theatres and will continue to serve these houses, it was said.

Changes in the story department of Radio Pictures, announced this week by Katharine Brown, scenario head, included one resignation and two additions. Islin Auster resigned to enter the play production field. Doris Halman, formerly with American Play Co. and the Fox scenario department, has been made assistant scenario editor at Radio, and Murdock Pemberton, play author and former art critic of The New Yorker, has been placed in charge of plays.

Announcement of a deal for one-half the Paramount product for the next five years, to be played in RKO New York houses, was made by Phil Reisman this week, RKO splitting Paramount product in New York with Loew's.

GOVERNMENT ASKS PURE ENGLISH BUT PUBLIC BOOS VARSITY ACCENT

Federation of British Industries and Trades Union Congress Demand Check on "Menace of Americanizing" by Films

By W. H. MOORING, London

The Rt. Hon. Walter Runciman, M. P., president of the Board of Trade, has consented to receive a deputation from the film group of the Federation of British Industries and the Trade Union Congress General Council, to have placed before him the views of these representative bodies on questions affecting the Government's policy on British film development.

In a memorandum prepared by these organizations and laid before the Board of Trade as preamble, it is pointed out that the full body of the Trade Union Congress and the Grand Council of the FBI are agreed that something should be done "to encourage and facilitate the production of good quality British films, not only at home but throughout Dominions and Colonies."

"Menace of Americanization"

The memorandum points out that, apart from the commercial prosperity of the British Film Industry itself, it is desired "to emphasize the menace of Americanization by means of the film."

"Even more important," it continues, "is the educational and cultural menace of this Americanization. We have nothing to say in disparagement of American speech, customs, and cultural standards: these are matters for the American people and they are entitled to their own tastes in these things. But we prefer for our own people what may be described as English speech, customs and cultural standards, and we believe that the peoples of the British Dominions hold the same opinion."

Allegations are made in the memorandum that certain American films have not merely boosted American products, but have decried British goods with a deliberate object of favoring competitive commodities of U.S.A. origin. No titles are quoted, which in the circumstances must be regretted.

Crystallizing its objects, the memorandum recommends that the Government take steps to provide:

(1) That every British quota film shall cost a minimum of £150 for each hundred feet length, exclusive of copyright fees for story and music, and recording charges.

(2) That the advisory committee appointed under the Films Act (Quota), 1927, shall be enlarged to include representatives of the FBI and the TUC and that it should be given power to make recommendations to the minister.

(3) That the Board of Trade, acting in collaboration with this committee, should have power to classify films into three categories:

(a) Films which fulfill all the requirements of the Quota law (British Quota Films;
(b) Films fulfilling all the conditions except as except as regards the minimum cost (British films, not eligible for Quota), and
(c) Foreign films.

4. The ineligible British film could in special circumstances be accepted as quota footage, after consideration by the advisory committee, in such cases as the committee might feel it were justified.

(5) The Films Act should be amended to provide that foreign as well as British scenarists may be employed on British quota films.

While in many respects this move on the part of the FBI and the Trade Unions will meet with the approval of those in the British cinema business, there is likely to be much opposition to the suggestion that British cinema goers desire English speech such as is common (and peculiar) to the British universities. It is this English which is most of all resented by the working classes in Britain, who make up a good 90 per cent of the total British box-office crowd.

"Raw Americanese" Not Appreciated

It is perfectly true that raw Americanese and crude American manners featured in many of the earlier talkies, and still appearing in a sprinkling of the less important ones, is not appreciated by the British people. But this memorandum fails to take into account the radical changes which Hollywood had made recently in regard to the purity of its English dialogue.

The fact is that British audiences, notably in the country, prefer the moderate speech reflected in most of the best of recent American pictures, to the affected effeminate tones which so often pass out of British studios as socalled patterns of pure English.

BRITISH CIRCUIT PROFITS MAKE INDEPENDENTS RESTIVE

The report and annual accounts of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., for the year ended January 31, 1932, show a net profit of £485,605 which is only £21,204 below the net earnings of the concern during the previous year.

Most independent theatres have dropped from 25 to 50 per cent during the past year, and they are already incensed at the rental advantages which are enjoyed by the circuits. They argue, not without sense, that if the circuits can obtain rental terms around about 25 per cent shares, all in, they, too, should be able to book on those terms. But the majority of independent theatres still pay from 5 to 10 per cent more than the large circuits. PCT are maintaining their dividend to shareholders at 15 per cent for the year. They are also putting $45,000 to general reserve, which now totals £335,000: are writing £83,000 down beside the item property depreciation, and are paying off debenture stock sinking fund to the tune of £21,253, in addition to passing on £120,572 to next year. This is £5,852 more to carry forward than last year.

MOROSCO OUT OF PARAMOUNT

Walter Morosco has broken with the Paramount British studio unit at Elstree, following differences with headquarters executives on the question of production costs. A new picture in the list for direction by Harry Lachman, director of several first-rate pictures for Paramount, must be limited to £12,000 cost. This means that no big name can be bought, and production must be sparing. Morosco said that if this represented a new policy he could not see the quality of the Paramount product being maintained at the standard set by the first half dozen pictures, and he walked out. The studio manager, D. Cunningham, also left.

Now S. E. Fitzgibbon takes over as production supervisor in Morosco's place. Hugh Perceval, assistant production manager from the start, and in charge of casting, remains.

Poster Operators Will Bid Exhibitors To Protest Session

Operators of independent poster exchanges will invite exhibitors from all over the country to attend a meeting in protest of distributors' action requiring the return of advertising accessories after their use, unless relief is forthcoming from the policy inaugurated by Fox and being considered by other distributors. The meeting probably would be held in New York in the early summer, in accordance with discussions held at the recent national poster exchange operators' meeting in Chicago, at which a defense organization was formulated by the poster men, known as the National Poster Service Association.

Nathan Burkan, George P. Aarons and another attorney have been retained to represent the new organization, and will also represent the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in the event the latter organization joins the protest move.

Fox is seeking formal understandings with heads of independent circuits on compliance with the company's accessories regulations. George Skouras, representing the Skouras operated theatres, is the only exhibitor to date who has agreed to comply in the matter of returning accessories to the company's exchanges.

Enforcement of the new regulations in the Des Moines territory, where a check-up revealed that two out of every three exhibitors were obtaining their advertising accessories from independent poster exchanges, probably will be delayed until the new selling season opens.

Columbus Exhibitors Turn Against Amateur Nights

Exhibitors of Columbus, Ohio, feel they have profited by the experience of their brother operators in promoting amateur nights, prize drawings, midnight previews, and similar ways and means designed to lure the potential patron, and have agreed not to participate in or become a party to such tactics in the future, in the hope that this "hands off" policy will eventually attract other exhibitors to follow suit.

CANADIAN FILM FEES BURDEN EXCHANGES

Provincial Licenses, Censorship Costs, Trailer Charges and Other Levies Run Up Bills; British Pictures at Small Rates

The privilege of doing business in Canada costs a pretty penny for the film exchanges by reason of the annual provincial licenses, censorship fees, trailer charges and other levies imposed by the various governments, apart from routine expenditures ordinarily encountered in the course of everyday operations.

Eight of the nine provinces, the exception being the tiny Prince Edward Island, have censorship boards and the examination fees range from $2 to $6 a reel, the highest being found in Ontario. The result is that an outlay of $144 is necessary for censors' fees if a six-reel feature is to be released in all provinces, the individual charges for censorship in the case of a six-reel picture being as follows: Ontario, $36; Quebec, $18; Alberta, $18; British Columbia, $18; New Brunswick, $15; Nova Scotia, $15; Manitoba, $12, and Saskatchewan, $12.

There is also a charge for the censoring of trailers in at least four of the provinces. Ontario demands $3 for a 500-foot trailer; Quebec, $2; British Columbia, $1.50 and Saskatchewan, 50 cents. Thus, $7 is added to the cost of a film if a trailer is used. Censorship of advertising material is added in several provinces; the fee in Ontario, for instance, is $1 a subject.

No Relation to Number of Houses

Film exchange licenses are issued by eight provinces on a yearly basis. A distributor operating across Canada must pay $1,860 for the eight licenses as follows: Ontario, $100; Quebec, $205; Manitoba, $255; Saskatchewan, $250; Alberta, $250; British Columbia, $300; New Brunswick, $250, and Nova Scotia, $250. Incidentally, there is no relation between the provincial fee and the number of theatres within the area concerned. Ontario charges $100 for a film exchange license, for instance, and Ontario has, by far, the greatest number of theatres in any province.

There is a further "nick" for the film distributor in the event that he decides to appeal the adverse decision of the censor board in three of the provinces. In Ontario an appeals costs $10 a reel, or $60 for a six-reel feature; in Quebec, the censors charge an extra $3 a reel for a second examination while an appeal in Alberta costs an additional $5 a reel—and the picture may be thrown out again.

The cost a reel for first viewing of a film by the censors in the respective provinces is as follows: Ontario, $6; Quebec, $3; Manitoba, $2; Saskatchewan, $2; Alberta, $3; British Columbia, $3; New Brunswick, $2.50, and Nova Scotia, $2.50.

Half Rate for British Films

In Ontario a distinction is made with respect to the charge for censorship in the case of British films which are examined for $3 instead of $6 as applied against all foreign films including those from the United States. Ontario also offers a half-price rate of $3 for a reel of silent film while British Columbia gives a cut rate of $1.50 a reel for silent pictures but these are now few and far between.

Quebec makes provision for a second appeal from the decision of the censor board but charges more for it. The first appeal here costs $3 a reel, but for the second appeal, which is really the third examination of a picture, the charge is $5 a reel. Thus, $68 can be spent for Quebec censorship on a 6-reel feature in the three tries if it is taken that far.

The total cost of first censorship of a 6-reel feature and its trailer across Canada and an appeal in three provinces runs to $259, as follows: Censorship, eight provinces, $144; 500-foot trailer, $7, and one appeal in Ontario, Quebec and Alberta, $108.

These are provincial government charges only. The Canadian distributor, of course, has to pay duty on the film when imported into the Dominion, this being collected by the federal government. On top of all fees, too, is the heavy bill for express charges in shipping prints to the different provinces before they are censored and released.

Canada has increased the excise tax on all imports into the Dominion from one to three per cent and on sales from four to six per cent, as a result of which the Canadian film distributors will be assessed an additional cost of $100,000 a year, it is estimated.

The increases were introduced into the budget of Ernest Rhoades, federal finance minister at Ottawa, and have become law, being in effect automatically with the introduction of the budget.

Eastern Pennsylvania MPTO Affiliates With the MPTOA

The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware has unanimously voted to affiliate with the MPTOA, national organization. Action was taken by 74 members present at what was called the best attended meeting of the organization.

The vote was taken following report of Lew Pizor, president, who attended the recent Washington convention. The organization voted also for continuation of the continuing committee handling adjustment of the MGM sales policy. The decision followed the report of David Barrist, who attended the New York meetings.

Asks Olsen & Johnson Scripts

Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of the Van Beuren Corporation, which produces shorts for RKO release, has asked the public to send in original manuscripts for a story to be screened with Olsen and Johnson, recently signed comedy team. No prizes are offered. Accepted scripts will be purchased.

Senate Unlikely To Act on Block Booking Measure

The short time remaining before the conclusion of the current session of Congress and the possibility of an appeal by the Federal Trade Commission from the New York decision in the Paramount case will prevent any action before the Senate on Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart's block booking bill.

At the same time, the senate will shortly embark upon consideration of the new revenue bill.

Strong argument for further increase in the admission tax exemption was laid before the Senate finance committee this week as that body prepared to close its hearings preparatory to the writing of a tax bill for submission to the Senate.

Indications are that the bill passed by the House of Representatives will not be the measure approved by the committee. More than two weeks of hearings on the various provisions of that bill showed conclusively that many of the taxes had been adopted hastily and without due consideration to the industries affected.

With the appearance before the committee last week of C. C. Pettijohn, the stage was set for a concerted plea for a 50-cent exemption. Witnesses scheduled to appear this week, including Burt New of the Hays organization, Sidney E. Samuelson of Newton, N. J., Abram F. Myers of Allied States and Representative Emanuel Celler of New York, carried on the argument outlined by Pettijohn, showing the difficult position in which exhibitors found themselves today and the impossibility of undertaking any further burden in the way of taxes, while the tax could not be passed along to the patron.

To increase the exemption from the 45 cents granted by the House to the 50 cents asked by the industry, the committee was told, would have but little effect upon the revenue. It would bring into the tax-exempt fold only a comparatively few houses, while, on the other hand, a 50-cent exemption would take care of all elements of the industry which are dependent upon low admissions for their business.

No other industry is as heavily taxed as amusements, it was pointed out. In the case of theatres, the tax is 10 per cent on the retail price; in the case of the industries selected for excise taxes, the levies range from 1 to 10 per cent of the manufacturers' price. Industries which are to be subjected to these manufacturers' taxes, it was contended, have testified that such levies will add to their depression, and there is no reason to believe that the situation would be different in the theatres, particularly if the new tax bill should increase industrial unemployment.

Indications are that the finance committee may substitute the Treasury proposals for the bill passed by the House with, of course, some changes. In a revision of those proposals, submitted this week by Secretary Mills, an exemption of 10 cents for admissions is again repeated, the revenue of $110,000,000 anticipated therefrom being the third largest item in the whole list of taxes.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

HONOR PARAMOUNT EXECUTIVE. Eastern exhibitors and distributors attending a luncheon at the Astor hotel in New York Tuesday, given in tribute to Milton Kusell upon his promotion from New York branch manager to district manager in the East for Paramount. At the speakers' table are shown Sidney Samuelson, Leon Rosenblatt, Al Lichtman, Joe Unger, Louis Nizer, Kusell, George Schaeffer, Phil Reisman, Charles C. Pettijohn, Charles L. O'Reilly and Gabriel Hess.

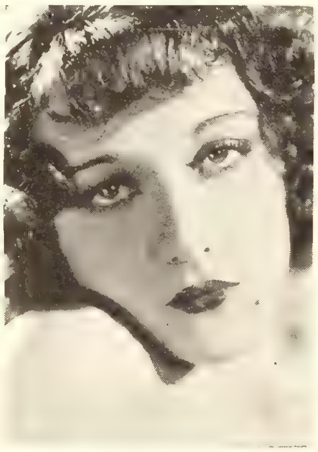
AT HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE. M-G-M executives—Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of promotion, and Harry Rapf—arriving at the Chinese theatre in Hollywood for the opening of M-G-M's "The Wet Parade," picturization of the Upton Sinclair book of the same name.

AT NEW YORK PREMIERE. Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, with Mrs. Aylesworth and party at the opening of RKO Radio's "Symphony of Six Million." Shown are Mrs. Aylesworth, Mrs. James Quirk, Mrs. Lee Olivell, Kent Cooper, Aylesworth, Olivell.

BALLET. Members of the dance group in the film opera, "Milady's Escapade," which is condensed version of the grand opera, "Martha." This production is the first of a series being made by Kendall-DeVally for Educational release.

VACATIONING. Sally Eiliers, Fox featured player, as she arrived in New York the other day for a two-week vacation, timing her visit with the principal showings of her latest picture, "Disorderly Conduct."

UNDER CONTRACT. (Below) June Clyde, who has been signed by Universal for a long term. Her first assignment under the agreement is to the cast of Universal's picturization of Fannie Hurst's "Back Street."



BANGS. A suggestion from Mae Madison for an interesting revival in a season of many innovations in milady's coiffure. This is a new study by Ference of the Warner Brothers player, whose latest role is in Edna Ferber's "So Big."

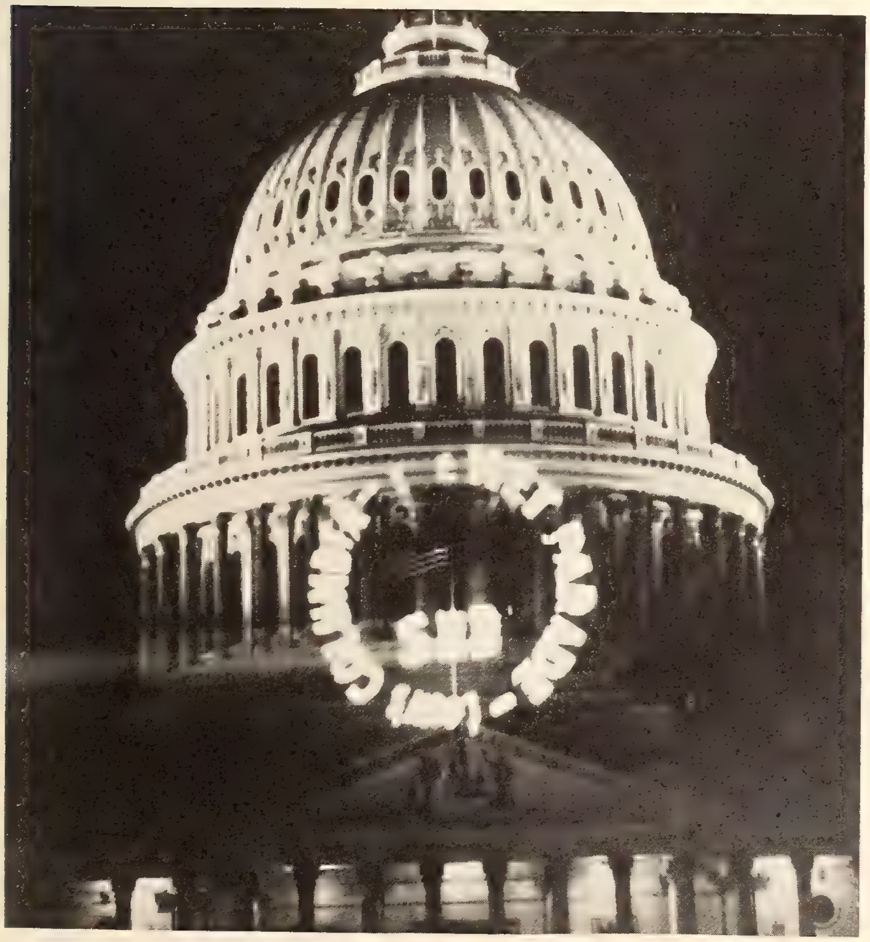
COUNTRYMEN. (Below) As George Arliss, himself not entirely an alienated son of Britain in spite of his long stage and screen career in America, played host to Lord and Lady Bing on the Warner Brothers lot. Arliss will summer in England.

CONTRAST. (Below) The blonde and the brunette united in the beauty of Joan Marsh, as emphasized in this new portrait of the M-G-M featured player. Her latest picture is "Are You Listening?"

SIGNED FOR WESTERNS. (Right) Rex Bell, born and bred a son of the West (and more recently become the husband of Clara Bow), who has been placed under contract by Monogram Pictures to star in a series of eight Westerns.

BLOSSOM TIME. Edward G. Robinson and Mrs. Robinson taking advantage of spring in the cherry orchards of Santa Clara county, California, where they went following the Warner Brothers star's completion of "Two Seconds."

PROPAGANDA. But not as political as it looks. This sign was projected upon the nation's capitol to exploit the world premiere of M-G-M's "The Wet Parade" in Washington—a daring stunt accredited to Billy Ferguson and Phil Di Angelis.



EXPEDITION HEAD. Dr. Arnold Fanck of Germany, as he arrived in New York to continue to Los Angeles for conferences with Carl Laemmle prior to leading a Universal company to Greenland to film an Arctic picture.

CALL INDEPENDENTS IN YOUNGCLAUS SUIT

Nebraska Protection Test Case Near End; Exhibitor Says Sales Branch Heads Gave Publix Local Protection

Paul F. Good, attorney for William N. Youngclaus of Madison, Neb., plaintiff in an action to enjoin protection under the antitrust laws, fought desperately in federal court Wednesday at Lincoln to prevent the defense from putting "smoke screens" around what he called the actual conditions in Nebraska. Good is trying to establish there was a reasonable open market in booking prior to the formal Nebraska protection agreement signed July 22, 1930.

Judge T. C. Munger refused to permit Good to call Lester F. Martin, Secretary of the Nebraska and Iowa Allied Association, but the ruling did not come until Good had explained what the availability clause meant.

Good formally rested his case Wednesday noon, and Arthur Mullen, defense attorney, immediately moved for dismissal. Judge Munger refused to hear such a motion until the defense had entered all its evidence.

With the testimony of half a dozen independent theatre owners into the record as to bookings on a par with Publix theatres in larger cities prior to the signing of the Nebraska protection agreement in July, 1930, and of the rigid enforcement of protection after that date, attorneys for Youngclaus Tuesday afternoon pressed their side of the antitrust suit.

Counsel for the distributors protested against evidence of other independents besides Mr. Youngclaus, but Judge Munger permitted them to take the stand. Youngclaus' suit specifies that he is also suing on behalf of other theatre owners similarly situated.

Youngclaus, who was on the stand for a whole day, testified that after the protection agreement the managers of distributing offices in Omaha all told him that they did not dare to sell him without giving the rival city of Norfolk protection, because the Norfolk house belonged to Publix and the Publix account was too big for any of the distributors to take a chance on losing.

Youngclaus also complained that when Norfolk won its protection over him, they often forced him to run short of pictures by changing bookings at the last minute. Testimony as to the drop in his box office receipts after the protection agreement was barred by the court.

Feist Has No Word From Protest Unit

The continuing committee, scheduled to resume its meetings with Felix Feist, MGM sales manager, over a week ago, has made no efforts to communicate further with the Metro sales chief since April 5, at which time discussions ended without announcement of any accomplishment. It was stated at that time that meetings would be resumed the following week.

"I have heard nothing further from the committee since our last meeting," Felix Feist said this week.

The continuing committee is an outgrowth of the exhibitors' Metro National Protest Meeting held in New York last fall to seek modification of Metro's percentage and preferred play date policy.

Powers to England With Compromise Plan on Production

"Pat" Powers sails this week for London to crystalize his newly acquired interests in British International Pictures. Before departing, Powers said:

"There are many things still that they need to learn in England if they intend to make pictures suitable for the American market. I intend to impress our British cousin with this and to offer a solution in the form of a compromise that will, I believe, be acceptable to both the British and American interests.

"I intend to produce under my own direction as to stars and directors six pictures a year in England. These pictures will carry box office names of high drawing power in the United States and be made by directors who have a knowledge of what Britain, the Empire and the United States demand of entertainment. I shall use men who have this knowledge.

"The British have an incomparable background for stories. It is as colorful as a rainbow. Every part of the Empire presents a set-up for romance, conflict and heroism. I believe we have directors in America, many of them British, who see the story possibilities, from an international point of view, of the Great Empire.

"The British want what they understand. In America the story's the thing, and, added to the story, a good box office name will put over a picture. I intend to make pictures in England with the best of both techniques.

"There is another question that comes up with the exhibitor. It is the extreme English accent, in British-made pictures, that is unacceptable in many parts of the United States. There is no reason why this cannot be corrected. Mr. Wynne-Jones and Major F. Craven, both Englishmen, who have traveled the English Empire from top to bottom, agree with me in this.

"British actors working in Hollywood soon learn to use the intermediate accent which is pleasing and acceptable anywhere in the English speaking world."

Jack L. Whittle was appointed manager of the Baltimore and Washington exchanges for Power Pictures, Inc.

450 Honor Kusell, Paramount Sales Manager for East

Milton Kusell, Paramount's recently appointed Eastern district sales manager, was honored by 450 friends at a luncheon on Tuesday at the Astor hotel in New York. Exhibitors and exchangemen joined with branch managers and circuit and executive heads in a lengthy laudatory testimonial to Kusell, who formerly was branch manager for Paramount in New York. On the dais were Al Lichtman, Charles C. Pettijohn, Gabriel L. Hess, Charles L. O'Reilly, George Schaeffer, Louis Nizer, toastmaster; Phil Reisman, Joe Unger, Leon Rosenblatt and Rudolf Sanders. Kusell has been with the company some 12 years.

Rosenblatt engineered the testimonial and had on his committee Henry Randel, Earle Sweigert, Joseph Schoen, Morris Sanders, Leo Brecher, Louis Frisch, Arthur Greenblatt, Charles Moses, Louis Nizer, Charles O'Reilly, Sidney Samuelson, Rudolf Sanders, J. M. Sider and Jack Springer.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

JOHN SCHARNBERG, RKO theatre manager at Madison, Wisconsin, has presented his nine-year-old son with one of the most complete miniature theatres ever constructed. The stage is five feet high by four feet wide and three feet deep and was constructd by Douglas Gautlett, RKO Capitol stage manager, who wired it according to city electrical requirements and also built scenery and curtains.

Three complete sets of scenery, including side pieces, drops and backs, can be arranged in 14 scene changes. It is likewise equipped with a silver screen and film projector. The electrical equipment consists of miniature footlights and two sets of overhead border lights, all controlled by a master switchboard. The stage may be lighted by red, blue or white lights, or by a combination.

Scenery is controlled by intricate sets of ropes and a set of puppets with jointed wooden bodies, also worked by strings, are completely costumed. Stage furniture is in proportion.

Harley Clarke has a complete miniature theatre in his country place in Chicago, in which he used to screen new Fox pictures en route from Hollywood to New York, while he was president of the Fox corporations.

Whether the motion picture business will be represented along with other arts and industries at the forthcoming "World's Fair" at Chicago next year appears at the moment to be a matter of interest. The reason for the industry's reluctance to participate may be found in the "preliminary suggestion" made by the fair interests to film leaders who were asked sometime ago to build and operate a series of studios on the fair grounds, transferring some of their production activities from Hollywood to Chicago so that the public could see just how pictures are made. Of course, this "suggestion" was vetoed as being impossible. In the meantime, sponsors of the celebration have formed a new corporation to work on the matter with representatives of our industry.

The executive then went on at great length to explain why he could not reveal details for publication, concluding the discussion with the pleasant warning: "And don't be surprised to see my assistant jumping a boat for Paris any day now." All of which is splendid, but it would be less surprising to hear of the boss's sudden departure for European shores for a stay quite indefinite and not concerned with expansion plans either.

When new interests took over the physical operation of an independent distributor the other day, account books disclosed some rather interesting deals. In one key city the company had sold one of its better feature releases to a downtown first-run for the sum of $5. The same talker was booked into two Broadway first-runs for one week at $200 for both, at a time when the whole world was discussing the subject of the picture and stories of its theme were appearing on page one of newspapers everywhere.

ROUTING of complete displays and ballyhoos for fronts over the Publix circuit is one of the newest wrinkles in economy operation. Originally costing between $100 and $200, the displays may be rented for as little as $2. Some of the material being used will be sold after the displays have served their usefulness to Publix. The circuit claims that the fronts have increased business, showing an improvement as high as 300 per cent. Four have been built for use with Western pictures; three each for "Ben Hur," "East of Borneo" and "50 Fathoms Deep"; one for "Mystery of Life" and two each for "The Struggle," "Murders in the Rue Morgue," "Hatchet Man" and "Chinatown After Dark." They are intended principally for "B" and "C" houses.

CANADA HAS FEWER ARBITRATION CASES

Shrinkage in Revenues Probably Less Than in Australia, Britain and U. S., Says Cooper in Distributors-Exhibitors Report

The annual report of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, presented by Col. John A. Cooper, president, at the annual meeting in Toronto, contained a number of interesting items with reference to trade activities in the Dominion during the past year.

In view of the fact that arbitration was removed from trade practices in the United States last year, Col. Cooper's declaration that no changes in the Standard Contract were made in Canada during the year is highly interesting. It is pointed out that there were fewer cases requiring arbitration during the year. Moreover, the principle of arbitration was approved in the recent judgment of Justice Garrow, who presided at the so-called Motion Picture Combine Trial. According to the report of the MPDE, the total amount involved in arbitrations in Canada in 1931 was $248,356.11 as compared with $304,420.35 in the previous year.

Tendency Toward Fewer Features

An estimate of the available feature pictures in Canada for the year shows a total of 465 releases, including 60 French dialogue features. All of these were sound pictures. The total number of features, all sound, was 406 during the previous year, while the supply of sound and silent features for the year 1928-1929 was 457. Excepting the French imports, the total for 1931 was 405 features. The statement is made that the tendency is towards a lower total of features, this possibly partly due to the decrease in the number of wired houses as compared with the number of silent houses four years ago. It is also partly due to the prevailing policy of distributors to make fewer and better pictures, the report reads.

The report says that both distributors and exhibitors experienced a shrinkage in revenues last year, though this was probably not as great in Canada as in Australia, Great Britain and the United States. Shrinkage in average theatre receipts was accompanied by an expansion in the number of active theatres. According to the report, the number of theatres having both film and disc equipment was 620 on December 31 last, as compared with 499 one year before and 261 as of December 31, 1929. The increase last year was 25 per cent. The total number of theatre installations at the end of 1931 was 765, this including those with equipment for either film track or disc only.

No Quotas Imposed

The possibility of a quota for British pictures was discussed in several of the Canadian Provinces during 1931 but only in Ontario was a law passed giving the lieutenant-governor in Council the power to set a British film quota if and when the Ontario Government thought advisable. Although this law was on the statute books for nine months of the year, the Government did not see its way clear to supplement this by any regulations. Since the report was issued, British Columbia has followed Ontario's example.

The number of British pictures circulated in Canada was practically the same as in the previous year, but undoubtedly these features attracted greater attention, it is declared. French feaures brought into the Province of Quebec increased greatly in 1931 and received an increased patronage.

The improvement in film buildings was continued by the addition of a new exchange building in Calgary last December. The system of fire inspection in film exchange structures was maintained and the results were eminently satisfactory. It is pointed out that not one fire has taken place in a film exchange in Canada since organization of the MPDE.

The number of gratis films distributed in 1931 was much lower owing to the fact that few institutions had sound installations and the supply of silent films was exhausted. Gratis films were provided wherever possible, however. Unemployment relief work was undertaken by the Film Boards of Trade while the exchanges cooperated with exhibitors who provided benefit shows for the unemployed or for other relief purposes.

Classification of Circuit Theatres Plan Suggested

Informal discussions seeking the "modernization" of film distribution are being held among sales executives, Al Lichtman, United Artists distribution chief, told a gathering of exhibitors and industry executives at a testimonial luncheon to Milt Kusell, Paramount district manager, held in New York this week.

Various plans designed to improve distribution methods and correct industry ills have been suggested and discussed informally, according to Lichtman. One of the plans, he said, contemplates a breakdown of controlled circuits into theatre classifications having a specific policy defined for each. Available product would likewise be classified and allocated to the theatre for which it is designed, according to this plan.

Overcoming distribution weaknesses by improved methods would comprise one of the cures for faulty industry conditions, Lichtman said. "The trouble with the business today," he added, "is not only due to the depression, but to too big wishbones and our own shortcomings."

Motion Picture Exhibits to Feature Chicago Exposition

The entertainment features of the Chicago Century of Progress Exposition will be built around the exhibits of the motion picture industry, according to plans being formulated by the Chicago Hollywood Corporation, newly formed $500,000 organization, which will have charge of many features of motion picture representation at the centennial.

Sedgwick Resigns Important Famous Players Canadian Post

Harry Sedgwick has resigned an important executive post as head of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation offices in Toronto. He had held the post eight years.

Sedgwick took a prominent part in the recent amusement tax battle for the corporation, which resulted in a victory for all Canadian theatres.

Movietone Establishes New Reel Theatre in Barcelona

A newsreel theatre has been established in Barcelona, Spain, according to Truman H. Talley, general manager of Fox Movietone News. The addition of Barcelona brings the total of major cities with newsreel houses to six.

All six theatres are operated by the Movietone company. Cable reports to the home office indicated that the new theatre in Barcelona was well received.

DISTRIBUTORS GET MORE LEEWAY IN AUSTRALIA CENSORING CHANGE

Companies Now Permitted to Reconstruct Films Before Submitting Them; Hicks Recall Is a Surprise There

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

Changes in the censorship system of Australia have brought no surprises, and, if anything, are advantageous to the industry. The Commonwealth Appeal Board has been reduced in personnel from three members to one; and permission has been granted distributors to reconstruct their pictures before submission to the censor authorities.

Chief censor for seven years, Cresswell O'Reilly retains his office, the only alteration in the board being the substitution of Mrs. G. D. L. Hansen for Mrs. Lena Lynch. When the latter was appointed to the board a year ago, her bona fides as an arbiter of film morals were openly criticized, but she was a prominent figure in prominent labor organizations and so she got the job. The return of the Nationalist regime meant the exit of Mrs. Lynch.

An army man, and widely respected in public life, General I. G. MacKay, the sole appeal authority, should prove an excellent choice. Only time, however, can determine whether that belief will be borne out. Meanwhile the industry hopes.

Abolished several years ago, the privilege of viewing their pictures before they reach the censor's projection room will be gladly availed of by the renters. Announcing that regulations were being framed to put this privilege into practice, Minister for Customs Gullet said that such a change should save considerable time in the official censorship. It had many advantages, and, if sufficient safeguards were provided to insure control over the films while in the custody of the importers, there seemed to be no reasonable objections to it.

The arrangement is only tentative, and the question of its continuance will be decided later.

Hicks Recall a Surprise

The recall to New York of John W. Hicks, Jr., for eleven years chief of Paramount in Australasia and the Far East, occasioned great surprise in both film and social circles.

Hicks gained for himself a reputation probably unparalleled by any other distribution chief ever to hold office in Australia, and while congratulating him on his new appointment, the industry will regret his departure. For more than a decade he has been a dominating factor in the business of hiring films in this country, and by his consistent belief in showmanship methods and the mutual working of exchanges in conjunction with the exhibitor in selling the product to the public, he pioneered what is now the accepted method of distributor-exhibitor cooperation.

William J. Clark, who succeeds him as head of the Paramount organization here, is wellknown to the Australian industry. He will carry on the policies of the company, not as a stranger who must learn the ropes, but as a man with a thorough knowledge of Australian conditions, having already spent three years here, first as associate to Hicks, then as general sales manager.

"Dracula" Triumphs in Sydney

Not for years has a picture cleaned up Sydney as spectacularly as "Dracula" has done. Its success has been phenomenal. Opening in mid-summer weather, and going into the Capitol, a house which boomed one time but which now is satisfied with a weekly gross of $6,000 to $6,500, "Dracula" pulled in a little in excess of $16,250 in its first week, and, at that, turned the crowds away.

Three or four years ago, the Capitol might have got $25,000 dollars in a big week, but since then admission prices have come down about 33 per cent, and the public is supposed to be barren of spare cash. "Dracula's" performance is therefore all the more meritorious. The "horror" cycle certainly seems to have started off on the right leg in Australia.

In praising "Dracula" for its audience value, the work of H. C. McIntyre, head of Universal, and Percy L. Curtis, publicity director, must not be overlooked.

Fullers in Film Agreement

British films have done pretty well in Australia the last couple of years, but they take their largest stride forward under an agreement just signed between British Dominions Films and the Fullers, by which the entire BDF product will be given first-runs in the Fullers' city theatres, and their suburban houses, numbering about 20. The contract stipulates that none but British and Australian pictures shall form the program when BDF features are being screened.

BDF has also acquired a lease of the Athenaeum theatre, Melbourne, a fairly successful long-run house.

The deal is hailed with delight by the Tory papers of the Commonwealth, newspapers, which, while rightly encouraging Australians to patronize Empire product to the near-exclusion of foreign screen material, forget that without American pictures Australian cinemas would never be able to carry on. In a lengthy discussion of the negotiations, the Melbourne Argus, most conservative of all newspapers in this country, remarks that at last British and Australian films will be presented to the public in a setting worthy of their appeal and value as entertainment.

"Far too long," says the paper, "have these films been shown in a manner that suggested them as being subsidiary productions to American films, which, no matter how excellent some may regard them in a technical sense, fail so often in their treatment of subjects and frequently—and frankly—are propagandist in their aim of proving that America is the most remarkable country in the world."

Second Efftee Group Completed

The Australian producing organization, Efftee Films, has completed its second unit program, and the featured item, "The Sentimental Bloke," an adaptation of the famous Australian novel, is being given an extended season run in Melbourne. A great deal of interest is manifested in this second batch of Efftee pictures, owing to the fact that the first were such unqualified successes out here. Their overseas fate has yet to be determined, but in the meantime Efftee is grossing very flattering returns, and is hoping for even greater returns with "The Bloke." Those hopes are likely to be fulfilled because "The Sentimental Bloke" is undoubtedly the greatest Australian picture ever made. There are no two ways about it. It has human and romantic interest, comedy, sob-stuff, action, it is excellently acted, and no fault could be found with the general production set-up. When ten years ago, the late E. J. Carroll took "The Sentimental Bloke" to England, he grossed the then staggering sum of £20,000 or approximately $100,000. No Australian picture in England, silent or sound, has since got anywhere near that sum, and so the prospects for the sound version of "The Bloke" in the United Kingdom, not forgetting Australia, of course, look rosy. Courage will be required to tackle the American market with it, but stiffer obstacles have been overcome in the past.

"The Bloke" completed, Efftee has now started a musical, "His Royal Highness," and is preparing for production a story of life on an Australian sheep station, "Pick and the Duffers."

Consolidated Film Proposes Reduction of Capital Stock

Consolidated Film Industries has notified the New York Stock Exchange of a proposed reduction in capital represented by the outstanding preferred and common stock from $9,000,000 to $6,524,973 and also a change in authorized common stock from 600,000 shares of no par value to 600,000 shares having a par value of $1.

Each present share is to be exchanged for a corresponding share of new stock. The par value of the preferred stock will be reduced from $20 to $15, under the plan.

Cleveland Film Board Case Will Be Heard During June

The monopoly suit of the Cleveland exhibitors against the Cleveland Film Board of Trade and all its members, charging restraint of trade and unfair trade practice, will probably be heard in June, after closing of the jury court.

The indication came from the offices of Federal Judge John Jones, where it was also learned that no case on the docket will precede the film suit. Stanley, Horwitz and Kiefer will represent the exhibitors.

MARCH BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS

THE country's key-theatre box offices registered in March a wide variety of interest, ranging from operetta through light and heavy drama to exotic outdoor melodrama. First position, according to box office ratings, went to Paramount's Maurice Chevalier vehicle, "One Hour With You," a romantic musical. But immediately following it comes the air-thriller, RKO Radio's "Lost Squadron." Paramount also placed third with "Shanghai Express," also somewhat of the thrill pattern. In fourth position was Warner Brothers' George Arliss picture, "The Man Who Played God," which was a "champion" for February, as was RKO Pathe's "Lady With a Past," which holds fifth place for March. Sixth position is held jointly by M-G-M's "Tarzan, the Ape Man" and First National's "Fireman, Save My Child."

Sees Film's Value In The Schoolroom

James D. Stover, assistant superintendent of the Cincinnati public schools, in a recent address before the Better Motion Picture council of that city, praised the producers for their efforts to determine the value of motion pictures for educational purposes.

Stover said in part: "I am concerned largely with the use of motion pictures in schools. If we accept the general principle that the motion picture has become one of America's most interesting and most extensive occupations, attracting to it all classes of people, it is quite possible that we may find something of value in it for the school room.

"Great credit must be given several producers for the interest which they have taken to endeavor to determine the value of pictures for educational purposes. To what extent sound pictures can be installed for some time to come is a big issue. Apparently their value has been definitely established. The big question is that of cost. The motion picture is playing a most important role in the life of our people. Without making any statement pro or con regarding the influence of the commercial film upon society, we must recognize that the motion picture as a device does have great educational possibilities, and as rapidly as opportunity permits the schools of our country will avail themselves of much valuable material for use in the classroom."

Changes By RKO, Skouras on Coast

Changes in theatre personnel of RKO houses on the Coast have followed similar shifts in Fox West Coast which began with visits of the Skouras Brothers recently. The changes includes managers, publicity men, district managers and the importation of out of town men into San Francisco theatres.

Important alterations have been made in the Skouras operating plan. A. M. Bowles will have complete supervision over the de luxe houses operated by Fox, such as the new Paramount and the Fox in Oakland; Fox, San Francisco; Warfield, San Francisco.

Richard Spier, newly appointed East Bay district theatre manager, will make his headquarters at the Grand Lake theatre, Oakland, and, in addition to the remaining Fox houses in Oakland, Berkeley, Richmond and San Jose, will have added to the houses under his immediate supervision the California and St. Francis theatres, San Francisco. These two latter houses have switched policies, St. Frances going second-run and California third-run.

Balaban & Katz Pays Dividend

Balaban and Katz, Chicago, has declared a quarterly dividend of 37½ cents on the common stock, placing the issue on a $1.50 basis against $3 previously. Regular quarterly dividend of $1.75 on the preferred stock was also declared. Both dividends are payable July 2 to stock of record June 18.

Paramount Stock Holders Postpone Session; No Quorum

The annual stockholders meeting of the Paramount Publix Corporation, scheduled for Tuesday last at headquarters of the company in New York will be held on Tuesday, April 26. The deferment was due to a lack of a quorum, there being approximately 1,376,301 proxies represented on Tuesday, or 200,000 less than the required total. The corporation's constitution requires 50 per cent of the stockholders to elect directors and 66 2/3 to vote otherwise.

Stockholders are scheduled to elect new directors and to vote on the action of the board of directors in authorizing a proposed employees' stock plan and they will also act on a proposal to change the presently authorized 4,000,000 shares of no par common into 4,000,000 shares with a par value of $10. Stockholders of record of April 4 will be entitled to vote.

Fay Has a Successful Week With Jobless in Stage Act

Edward M. Fay, Providence exhibitor, suggests possible emulation of a plan which was proposed to him and which was, he indicates, most successfully carried out, as a means of unemployed relief, at least in a measure, at his Fays theatre.

Fay took about 12 men from the North Main Street Recreation Rooms, a Providence refuge for unemployed men operated by leading society women, and used them in an act at the theatre, advertising it for what it was. Fay says: "These men gave an exceptional act for about 15 minutes, and with rented costumes looked like professionals. They behaved like gentlemen; we had no trouble with them, and we had a good week's business."

900 Dedicate Rooms of New National Warner Club

The new National Warner Club rooms in the New York executive building of Warner Brothers were dedicated by almost 900 members of the club, at an entertainment and dance Thursday night. The event which marked a widened scope of activities and benefits for members of the club, was attended by H. M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, and Sam E. Morris, executive vice-president. Harold Rodner, managing director of the club, predicted 8,000 membership in a month. Entertainment was supplied by the Warner Artist's Bureau. A boatride is scheduled for June.

British Cabinet Minister Says Films Prevent Crime

Motion pictures are doing more to prevent crime than to encourage its commission, it was publicly stated last week by Sir Herbert Samuel, British home secretary.

The English cabinet minister was reviewing criminal statistics before the House of Commons when he made the remark.

DO THE SAME

STATION WOKO BROADCAST

Six 30-minute broadcasts nightly, the first on Monday preceding the opening. The last on the day following the opening. Station supplied air time free. You can get the records for these broadcasts FREE from your Fox Exchange.

NEWSPAPER PUBLICITY

Not one, but three, newspapers tied up: The Times-Union, Albany News and Morning Knickerbocker Press. Special pictorial layouts, features and news stories supplemented daily reviews of the broadcast by the three radio editors. You can get this same newspaper co-operation.

NEWSPAPER REVIEWS

You can depend upon nothing but raves, as these Albany reviews indicate. The Times-Union: "Full of action . . . full of suspense and thrills galore. Will appeal to every type of theatre-goer." Knickerbocker Press: "World premiere comes off with success. An unusual semblence of reality." Albany News: "Good drama. Joan Bennett makes a lovely heroine."

OTHER EXPLOITATION

STORE BROADCAST: Broadcasting of the daily instalments on the main streets of downtown Albany, in department stores and in drug stores through special loud speakers.

BOOK PRIZES: 100 copies of the Grossett-Dunlap book version of "Vivienne Ware" to the first 100 women to attend opening day show.

WINDOWS: General window displays and book store displays of the Grossett-Dunlap book.

TELEPHONE TEASER: To a selected list of telephone subscribers synchronized to fit in with previous day's broadcast and newspaper teaser campaign.

NEWSPAPER TEASER: Special series of six one-column ads, fully outlined in Fox press book.

BILLBOARD TEASER: On a 160-foot board to synchronize with newspaper teasers. Painted daily. Message not fully completed until sixth day. See Fox press book.

SUMMONS GAG: Judges, lawyers, court attendants circularized with special summons, serving notice that "the inside story" of "The Trial of Vivienne Ware" would be revealed at the theatre.

SCREEN TRAILER

Created tremendous talk among the fans. By all means get the National Screen Trailer — it's a pip! Packed with thrills, romance, speed and drama.

162 RADIO STATIONS

will broadcast "The Trial of Vivienne Ware" April 25 to May 8th.

CODE IS IMPROVING ADVERTISING THROUGHOUT TRADE, SAYS HAYS

Tells of Unending Effort of Foreign Governments to Bar U. S. Films so as to Boost Own Industry Artificially

The entire stream of advertising of the motion picture has been and is being influenced for the better by the Advertising Code, through the precept and example of "rigorous care in the press books issued by our producing companies and constant educational work with the theatre managers of affiliated theatres," says Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in his tenth annual report, second instalment of which is printed on this and succeeding pages.

Mr. Hays declares that "there is evident a growing recognition of the fact that our advertisements are the show window of our business, that our ads must reflect our pictures accurately and that the temptation to salacity in advertising, whether it be sometimes productive of box-office receipts or not, involves a policy that the industry cannot afford to, and will not, pursue."

Artificial Restrictions Abroad

Introducing a summarizing of taxation restrictions in foreign countries directed against the American motion picture in the effort to build up native industry, Mr. Hays said the story of the American picture abroad "is the story of an unending effort on the part of governments throughout the world to bar through artificial restrictions the American motion picture in the hope that the resultant starved entertainment demand in the respective countries will in some mysterious way assure the creation there of an industrial asset comparable to that possessed by the United States."

Of the activities of the motion picture in the field of education, the MPPDA president cited the following:

> 36 research studies, all agreeing that motion pictures materially increase the efficiency of the child's learning;
> Development of the surgical film as a means of instruction;
> Organization of a direct inquiry, collating the opinions of educators in 673 colleges and universities, on the value of the sound motion picture for teaching;
> Presentation of a new study and summation of previous studies, compiled by Dr. F. D. McClusky, head of the National Academy of Visual Instruction.

Hays also pointed out that universal use would aid the taxpayer to the extent of a saving of $1,000,000 in ten years, by reduction in the amount of retaking of courses.

Entertainment Prime Aim

Closely linked with these phases are several of the subjects taken up by Hays in the part of his report which was printed in full in the last issue of the HERALD. He pointed out the constantly growing number of pictures being produced on an improved standard of entertainment value, with a consequent vast increase in the potential audience, though he pointed out at the same time that the industry "cannot desert mass for class." Hays also told the MPPDA directors that the public understanding of the industry and its problems is increasing.

One way to maintain that better understanding, he declared, is to keep in mind the fact that entertainment is the screen's basic purpose. This is one of the many subjects he expands upon in the following:

America is in the mood and the process of rebuilding. As a nation, we have the task ahead of remolding many of our economic concepts and of readjusting our lives. Losses we have suffered, but gains we have made; the day of the cheap cynic and the falsely brilliant destructive mind is passed. The man with something useful to contribute to the nation and to solid forms of human happiness is the man for whom we have use and approbation.

The same thing is true of pictures that is true of men.

Much of the audience that patronizes a motion picture theatre wishes to come out with a sense of added strength and comfort, to aid in the task of meeting responsibilities as serious as those faced by any generation.

This need we are increasingly supplying. I need only to cite three current pictures, Broken Lullaby, Arrowsmith and The Man Who Played God.

Short Subjects

In the short subject field as in the field of feature pictures, self-regulation has progressed from an initial preoccupation of avoidance of bad taste to an affirmative policy of developing and securing support for constructive types of pictures.

The scope of the short subject market will require continued alertness in precautionary directions. The preponderance of comedy as the natural dramatic expression of the short also entails constant factors requiring care. However, it is illuminating to consider this brief list of short subject series, planned or in production, which represent the result of affirmative thought toward translating industry purposes to the screen in this field:

a. The Medal of Honor Series, in which it is planned to reconstruct into dramatic stories those actions which inspired awards of the Congressional Medal of Honor.
b. The Famous Classics Series, in which some well known poem of American origin will be interpreted in dramatic action by a player of ability and reputation.
c. The Austin Turner Series, which will depict in drama some unusual nature studies and life studies in the American West.
d. The Birth of Word's Series, which will trace the historic facts of interest in the origin of words.
e. The Historic West Series, in which the abandoned mining towns and forts of the Western territory will be used as backgrounds for a group of educational short subjects.
f. The Marionette Series, in which a new type of puppet embodying more elasticity and pliability in its composition will be used.

Entertainment, the Screen's Basic Purpose

Because we state and re-state the extra-entertainment considerations involved in developing a socially useful content of pictures it is wise also to state and re-state the basic philosophy and fact of our primary obligation to the public, an obligation which in itself contains the essence of inspiration and of impulsion to the finest effort of which we are capable.

The function of motion pictures is to ENTERTAIN. This we must keep before us at all times and we must realize constantly the fatality of ever permitting our concern with social values to lead us into the realm of propaganda.

Pictures may be so made as to carry strength and inspiration to those who see them. They may be safeguarded in the matter of their problematical effect on behavior. These values we shall continue to conserve and develop. But, first of all, pictures must entertain.

Entertainment possesses in itself and of itself a moral value and is a vital necessity to the millions whom we serve. No group, no cause, no social, religious or civic faction is permitted to inject propaganda into American motion pictures.

Deliberately and consciously, motion pictures are for international good will and for the forces of law as against the forces of crime. We have, too, certain obligations that wrong shall not be made attractive and that religion shall not be mocked.

The adherences admit of no justifiable controversy. But on every other topic the American motion picture preserves its impartiality, owns no civic obligation greater than the honest presentment of clean entertainment and maintains that in supplying effective entertainment, free of propaganda, we serve a high and self-sufficing purpose.

Emphasizes Entertainment as Screen's Basic Purpose; Declares Short Features Reflecting Affirmative Policy

News Reels

Probably the most universally enjoyed part of the theatre program is the News Reel. It is current event and history, popular sport and tragedy of the passing of a great statesman, war in its frightful reality and the Disarmament Conference in session, the religious service of the Buddha in a forbidden temple in the interior of China and the Easter Parade on Fifth Avenue, a scenic bit of African jungle set next to a trip over the North Pole. Friendship between nations grows with understanding. American news reels make neighbors of them all. The news reel is education, natural education, at its best. It is as entertaining as life itself.

Advertising Code

Sufficient time has now elapsed, and sufficient effort been expended, to permit appraisal of the value of the Advertising Code developed by the publicity heads of the member companies and signed on June 6, 1930.

At the outset we were somewhat dismayed by the fact that an average of 15,000 individual motion picture advertisements are prepared daily by exhibitors throughout the country. This means that the varied minds of many men, each working with enthusiasm, sometimes under heavy pressure of need for stimulating theatre attendance, bring to the writing of motion picture advertising the inevitable dangers inherent in creative sales copy prepared and issued at high speed.

Nevertheless, we decided that rigorous care in the press books issued by our producing companies and constant educational work with the theatre managers of affiliated theatres would by precept and example influence the entire stream of motion picture advertising. This promise has proved to be correct.

Furthermore, the Association's staff member in charge of this work has undertaken to bring to the attention of theatre managers not affiliated with our members those examples which occur of questionable advertising. We have found that such suggestions are taken in good part and throughout the industry there is evident a growing recognition of the fact that our advertisements are the show window of our business, that our ads must reflect our pictures accurately and that the temptation to salacity in advertising, whether it be sometimes productive of box-office receipts or not, involves a policy that the industry cannot afford to, and will not, pursue.

Hundreds of letters, hundreds of telephone calls, conferences day-in and day-out, have constituted a continuing campaign. In many cases there are legitimate differences of opinion as to specific advertisements, but there is a definite border-line where most reasonable minds agree that good taste ends and we have concentrated our efforts, with considerable success, at the task of keeping on the right side of that line.

Four typical sets of instructions, issued by member companies of the Association to their own employees, are quoted herewith. They show the tenor and earnestness of the organized determination to keep our advertising wholesome.

1. FOX. The following is quoted from the Fox house organ:

> "Every manager, advertising man and publicity man in the entire circuit of Fox Theatres is hereby cautioned to use the utmost care in the writing and the art works of ads, and to make them conform STRICTLY to the code laid down by the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America. Keep your copy clean and free from any immoral suggestion whatever. Improper poses in your drawings or photographs are OUT. Do not try to get around these rules. An ad is either moral or immoral. Rest assured that you'll save yourself a lot of trouble by staying inside the bounds of propriety."

22.. LOEW. "The Loew-Down," house organ for the Loew theatres, under the heading "Salacious Ads Will Not Be Tolerated," carried the message:

> "Of late there has been a tendency in the advertising of Motion Pictures which reacts tremendously against the best interests of this business. I refer to the salacious and off-color advertising that we see so very often. I will not point to any specific examples. I am sure you see it all around you.
> "At this time I want to impress on your minds that, as far as the Loew Theatres are concerned, we will not countenance any such advertising, and I do not want to be placed in an embarrassing

TRADE RESTRICTIONS ABROAD CITED

position by your inattention to these instructions.

"You know the reason for salacious advertising and salacious exploitation. It is erroneously based on the theory that it increases business. You can definitely forget such an alibi. It will not be countenanced by us in the analysis of your advertising.

"I may say that the same message is going forward to all theatres in all circuits. Any time you see salacious advertising on the part of your competitor, cut it out immediately and mail to our Home office. A constant check will be made by us, by all other circuits, and by the Hays Office, all determined that once and for all we are going to clean up this situation.

"The Press Sheets and Advertising Copy furnished you by the various film companies and your own Publicity Department will not contain anything objectionable, and while you may deviate from time to time, never do so with the thought in mind that you want to color up the subject matter so that it will become at all salacious.

"Please intorm everybody connected with you that we are very much in earnest about this, and cannot tolerate any violation of this code."

3. WARNER. Almost simultaneously the following instructions were issued by Warner Brothers:

"Effective immediately, we must definitely and absolutely refrain from any attempts at obscene or salacious advertising of any kind, in connection with our theatres, because if our Organization and the entire industry attempts to stimulate business through this medium it will prove very detrimental and eventually will bring ruinous results to our theatres and our industry as a whole."

4. PARAMOUNT. Mr. Sam Katz of Paramount Publix has frequently expressed himself strongly regarding the application of the Code. He has had placed in all the press books of Paramount Publix the following:

"In preparing advertisements, no one in Publix theatres is permitted to go beyond the meaning of the words in the advertising copy in this Manual, or in the advertising copy taken from producers' press-sheets.

"Any manager or advertising man who goes beyond the general trend of advertising as outlined in these two sources, in an effort to frame salacious or sensational advertising, does so at the peril of his job.

"Publix Theatres will accept no alibis for salacious advertising. You are to stick to the spirit of the manual or press sheet in framing your advertising copy."

The Code has had the full backing of the Trade Press in the educational work that has brought the industry markedly forward in the field of wholesome advertising. Before its adoption there were almost daily examples of so-called "jazzing up" of copy.

We shall not be able to relax vigilance in this matter of clean advertising, but already we have arrived at the place where motion picture advertising compares favorably with the advertising of other commodities. The occasional mistake still occurs but it is episodic and not epidemic.

Conservation and Protection

In film exchanges in the United States 150,000,000 feet—approximately 28,000 miles—of motion picture film are examined, stored, repaired or shipped each day. In the 300 working days of the year this amounts to 45,000,000,000 feet of film passing through human hands.

One of the important public services of your Association has been the quiet development of a thorough system of inspection for exchange buildings and a constant study and improvement of methods of handling this enormous amount of film.

Rigid monthly inspection of all exchanges is maintained. In most instances the inspection is carried out by a member of the local Fire Department, and a committee composed of branch managers and the Secretary of the Film Board of Trade. After inspection a fire drill is conducted and report is made as to the bearing and conduct of the employees. A trophy is awarded yearly to the branch exchange having the most consistently perfect inspection record.

The Director of Conservation of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America visited each of the 457 exchanges at least once during 1931.

In the past eight years more than $26,000,000 has been expended in the construction of fireproof exchanges in the United States, all erected in accordance with plans approved by the Conservation Department of this Associaiton and designed particularly for the protection of our workers and of neighboring tenants. We are in continuous contact and frequent conference with all fire protection and fire prevention bodies and with conservation groups.

Figures for the past four years indicate the effectiveness of our effort:

1928. One fire. Monetary loss $25. This fire resulted from static spark caused by the sun's rays on a metal table, which ignited film as it was being rewound.

1929. One fire. Loss $1,200. This was caused by defective concealed wiring in the Poster Deparment. No film was involved. Loss resulted from wooden poster racks and advertising matter.

1930. One fire. Monetary loss $15. Six hundred feet of film were destroyed.

1931. Two fires occurred. Total monetary loss $225. Both fires occurred in regional or unaffiliated distributing offices. One office was receiving the benefit of the Conservation Department, consequently was inspected regularly. This fire occurred in the Poster Department and was believed to have been caused by a careless smoker. No film was involved. The total loss in this fire was $25.

These figures comprise a splendid testimony to the results of organization in industry.

A curious misapprehension exists in some quarters, and should be corrected in the record, concerning the Pathe Studio fire that occurred in New York on December 10, 1929. An impression seems to exist that this was a fire of film origin, but that is not the case.

The National Fire Protection Association stated in its official report that the fire originated in a velvet drop curtain from an unknown cause. It is definitely established that only eleven reels of film were burned and that this film was in no way a contributory cause of the fire or to the spreading of the flames. The entire interior of the building was ablaze before the eleven reels of film took fire. Eight of the burned reels were in the mezzanine floor projection booth and three reels were in the camera dark room. The films in the cutting room and in the vaults did not ignite and were uninjured except by water.

Preservation of Film for Future Generations

In May, 1930, I transmitted to the President of the United States the willingness of the industry to co-operate in the preservation for future generations of current motion picture product that might be deemed to possess exceptional historical or educational value.

Pursuant to this offer and to subsequent discussions, it is planned to have historical film archives in the Federal Archives Building at Washington—plans for which are now being drawn. The significance and importance of this historical and educational record is self-apparent.

We have collated the opinions of the best available technical minds as to how this project might be made practicable and a special committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is working in co-operation with those charged by the Government with responsibility for the method of preserving the motion picture record of our time.

American Motion Pictures Abroad

Wherever American pictures are shown, in any country in the world, there results an invigorating stimulation of local will to buy. Products on the shelves of local merchants move faster, whether they are American made or manufactured abroad.

We have established, in the United States, beyond doubt, that a good picture in an attractive theatre brings purchasers to the mercantile establishments in the downtown section or to the neighborhood stores; that the small town providing excellent motion picture entertainment draws a constant of increased visits, with increased buying, from the surrounding rural districts.

Modern economics are so inter-related that it is very difficult for an institution to serve one element in the business world without rendering simultaneously corollary service to other phases of business.

The application of this principle abroad was evidenced with vigor at the time when as President of your Association I negotiated with the French Government relative to quota requirements proposed by that government which our industry deemed confiscatory.

Hundreds of French motion picture exhibitors, and many Chambers of Commerce in the affected areas, protested emphatically to the French authorities expressing the deep concern with which their local communities view the possibility of a diminished supply of entertainment of a degree of excellence only obtainable, in continuous flow, from American studios.

Unfortunately, the far-seeing view of economies does not always prevail and it is human nature for us to regard a tangible dollar going to our neighbor today with more acute realization than we view a dollar intangibly created or stimulated in added business at home.

The story of the American motion picture abroad is the story of an unending effort on the part of governments throughout the world to bar through artificial restrictions the American motion picture in the hope that the resultant starved entertainment demand in the respective countries will in some mysterious way assure the creation there of an industrial asset comparable to that possessed by the United States.

Americans, who have developed a large part of the motion picture industry of the world, are inclined to forget the toil, the creative effort, the investment and the self-discipline that have combined to create this tremendous commercial asset. We view our production center as a matter of course, but those who do not have it seek desperately to create some such asset over night by fiat of law. In this purpose new precedents have been set in trade restrictions in the effort to force into being similar stimulators of commerce in other countries.

The extent to which these trade restrictions have grown is indicated by the following brief summary of import duties, quota laws and other economic burdens imposed in some foreign countries on the distribution of American pictures:

Argentina

Import duties increased to a straight specific duty on motion picture films amounting to 15 pesos gold per kilo, without surcharges. It was formerly 4 pesos per kilo.

Australasia

In Australia there is a Commonwealth tax payable by all companies on profits derived from Australia amountiing at present to one shilling four pence in the pound. On property income an additional one shilling six pence in the pound will be assessed, making a total federal tax of two shillings ten pence, as well as the various state taxes. The State of Victoria has imposed a quota which provides that 2,000 feet of British film shall be shown in each program, 1,000 feet of which shall have been made in Australia. This has been in effect since July 1, 1927. In New South Wales, 12½% of gross income is regarded as taxable income.

In New Zealand there is a film quota identical with that in effect in Great Britain and which amounts to 12½% on the distributor and 7½% on the exhibitor, becoming 10% after September 30th.

Austria

Under the Austrian quota regulations, for each sound film produced domestically and recognized as a native film there are issued 21 interim certificates and for each sound short, from 1 to 2 interim certificates, according to type. On the basis of one interim certificate there may be issued 10 import permits for short sound films of less than 350 meters length each, or 5 import permits for short sound films from 350 to 700 meters each. Two interim certificates are necesary for a film between 700 and 1,500 meters length, and three certificates for the issuance of one import permit for a sound film of over 1,500 meters length. For the issuance of one import permit for a sound film for the comprehension of which by all classes of patrons the insertion of text and titles is necessary, the following must be submitted:

|---|---|
| for 2 copies | 1½ interim certificates |
| 3 copies | 2½ interim certificates |
| 4 or more | 3 interim certificates |

Interim certificates are purchasable from the Film Bureau of the Chamber of Trade, Commerce and Industry in Vienna at 1,000 shillings each.

Belgium

A commercial profits tax is levied by the State at the rate of 9.9% to which must be added the local tax rate that may be levied up to 100% of the State tax, in which case the total tax rate will amount to 19.8%, increased to 22% as and when the profits are distributed in the form of a dividend. As a result of recent legislation the fiscal authorities are enabled to tax foreign companies in one of the other of the following alternative methods (whichever yields the higher assessment) where they are not satisfied that the accounts present a full and proper disclosure of the results of the Belgian business:

(a) On an assumed net profit of 15% of the cash takings or collections;

(2b) On an assumed net profit of Belgian Francs 10,000. per employee or workman.

There is also a "taxe mobiliere" amounting to 15%.

Chile

A tax of $50. Chilean currency on the first release of all foreign films in each district.

The revenue authorities propose that for the purpose of income tax assessments their taxable profits shall correspond to 8% of the gross rentals earned in Chile.

Colombia

Import duties increased on talking and silent motion picture films from 80 centavos to 1.60 pesos per kilo, and on discs from 20 centavos to 2.50 pesos per kilo.

England

Besides the quota at present effective in Great Britain amounting to15% on distributors and 10% on exhibitors, this latter becoming 12½% after September 30th, import duties have just been levied in England as follows:

|---|---|
| Negatives | 5 pence per foot |
| Positives | 1 penny per foot |
| Positive sound track only | 33 1/3% ad valorem |
| Negative sound track | 10% ad valorem |
| Discs | 33 1/3% advalorem |

Germany

The German kontingent regulations at present in force, valid until June 30, 1932, provide for ths distribution of film import permits among companies which have distributed German films between January 1, 1930, and June 30, 1931. These permits are allocated as follows:

Sound permits: 60 to distributors
30 to exporters of German sound films
15 to the sound film reserve fund
105—plus an additional 20, applicable to either sound or silent, but presumably to sound;
Silent permits: 40 to distributors
20 to exporters of German silent film
10 to silent films reserve fund
70

German import permits are not purchasable.

Hungary

In addition to the regular import duty of $50 per 220 pounds, the following charges are made on imported films:

Import certificate, 1,000 pengos (approx. $175) per film for films of over 400 meters in length and 200 pengos (approx. $35) for films less than 400 meters in length
Silent films require no import certificates.
Film Fund charges: 20 fillers ($0.035) per censored meter, silent, 30 fillers ($0.052) per censored meter, sound, plus.
Regular censorship fee of 10 fillers ($0.0175 per meter.

India

Import duties increased to 37½% ad valorem, on a basis of 4½ annas per foot on exposed motion picture film; on unexposed film to 25% ad valorem.

Italy

Restrictions against the exhibition of dialog films in any language except Italian.

Jugoslavia

A quota just instituted provides that for every 1,000 meters of imported film up to the end of 1933 the importer is obliged to order or to produce and to put into traffic at least 70 meters and, after that date, 150 meters of domestic product. For failure to comply with these regulations fines are imposed that will cost the importer of an American film $275 for each print entered into Jugoslavia, plus a censoring fee of $118, provided the film is of the average length of 2,200 meters.

Mexico

Tax of 1% on gross receipts. Duties increased, effective April 22, 1932, from 8 pesos per kilo to 75 pesos on films and, on discs, from 1.20 pesos to 50 pesos per kilo.

Siam

Import duty increased from 30 to 100 satangs per 100 feet.

Spain

Imports of films now duitable as general merchandise at the rate of 25 gold pesetas per kilo net, on both positive and negative, and it is no longer possible to enter them under the former regime of temporary imports, except for educational purposes.

Sweden

Import duties on motion picture film increased from 80 crowns to 1,500 crowns per 100 kilos.

Union of South Africa

In addition to a primage duty previously imposed of 5% ad valorem, the Union of South Africa has imposed a customs surtax of 7½%, effective March 24, 1932, on the domestic value in gold on all imports, except specified goods for use by agricultural producers.

It is worth while to note that no retaliatory restrictions have been asked of our government by the American industry. The import duty exacted by the United States on motion pictures from abroad is negligible. Distributors and exhibitors alike welcome and use acceptable foreign motion picture product judging it solely upon its appeal to American audiences and upon its conformity to our standards of community suitability.

Foreign Opinion of American Pictures

The widespread and intensive trade restrictions instituted abroad against American motion pictures have, for the most part, been accompanied by commendable frankness on the part of proponents of the restrictions, but an occasional apologist has attemtepd, in defense to his own constituencies, to set up the premise that cultural or moral grounds were a consideration.

The wholesomeness of American picture entertainment standards compares so favorably with those of the world at large that this type of propaganda does not merit discussion. No excuse can be found for the instances in the United States where men who make a living by "riding" the movies have lent themselves to the dissemination of this impudently false charge.

When the British quota was being debated in Parliament, Colonel Josiah Wedgwood, Member of the Committee of the House of Commons, rose in answer to an attempt to disguise this trade restrictions as a moral measure. Colonel Wedgwood said:

> 'No, sir, that's all wrong. American morality on and off the films is quite all right. They are the most straight-laced people in the universe. Anything that gets put over in America we shan't criticize from the standpoint of morality.
> "I am shocked at some films. I actually have to walk out of the theatre sometimes, but they are not American films.
> "Leave me my American films."

Among the serious and responsible attempts to get at the truth of the effect of American films abroad was the exhaustive study conducted by the Indian Cinematograph Commission, appointed by resolution of the Government of India Home Department and reporting, in 1928, directly to the Indian Parliament.

"We are without exception," said the report, "satisfied that the majority of films certified for public exhibition in no way tend to demoralize the Indian public, or to bring western civilizaiton into contempt."

Dr. R. E. Diffendorfer, of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, made a wide personal investigation in the Far East. In his conclusions he publicly stated:

> "Much of the criticism against moving pictures from America is propaganda which is more or less economic in its origin. Indeed, there are motion picture producers who do not wish the American moving pictures to gain a foothold in the Far East. Trade rivalry is responsible for a good deal of this propaganda."

One more witness out of scores available serves to emphasize the true relation of American motion pictures to the body of worthy entertainment. Dr. Franz Koelsch, Industrial Phisician to the Bavarian Government, brought to America the following results of experimentation there:

> "We find in Germany that the increasing popularity of motion pictures leads more and more to the whole family taking its recreation as a unit. This is great progress from a sociological standpoint. Tests which we made of the psycological effect of American motion pictures brought us to the conclusion that the inevitability of punishment, as portrayed in plots under the safeguards voluntarily adopted by the producers in the United States, tend to make the screen a very positive deterrent from crime."

On the affirmative side of the question the League of Nations and many scientific bodies and individual scientists throughout the world have reached the conclusion that among the most potent agencies toward the eventual establishment of World Peace is the American motion picture. The vivid effect of War pictures and the deep impression wrought by such psychological studies as Broken Lullaby are in the profoundest sense servitors for Peace.

Far and above this particularized service the cosmopolitan nature of American motion pictures, drawing their scenes, their stories and their personnel from many lands, create a sense of unity as they satisfy a universal human need—the requirement for mental release through entertainment.

The American motion picture is an agency for international good-will and a worthy representative abroad of the United States. With every month of self-regulation and conscientious care at the studios its worth in this field increases.

Dr. Peter Snell Awarded SMPE Fellowship on Picture Study

Dr. Peter A. Snell of the University of Rochester has been awarded the fellowship of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which was made possible through a $1,500 donation of the late George Eastman.

Dr. Snell will shortly begin investigations which are expected to prove constructively valuable in motion pictures. He will study, in particular, certain phases of production and the measurement of the physiological processes involved in visual fatigue.

Exchanges to Aid Academy in Image Frame Campaign

General adoption by theatres throughout the United States and Canada during April and May of the new uniform image frame size for motion picture projection machines, established by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and outlined last week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, will mark one of the final steps in the technical transition from the silent motion picture to the talking film.

Improvements in the photographic appearance of the picture on the screen will result from the recommendations, made by the motion picture production industry's cooperative organization after two years of surveys and researches, Academy officials say. Hollywood studios benefit by a similar Academy uniform image frame size in use since February 15, which permits speedier cinematography and more flexible technique in talking picture making.

Theatre managers and projectionists will receive through their exchanges, detailed instruction leaflets covering the change-over to the new system. The leaflets will accompany the new picture releases, many of which already have been photographed through the new Academy uniform camera aperture. Uniformity in the size and shape of pictures as photographed in Hollywood and projected in theatres is attained by adoption of a uniform size for camera apertures and one for projectors. It is said that the adoption of a uniform image frame size will result in a closer coordination between the cameras of Hollywood and the projection equipment of the theatres, eliminating at one stroke expensive and troublesome variances in photographic and projection practices, which followed upon the coming of the sound device to motion pictures.

During the next few weeks, the exchanges are to distribute the instruction leaflets to every theatre in the United States and Canada, advising managers and projectionists how to get improved photographic quality from the uniform picture frame with which new product is now being released by the studios. In each exchange city, the individual exchanges are to cooperate in the distribution of the leaflets, so as to cover the field most efficiently and economically.

Big 4 Enters Third Year With Enlarged Program

The Big 4 Film Corporation, which on April 12th, 1930 released its first talking Western, has completed two years of independent production and distribution and is now formulating plans for the coming season. Beginning with a schedule of six westerns for 1930-1931, Big 4 will have 12 Westerns, 14 melodramas and possibly 2 "Specials" on its 1932-1933 program.

Burton King will continue as head of production on the West Coast, while John R. Freuler, president, of Big 4, will be assisted by Charles L. Glett, vice-president, in determining production policy and in directing exchange relations.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

THIS IS THE NIGHT

Paramount 80 minutes

THIS is not only "the night," but "the dough" as well, especially for the larger cities. Smaller towns may find the sledding a little hard but through clever merchandising—in which the picture offers dozens of fine slants—should get by to excellent returns. Truthfully speaking, this is one of the cleverest and most entertaining pictures of the year. One thing is certain: it redeems Lily Damita, who had fallen into a rut through her last few pictures.

If this title is not box office then what is? Combine that title with the names—Charlie Ruggles, Roland Young, Lily Damita and Thelma Todd—add some pep in your catch-lines, and, presto, you have a show that is worthy of plenty of raves and advance notices, to say nothing about the word-of-mouth talk that should follow each performance.

Audience value is swell. They should sit and giggle, and laugh out loud. They'll love the risque bits chiefly because they have been cleverly handled. But all in all they are almost sure to consider this one of the best pictures this season, as we have.

Selling slants are plentiful, especially if you get a screening in advance. Lacking that advantage you can pick up your press book from the exchange and get the general gist of the picture. The HERALD informative review will help considerably, too. As mentioned, the title, the cast and some spicy catch-lines, augmented and enhanced by a few of those thumb-nail mats used in the New York campaign, ought to get you one grand send-off to standing room only. We care not where your theatre is located, human nature is the same the world over; serve them a dish of something a wee bit naughty and they'll go for it in a big way.

Big towns and cities can spot it where they feel it will be OK, but small towns should play away from kid or Sunday showings.

If you don't do capacity with this one, do not blame the picture. It's a swell title, a swell cast and a swell picture.

LOVE STARVED

RKO Pathe 75 minutes

A MOST pleasing performance by Helen Twelvetrees places this one in the class of fairly good entertainment. We would like to report the same for young Eric Linden, but he overacts. Miss Twelvetrees is likable, convincing and in general carries most of the burden upon her shoulders.

The title can be used in conjunction with its original name, "Young Bride," and will help put it over in your selling campaign. The star should be sold even above the title if she has any sort of following in your community, and if not, it would pay to give her a strong plug just the same for future b.o. value. Any of the others in the cast that happen to be well-liked in your town can be played up accordingly. Arline Judge is OK for a rather unsympathetic role, but she handles it nicely.

Audience value will be stronger in the smaller towns than the big ones. The reason is clear enough. It's one of those pictures that will please the less sophisticated type of audience and they are generally found outside of the large cities. At any rate, while far from a "swell" picture, it ought to hold its own in most theatres.

Sell it sensibly. Plug Twelvetrees. Use plenty of appropriate catchlines to convey the type of story and to create human-interest appeal. It has lots of possibilities and many natural selling slants most logical and practical for merchandising. Make good use of them and back this picture up with a box office appeal campaign. You should get by nicely despite the opinions of big city critics who can easily find much to kick about.

Of no use on your kid days and safer all around if played away from a Sunday. But taking everything into consideration, this one is OK.

CARELESS LADY

Fox 67 minutes

A FAR from impressive affair that may slip by in the smaller spots. The idea has been more than overdone on the screen and most times it lacks sincerity and conviction.

The title is a sort of neutral affair. Whatever way you surround it will be the theme of your selling campaign. You need not necessarily lack for ideas to build onto this title. "Careless Lady" can be twisted about to mean a lot of good box office things. Names are none too strong but you'll have to fall back on them as well to bolster up your merchandising. Joan Bennett and John Boles constitute the two important ones. The rest, we feel, are purely incidental.

Audience strength is the same as the title: neutral. Some will find it fairly good entertainment while others may chalk it up as an evening wasted. But if they get a swell surrounding program of classy short features, it may round out your show to the point where they will more than get their money's worth.

Of no use for kids or Sundays, but our suggestion is that you play it somewhere midweek on your short-run spot and back it with as smart a campaign as a weak picture requires.

Comedy with Music

A comedy, adapted from a cleverly sophisticated play of Avery Hopwood, with dialogue of sparkling comic nature, and the consummate activities of Roland Young, Charles Ruggles in particular, kept an audience at the New York Paramount in various and assorted conditions of chuckles, laughs and genuine, unmistakable enjoyment through its entire length.

The music is strictly for background purposes, as are the pretentious Venetian scenes, moonlight on the canals, a strong and tenor-voiced Italian gondolier, all done without intrusion, rather in keeping with the theme, which is almost of a musical-comedy nature.

There is little enough to the story, but there is meant to be little. It is light, but the audience indicated clearly enough that it is enjoyable, as well. Roland Young, bachelor, and wealthy Parisian, is in love with Thelma Todd, statuesque and blonde, who is at the same time married to Cary Grant, new Paramount player, who has height and looks, in a dark fashion, and who happens to be a famed javeline thrower, much to Young's discomfiture when he suddenly walks in on the two at Miss Todd's apartment.

To cover the planned trip to Venice, Young enlists the aid of friend Ruggles, who has spoiled the situation by unwittingly "tipping off" Grant to the state of affairs. Ruggles hires Lily Damita to act as Young's wife to throw Grant off the trail, and they all pack off to Venice, canals, moonlight and comedy.

Grant begins to fall for Miss Lily, and incidentally, both Ruggles and Young begin to do the same thing. When Grant pays attention to Miss Damita Young is angered at both Grant and Ruggles, and Miss Todd decides that maybe she would like to keep tight hold on Grant after all. As Miss Damita, therefore, gives up the foolish effort and takes a gondola toward the station and Paris, Young comes to a realization and pursues, via another gondola. They meet and are left against a moonlit background. The cast handles itself well, it was generally considered, with Ruggles and Young drawing continuous laughter via their lines.

Life Goes On

Another Lonsdale Tale

(Seen in London)

Just another of those smart films, is this Lonsdale story, first titled "Sorry You've Been Troubled," and then changed by Paramount executives at the last moment.

It was found entertaining stuff, though considered not quite up to the standard of excellence of some other of the Paramount Elstree product. Lonsdale's work relies on talk.

There is an amusing motif here, although a dead man is found concealed in an hotel. Murder is suspected, but the end finds us believing that if we had had shares in the man's companies we too would have desired to keep quiet the fact that he had died suddenly—even if we too had to risk the suspicion of having murdered him.

Hugh Wakefield, with several leading roles to his credit, has his first star chance here as a silly detective. The supporting cast is for the most part good. Elsie Randolph, first class comedy stage star, in this, her first film, shows up well as a comic phone exchange girl. Jack Raymond has made the best of his camera chances, and the general scope in story and settings has been turned to the best account possible, it was indicated.

Produced by Paramount British Productions. Directed by Jack Raymond. Photographed by F. A. Young. Running time, 78 minutes.

Love Starved

(RKO Pathe)

Drama

Adapted from the play, "Young Bride," by Hugh Stanilaus Stange, RKO offers a dramatic effort, with Helen Twelvetrees and Eric Linden as the youngsters who fail to make a go of a sudden marriage until a good beating brings Linden out of the clouds and restores his common sense.

The film, atmospherically, is drab, with little comedy to lighten the story, which, in setting, is limited to a public library, a boarding house room, and a cheap taxi dance hall.

Linden, bluffing youngster with much conversation about "big business deals," meets Miss Twelvetrees when Polly Walters, with whom she works, takes her on a "blind date." Miss Twelvetrees, orphaned, works in a library presided over by Blanche Frederici. The girl, alone and lonely, is captivated by dashing young Linden, and the two are suddenly married.

Linden continues his bluff, promising big deals, which somehow never materialize, until Miss Twelvetrees is forced to return to the library to support them. She suddenly discovers that she will soon have a baby. and Linden, stunned, finds himself back in his old haunts, drinking, dancing and gambling. He hears of a dancing contest at the hall, from Arline Judge, old flame, and decides to enter with her as his partner, planning to use the prize money to meet the impending expense. Miss Judge had merely been playing Linden for a good thing, however, and succeeds in separating him from most of the money he had won gambling.

Miss Twelvetrees, hearing of the dance affair, breaks away from Linden in a stormy scene and plans to take poison as the only way out of a difficult situation. Linden, seeking to retrieve some of the money from Miss Judge, becomes engaged in a brawl at the hall with Cliff Edwards and others of the hangers-on. He is most competently and completely thrashed, and thereby becomes, we are given to understand, reformed. Melodramatically, he returns home contrite, exactly as Miss Twelvetrees is raising the glass of poison to her lips. Reconciliation concludes the story.

Roscoe Ates presents a moment or two of his stuttering humor, as the speakeasy bartender.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed by William Seiter. Screen play by Garrett Fort. From stage play by Hugh Stanislaus Stange. Art director, Carroll Clark. Film editor, Joseph Kane. Release date, April 8, 1932. Running time, 76 minutes.

But the Flesh is Weak

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

Robert Montgomery and C. Aubrey Smith, as the inpecunious son and likewise inpecunious widower-father, respectively, offer a picture of two English gentlemen, one trying to pay the rent by memories and the dinners at wealthy homes they represent; the other impetuous, young and on the trail of a wife, but a wife with money. Father is very much in favor of the idea.

An audience at the New York Capitol seemed to enjoy the film, which relies on rather smart dialogue and the dashing love-making of Montgomery for the most part. Comment conceded that the work of Montgomery, Smith, Nora Gregor, with whom Montgomery falls in love, was perhaps the best, with minor parts well taken care of respectively.

Montgomery meets Heather Thatcher, daughter of a Duke, and possessing much money. Montgomery almost falls, until he comes upon Miss Gregor, whom he thinks is wealthy. As a matter of fact she is a penniless widow, but by the time he finds that out, Montgomery is too far gone. His undisputable frankness in proposals and love-making supplied much of the amusement for the audience.

Miss Gregor turns a deaf ear, being engaged to smug, most English Edward Everett Horton, but Montgomery carries the fortress by storm and she succumbs to his wiles. Meanwhile, however, father has ideas of making a bit of loose change and at the same time providing a bit of a nest-egg for the couple. But the cards run wrong, with the result that father is forced to sign a check, worthless of course, for several thousands of dollars, redeemable at the bank next morning. He is about to commit suicide that night, but son stops him, shows him the error of his ways, and engaged himself to the ducal daughter, Miss Thatcher, breaking with Miss Gregor. The check is covered.

The latter, at a house party, hears the news and is about to rush off with a Russian prince, Nils Asther, when Montgomery tells Miss Thatcher the reason, is given "God-speed," plays the caveman with Miss Gregor after telling her the truth, and she runs after him to conclude. Incidentally, Smith has married a wealthy old-flame to make sure there will be no financial difficulties in the future.

Probation

Drama

Moderately received at a New York neighborhood situation, this independent effort centers its attention upon a rather simple story, which was considered in the main to have been well executed in treatment and satisfactorily performed by the players, including John Darrow, Sally Blane, Clara Kimball Young, J. Farrell MacDonald, Eddie Phillips, chiefly.

Sally Blane becomes to an extent bored with her more or less routine existence, and her engagement to a not-so-perfect character, and goes to her uncle's courtroom for diversion, if nothing else. The judge-uncle is MacDonald. Eddie Phillips has been unpleasantly engaging the attentions of Darrow's sister, with the result that Darrow roundly trounces him and is haled into court. Uncle MacDonald seeks to occupy his niece's time and puts Darrow on probation in the custody, so to speak, of Miss Blane.

Before the probation period draws to a conclusion, Darrow is more than a little interested in the future of his custodian. Unfortunately, Miss Blane does not reciprocate, going ahead with her preparation for the impending marriage. Only one day before the wedding date, however, Miss Blane exercises the women's prerogative, and she and Darrow conclude the film together.

Presented by George R. Batcheller. Distributed by Chesterfield. Directed and edited by Richard Thorpe. Story by Arthur Hoerl. Adaptation and dialogue by Edward T. Lowe. Photographed by M. A. Anderson. Sound, Pete Clark. Release date, April 1, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

(Ufa)

Operetta

Melodiously light and more or less engaging is this Viennese operetta, which is said to have gained some little note in the Teutonic capitals of Europe. Emmerich Kalman, noted for his musical comedy efforts in Europe and in America, has here turned his attention to the screen and Ufa, to picturize this particular work. He is noted as having had much to do with the scenario, text and of course the music of the piece.

A steadily crowded house at the intimate Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York gave special evidence of having enjoyed the attractiveness and voice of Kathe von Nagy, as the costume designer who suddenly becomes the leading player in the operetta composed by the Prince of Perusa, played personably and with much charm by Willy Fritsch, who also is possessed of a reasonably secure singing voice. Otto Wallburg extracted numerous laughs with his portly and excitable portrayal of the director of the Perusa theatre, where the operetta of the prince is to be presented.

Accidentally Miss Nagy meets the prince when she brings the costumes for the play to Perusa, in the more or less inconsequential story, and they are immediately attracted to one another. Intrigue among the retainers of the prince develops, in light musical comedy style, when his minister plans to use Miss Nagy as a foil to extract the Prince's signature for certain documents more or less of state.

The Prince invites Miss Nagy to dine with him in princely style, but she is so beseiged with intrigue that she flares up and walks out on the Prince in high dudgeon. She can afford to, since she is now the star of Perusa. She is under the impression that the Prince had been the source of the annoying trickery.

After he pursues her disappearing train, and captures her from the observation platform, occurs the final scene, with Prince and impending Princess walking back down the railroad track arm-in-arm. More than a little comedy, and melodious song numbers were conceded to have been chiefly responsible for the patrons' enjoyment of the film.

Produced and distributed by Ufa. Directed by Reinhold Schunzel. Supervised by Gunther Stapenhorst. Story by Emmerich Pressburger and Reinhold Schunzel. Photographed by Fritz Arno Wagner. Sound, Herman Fritzsching. Music by Emmerich Kalman. Release date, April 13, 1932. Running time, 82 minutes.

SHORTS

Duck Hunt

(Columbia)

Mickey, Of Course

Mickey Mouse, the animated film star, is sent by Walt Disney on a duck hunt, but the ducks make a monkey out of the mouse, as well as his droop-eared hound. Mickey pursues the ducks, then the ducks pursue Mickey and the hound, and it is all done in that amusing animated style which has made Mickey Mouse what he is today. The originality of the Disney output is again apparent.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Running With Paddock

Appealing

Charles Paddock of the flying feet herein indicates how the track expert utilizes feet, arms and brain in accomplishing startling marks of speed on the cinder path. Slow motion better records the action, and a bit of comedy is injected, with Paddock and a fat man racing for a fleeing trolley car. Interesting to anyone with a flair for sports. There is as well general appeal in the intimate action of a notable figure in the sports world. One of the Christy Walsh All-American Sports series.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Cheaper to Rent

Amusing

Two clumsy carpenters rather amusingly succeed in making a total wreck of a building they are attempting to complete. A neighborhood theatre audience in New York had an enjoyable time during the comedy number.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Sportslants

Sporting Skill

Ted Husing takes his audience for a glance or two at Tony Canzoneri, lightweight boxing champion of the world. Tony goes through his paces in an exhibition bout with his sparring partners, while Husing points out that which is worth looking at. Ralph Greenleaf, world pocket billiard champion, shows how it is done with cue and ivory. Interesting, skillful exhibitions.—Running time, 8 minutes.

County Hospital

By All Means

Stan Laurel pays a visit to Oliver Hardy, who is in the hospital, with his leg suspended on pulleys and heavily swathed in bandages. The trouble begins and the enjoyment of the audiences should begin when Laurel attempts to crack a nut with the weight on Hardy's legharness. Hardy sits on a hypodermic needle and then tries to drive Laurel home. One of those sure-fire stunts with the dodging flivver, which finally folds up like an accordion and runs around in circles concludes the film amusingly. A group at the projection room attested to the short's laugh-provoking possibilities.—Running time, 20 minutes.

A Few Laughs

Another of Eddie Buzzell's bedtime yarns about nothing in particular, but fairly amusing in any case. A neighborhood audience extracted a certain amount of enjoyment from the short. Buzzell is before the microphone, as usual, doubling for the voices of the characters in the story he recounts.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Niagara Falls

(RKO Pathe)

Fair

One of the Gay Girls series of comedies, and one which is fairly successful. A bit of slapstick, mostly at the expense of one of the girls, is moderately suitable. June MacCloy, blonde and rather able in singing, leads her two pals in attempting to get a job in a music store. They nearly succeed, until the boss tries to kiss one of them. June gets a job singing over the radio and is sufficiently successful to marry the lad who was taken by her voice. The short is considerably weakened by a flat, punchless conclusion.—Running time, 20 minutes.

What A Life

Amusing

A cartoon number featuring Flip the Frog and his buddy. They play the accordion and violin on the street, but the money is so slow coming in that they pawn their instruments and then give the proceeds to another street player. They find themselves in trouble in the apartment of an officer of the law. Little dialogue, but accompanying music thoroughout the short.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Cole Case

Murderer's Machinations

Entertainingly told is this S. S. Van Dine murder mystery. One Fred Cole, bent on the collection of insurance, hires a secretary, who is his double. Reporting to the police that he has been receiving threatening letters, he kills his secretary, and poses as his own brother in an effort to collect insurance. The law puts its hand on his shoulder as he is about to board a boat for France.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Love Pains

(MGM)

Numerous Laughs

The Boy Friends are usually good for a laugh or two, and in this instance are good for several. Two soda jerkers are plenty angered when their respective girls fall for one and the same newcomer, David Rollins. They plan a plot, masquerading as his wife and the "girl's" father. Overheard, a counter plot is planned and Rollins is tipped off. The two lads are in for it and they get it, all very amusingly.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Spreading Sunshine

Fair

The nagging pair, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth in real life, try to do their good turn but find it rather expensive. At the Sunshine Mission, they find a man, and take him home to act as butler. During their absence, he invites his friends, until the wild party is broken up by the arrival of Mr. Norworth. A general battle results in the "guests' " forcible ejection. Only a fair comedic effort.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Stealing Home

(RKO Pathe)

Amusing

James Gleason, manager of the championship team of Rufftown, leads his team into the big game with the West Side Horrors, while his star pitcher, Harry Gribbon, is reduced to a state of intoxication by the crooked barber. Gribbon arrives in time to win with a home run when he throws the bat over the fence. It is baseball as it has never been played, and as such is amusing, if more or less nonsense.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Up On the Farm

Just Fair

Comparatively little to be called amusing or entertaining in this effort, which concerns a rich New Yorker who builds a farm on the roof of a high penthouse in order to satisfy the terms of the will through which he became wealthy, that he live on a farm. The setting gives an excuse for musical and dance numbers. An audience at the Strand in New York was not especially enthused.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Beau and Arrows

Juvenile Enjoyment

Younsters and more than a few oldsters should extract a reasonable amount of enjoyment from this Oswald the Rabbit cartoon. Oswald is leading a caravan across the desert when it is attacked by Indians. He takes to flight but returns to fight, and what is used for ammunition is a product of the cartoonist's fertile imagination.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Sea Legs

Fair Enough

A curious mixture of musical comedy acts and choruses and the comedy of a man who seeks to evade his wife, with disastrous conclusions, is the subject matter of this fair short. The man sees his wife off, then, unknown to her, boards another boat leaving at the same time. Unfortunately, she becomes confused and boards the boat on which her husband is having a high time. During the trip, the entertainment comes in the form of varied musical comedy snatches.—Running time, 19 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts for the calendar week ended April 16, 1932, totaling $2,142,914, showed a decrease of $119,667, from the previous calendar week, ended April 9, when a total of $2,262,581 was recorded from 180 theatres in 30 cities. In the later week 178 houses in 30 cities are noted. During the April 16 period six new low individual house record figures were established, and no new high figures, which compares with one new "high" and five new "lows" for the preceding seven-day period.

The Motion Picture Herald,
"Better Theatres" Division,
1790 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Dear Sirs,

By the present and the last mail I have received numerous letters from your side in response to my enquiry addressed to your goodselves for which please accept my best thanks.

Here I must admit that your Motion Picture Herald, "Better Theatres" Division is of greater help to me in my new work than any other papers and journals.

Please note that owing to the present rate of Exchange and 35% Customs Duty I am unable to order out many of my requirements from your side yet I am glad I have made some very good arrangements with Messrs. Western Electric Co, and other American concerns of my side.

I shall be obliged if you will kindly enlighten me on the definition of the word "ROXY" and its origin.

Thanking you once again for your kind co-operation and hoping the continuance of the same.

I remain, Dear Sirs,

Yours faithfully,

H.D.Wellington

GOOD SHOWMEN GO LONG ON SHORTS

By TERRY RAMSAYE

THE short subject is the longest story in the annals of the motion picture. The short subject is at once also the father and the stepchild of the industry, geneologically the father, economically the stepchild.

The motion picture was born a short and found its career first as a headline novelty in vaudeville and after a few prospering months became a filler. In fact, the standard unit of length, the reel of approximately a thousand feet, was established by the time allotted to the motion picture as a vaudeville turn.

The motion picture, gaining a theatre of its own, became a show of shorts and presently with the rise of the feature drama outgrew its filler lengths.

But the heritage of that earlier day remains in the measure which the industry has tended to put upon the shorter picture. The short has been treated since like the stepchild of tradition—within the industry.

The public, however, knows nothing of this. The audience which pays for its seats is no less interested in amusement for the forty per cent of its time spent seeing shorts than in the sixty per cent devoted to the feature.

Incidentally the most famous man in the world, the most famous actor of this or any world, and of this or any age, Mr. Charles Chaplin, achieved it all and brought more money to the box office than any other player in all the history of the business, in shorts. He made his screen debut and built his unparalleled success, for himself and for the screen, right through the fevered days of the origin and rise of the feature drama.

It is in shorts, almost exclusively, if one excepts the feature length expeditionary pictures, that the motion picture has opportunity to deal with the world of interesting facts and with the glamour, romance, adventure and excitement which is not to be expressed in the fiction of drama.

The newsreel, probably the most cheaply bought unit of screen entertainment, in relation to its cost and value, is responsible for creating and maintaining a proportion of the public goodwill and interest in the motion picture tremendously out of ratio to its appreciation within the industry.

Also it is only in the making of shorts, strangely enough, that this conservative, self-playing industry of the motion picture ever really permits itself flights of fancy and dashes of bold experimentation—elements that really ought to be considered the essence of showmanship.

In my personal observation, including not a little experience as a producer and sometimes purveyor and distributor of shorts, the better showmen of these United States know and appreciate considerably more of the importance of shorts than the august corporations and their sales managers and salesmen.

Shorts are in the main weakly sold and poorly serviced.

The more aggressive and generally successful showmen are those who think best of the shorts and do the most with them. It takes a diligent and aggressive showman in these days of block and volume selling to exercise choice and intelligent selection. He has to fight with the machinery of the industry and its inertias to get a chance to do the best for his audience with the short product.

It is of interest, too, to glance over the policies of the exhibitors who have made notable records to see how much attention they have ever given to the short component of their program. Name a leading exhibitor and you are almost sure to be pointing to an enthusiast on the short component of the show—Roxy, McCormick, Jameyson, Franklin, just to name a few offhand. And observe elsewhere in these pages the boldfaced remark of Fred S. Meyer that "Nobody ever walked out on a newsreel." In the following pages of The Round Table the showmen tell their own story.

It's a shortsighted policy that gives the shorts the short end of the deal. All the real showmen know better. They go long on the shorts.

THIS TIME YOU SAID IT!

EVERY line of material used in this special issue is from the men who buy, book, exploit or otherwise sell the short features to the public.

You're going to like the way we've tackled and treated the entire matter from start to finish. You'll like the humorous slants as well as the more serious comment. You'll enjoy the digs as well as the boosts and most certainly you will find that all in all this issue should prove not alone interesting but mighty helpful too.

We've made a special effort to cover a lot of territory and in so doing we succeeded in getting important articles from the house manager in the different sized towns and cities as well as the advertising chiefs of the circuits. After all, who are better qualified to discuss short features than the men in the field who must capitalize on the value of such subjects and make them add dollars to the box office.

If you find this edition interesting and helpful in but a small measure then our efforts have not been in vain. To those who responded so cheerfully in furnishing the material we can only express our sincerest thanks and appreciation.

BROADWAY CUT-OUT!

LEWIS
LAUREL & HARDY

Pictured here is a six-foot, full-color cut-out used by the Capitol Theatre, New York City, to advertise the well-known comedy team, Laurel & Hardy. This cut-out is so designed that it may be used over and over again for each release. It is only necessary to strip in the alloted space the name of the current offering.

Thanks to "Hank" Harold!

Many thanks to "Hank" Harold, of the Warner Theatre publicity staff, Cleveland, Ohio, for the most attractive art work he forwarded for use in this short subject section of the Round Table Club. However, it arrived too late to be set up and about the only gesture we can make at this late hour is to assure this enterprising showman that we fully appreciate his efforts and that the material will certainly make its appearance in a forthcoming issue.

Kids on Vacation Soon

Many of our Club members at this time of the year are lining up plans to hold as much kiddie trade as possible during the Summer months when the youngsters' thoughts are centered on sports, swimming and other games, rather than the theatre. Some have found that the booking of a good serial will keep up their interest. Cards bearing punch marks for the several episodes are generally issued, with the last one good for a free admission, providing the holder has attended consecutive performances.

PLAY A FEATURETTE IN PLACE OF EXTRA PICTURE, SAYS COHEN

With the thought in mind that the double feature is daily becoming more and more of an evil, Ben M. Cohen, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Hazleton, Pa., and a seasoned showman in every sense of the word, theorizes to the extent of offering a suggestion which would considerably alleviate the present suffering of both exhibitor and patron; and, incidentally, provide a market for many deserving short features.

"Apply the novelette to the talkies," says Cohen. Ditch the extra feature and replace it with a featurette to run from 30 to 40 minutes. He calls attention to the fact that the dramatic playlet proved a highly successful vehicle for a number of movie stars who were out to regain some lost popularity and would like to know a better way to rebuild the box office value of certain players, than to star each one of them in a featurette.

It is safe to state that each one of the stars whose value at the box office has decreased still has a distinct following. This following can be counted upon to patronize the offering. Played as a featurette and billed as one, would not keep away those who have unfavorably reacted to seeing them in a full length feature. And as Cohen states, there's many a feature that's sold as a feature which could be trimmed down to featurette length and not lose anything but its dragging qualities.

Basing arrangement of a program on an average of two hours running time for most houses, he suggests something along the following: feature picture, 70 minutes; newsreel and trailer, 12 minutes; featurette, 30 minutes; cartoon, 8 minutes. That will total exactly 120 minutes.

There can be no doubt but that the double feature policy has been gaining ground for the past several years, particularly in the highly competitive sections of the larger cities, and the short subjects have consequently been forced into the discard. There can be room for little more than a few news shots and trailers shown when two feature length pictures are played.

That brings the situation down to the point of whether the two-feature program is entirely acceptable to patrons. How many managers in the heavily populated neighborhood sections know the true answer to this question? The price of admission to see "Two Big Features" these days is certainly reasonable and the average patron is apt to more or less be tolerant of quality when made to feel that it is a bargain bill. Maybe he or she would enjoy a more diversified show, consisting of a feature, a two-reel comedy, a full-length newsreel and other short numbers; but, while this thought may be in mind, it's considerable of an effort to hunt out the manager and tell him about it.

Cohen's suggestion is, of course, directed at Hollywood, for it's a production problem. Hollywood, however, is practical enough to follow the trend of public taste in entertainment. If enough showmen hold that it would be advisable to produce the "featurette," let them apply the necessary pressure and we venture to state that constructive results will be attained.

Warner Bros.,

Gentlemen:

To say that your Vitaphone shorts are by far the best shorts on the market today is putting it mildly.

You have in your present 1931-32 group every variety, and the showman that cannot arrange his programs with a variety of this type certainly cannot do it with any other company's.

As you know, I use in the neighborhood of twenty-one shorts from different companies each week, and it is not hard for me to tell which are the most outstanding.

GOLD IN THEM THAR SHORTS, SAYS NANCE; HAS FOOTBALL PLAN

Programs can be well balanced and box office receipts increased through the proper booking and exploitation of short subjects, believes F. D. Nance, general manager of Hall Industries Theatres, Beeville, Texas.

He has often found that a good short could be made to stand shoulder to shoulder with a feature as a box office attraction, and at times has even featured a "name"-short over the rest of the program.

An instance of over-billing a short occurred several months ago when he played his first Bing Crosby two-reel subject. On this occasion he gave Crosby top billing in all newspaper ads and programs; used mailing lists for letter that featured Crosby; stretched a 40-foot banner across the street in front of theatre with copy, "Bing Crosby—Radio's Newest and Latest Sensation in 'I Surrender, Dear,'" and tied up with a local dealer to have Crosby records played on an electrical phonograph in the lobby. Provision was also made for sale of the records.

Very little mention was given the feature in order to test out the strength of Crosby and it was found that his following was strong enough to bring the patrons in. In view of this his next two-reeler is awaited with interest. Other comedies, featuring Charlie Chase, Laurel and Hardy, Andy Clyde and other well known "names," have also been successfully sold along with the feature attraction.

Incidentally, here's a good idea from Nance that can be filed away for action early next fall when Round Tablers will start campaigning for customers during the football season.

Even before the baseball season comes to an end thousands of newspapers in every section of the country will devote column after column of publicity to this great sport. The radio will soon follow with play-by-play accounts of the great games. That will be the time to get busy on that good series of football subjects, which we will assume will be ready for the occasion.

Nance believes that such subjects can be merchandised through the schools, and the first step in his plan is to secure the cooperation and sponsorship of the local high school coach. Let him select the series that he wants and then book the subjects for eight consecutive weeks, the theatre to distribute books of coupon tickets to the entire eight shows at a small reduction in price. The books are to be sold through the schools and a percentage of the receipts turned over to the athletic fund for the purchase of equipment. Every school, particularly in the smaller cities, is always clamoring for additional funds for the many expenses attached to the turning out of a squad of players.

As the result of such a tie-up, the theatre has several hundred boosters and salesmen combing its territory to sell tickets, bringing a forcible message not only to schoolroom, but to practically every home in the city. Also, do not underestimate the vast amount of good will to be obtained through a medium of this kind. It goes without saying that the newspapers will cooperate and the net result will be many extra dollars in the box office on a series that otherwise would be just a "filler" because of technical nature.

In addition to football shorts, he believes there are many other series of shorts that also have strong merchandising angles, such as "Paramount Pictorials," "Screen Souvenirs," Ripley's "Believe It or Not," "Strange As It Seems," and the ever-popular cartoon series. All these will go a long way toward building a diversified and well balanced program, because these reels are interesting, novel, and often unusual as to shots.

It is Nance's strong belief that much money has been lost in this industry through careless booking of short subjects; hence, he often spends more time booking shorts than features. When these are set he doesn't just consider them as fillers, but as each and every one a picture that contains some angle that can be made to fill some otherwise empty seats. With that thought in mind he has brought the short subject into a prominent spot in all programs.

MICKEY MOUSE PARADE IN MILWAUKEE!

More than 3,000 members of the Fox-Midwesco Mickey Mouse Club, Milwaukee, Wis., took part in a huge parade, despite the fact that it rained on the day the celebration was staged. Just take a slant at that parade! As far as we can see by the original photo, the columns extend many blocks down the street, evidence, certainly, that Mickey is well thought of in Milwaukee. Floats and banners marked the different divisions of youngsters.

A SHOWMAN DISCUSSES THE SHORT-COMINGS OF THE SHORT FEATURE!

Here Is an Intelligent View of What Is Wrong with the Present Short Subjects and Newsreels! Do You Agree?

By

H. E. JAMEYSON

Mid-West Theatres

Are Your Reactions the Same as Jameyson's in Connection with the Shortcomings of the Present Day Type of Shorts?

In an issue devoted almost entirely to a discussion about the Short Feature we honestly felt that it would appear much too one-sided if we dwelt altogether on the merchandising and exploitation of this all-important matter.

It remained for H. E. Jameyson, a showman of wide experience in all branches of the business, to give us some frank opinions about what is NOT all right with short features and newsreels.

His comments are right to the point and should command the attention and respect of the entire industry. Executives as well as showmen ought to carefully digest every word of this unusual article and then analyze their own feelings on the matter, especially the portions that may tend to improve the quality of these subjects which are so badly needed to round out a perfect program.

We wonder how many other showmen have given this matter as much thought as Jameyson. How many have really stopped to think about short subjects and newsreels. Whether they stand ready to accept such program builders as a matter of fact or a matter of importance. Think it over brother showmen; it all comes under the heading of entertainment.

Thank you "H.E." for your invaluable assistance in helping us make this issue constructive as well as educational.

"CHICK"

SHORT subjects. The step children of an industry gone crazy with sound!

Well do I remember the days when an irate patron might greet the manager with a cold deadly light in his eyes: "Where was the newsreel? That's what I came to see." Probably the patron was indulging himself in a white lie. He didn't come solely to see the news, but he did miss it.

How long has it been since you have heard a complaint about a missing newsreel? How long since you have had some one explain that "the news is always the best part of the show for me"? Come to think of it I haven't heard that statement in a long, long time. Other managers tell me the same thing.

What's the Matter?

I suspect we've sacrificed news for sound. There's no news in hearing Margaret Sanger discuss the birth control via the sound track. She was doing it before the photo electric cell was invented. Seeing her . . . hearing her . . . may be interesting, but it isn't news! Neither is half the material that constitutes the present so-called newsreel.

You can't rush a ton of batteries, a mile or two of cable, a truck of electrical gadgets to a three alarm fire and expect to get anything but the dying embers of what might have been a news picture. Sound made the newsreel articulate but made it slow, cumbersome, immobile. It was not a fair exchange. The newsreel lost its potency.

Turn now to some of the other shorts. Can any speech of mine or of any other person add to the beauty of Yosemite or Yellowstone? Isn't is futile to accompany these with a "lecture"? Isn't such painting of the lily irritating to the person who would revel in the silent magnificence of these scenes.

And then there's comedy. Here's where sound has had the most stultifying affect. Has there, of a sudden, been created some immutable law forbidding pantomime, the oldest and most popular of the dramatic arts? The inscrutable will of filmdon has apparently ordained that sound shall be the bait by which the latent laugh is to be lured from its hiding place. What a ghastly mistake!

Listen To Your Patrons!

I can already hear the chorus of protesting voices. I will be severely . . . perhaps profanely . . . advised that pantomime still rules comedy. I will be told that sound in comedy is but an adjunct not the whole. But . . . go to a theatre . . . listen to the patrons and not to the screen. The comedian provokes a laugh. In front of you a man turns to his companion, "What did he say?" By that time the comedian is speaking again. The answer is never given. All about you the audience is straining to hear. The spontaneous laugh that was generated is suddenly hushed. The movie audience has long since learned the implacable projection machinery takes no account of human emotions. Their yarn must be spun at the rate of 90 R.P.M's. The dullards, the slow thinkers, the hard-of-hearing find the pace too swift. The effort too great.

A Strange Contrast!

Contrast this with the old days of the silent movie when we built a mammoth business upon our ability to deliver entertainment without demanding any effort upon the part of our patrons. Only rarely in these days of sound does a theatre throb and swell with the screams and guffaws of a hilarious audience. Our laughter is shortened and restrained. Our entertainment is lessened in direct proportion to the effort we must put forth to contain ourselves and to listen.

"Well," you say, "if this is true of short reels isn't it also true of longer features?" Indeed it is. More than the leaders of this industry suspect. But it is particularly true in short subjects because of their brevity; because they are expected to be diverting rather than dramatic or informative; and because they are not given the careful intelligent production that is lavished upon most of the longer productions.

In the days of silent pictures the cartoons were "slipping" rapidly. In these days they are the most popular short. Why? Because no effort is required of the spectator. All we need to do is lean back in our seats and commence to grin and giggle.

Every seasoned trouper knows that a gesture often robs a speech of its effectiveness. He knows if he moves a hand, the spectator's attention will be distracted and the words will be lost.

An ambidexterous person is rare. So also is the person whose faculties permit him to take equal cognizance of sound and scene. The movie patron has been nourished on a simple diet of action comedy. In the course of time we became masters of pantomime. Now we're garnishing our efforts with superfluous speeches and are thus putting a burden on our patrons who are unable to corordinate their senses of sight and hearing.

This particular limitation of the human being shows up very conspicuously in his reaction to comedy.

Scientists tell us that a great percentage of people have defective hearing. The estimate varies from as low as 12½ per cent to as high as 30 per cent. It goes without saying these people . . . without realizing why . . . are not deriving a full measure of pleasure out of our offerings.

Solve the Problem!

The inarticulate millions have told us that something is wrong with our entertainment. They have conveyed the message to us by their absence from our theatres. They have not told us what or why, because they do not themselves know. The movies do not lure them as they once did. These simple folks . . . and after all most of us are simple . . . seek effortless entertainment. We are not giving it to them. We make them look sharply. We make them listen hard. We make them coordinate their auditory and optical faculties to the end that the message conveyed from the screen may eventually reach their brain. We make them "shush" promptly. We make them sit quietly. We're making our patrons work!

Is this an attack on "talking pictures" as such? No. It's a plea for a more sane and intelligent use of sound. We can dispense with a tremendous amount of the dialogue that now fills our pictures, especially our short subjects. The supplementary short pictures should be interludes in the "task" of looking and listening to the feature. They should be "vacations" from the "work" entailed in keeping up with piece de resistance of our program. They should provide our patrons with a "let down" from the unconscious effort of eighty minutes of continuous looking and listening.

When we learn the great bulk of a theatre's patronage is temperamentally and constitutionally unable to adjust itself to protracted periods of mental, optical and auditory alertness we will be better able to cope with the problem of declining attendance.

THE SUPPORTING SHOW!

Chet Miller of Cheyenne Says Much Can Be Done to Improve the Show Through "Builders"!

HOW many times have you sat down to a fine dinner, of maybe roast young turkey, and all the trimmings. And thoroughly enjoyed it because everything was on the table to make it a "perfect" meal. But what a dud it would be had your host or hostess overlooked the salad, gravy, mashed potatoes and the desert (just served you dry turkey), with maybe a whole cucumber for desert. You would think to yourself how much they could learn about serving a meal. How many other times have you went to a cafe to enjoy a repast, and was served a very disappointing selection of food, and then left the place feeling pretty good, because the desert was delicious to such an extent that you forgot how poor the main meal was itself.

Up to the Manager!

Every manager of a theatre is a host or hostess, and is catering to a finicky public, all of whom have different tastes. But must take your menu as you serve it. So do you serve your programs with this thought in mind. Or do you run along with the false impression that any old thing will do for trimmings, providing the main dish is okay? We should all give more thought to our program, and see that we have the proper shorts that will please, and that they are suitable to balance the feature. What a crime it would be to book a morbid two-reel detective story, an uninteresting travelogue, and a poor sport review with a feature like "Frankenstein." Or just as bad to waste your best comedy with a feature like POLITICS. The selection of your short program is VERY IMPORTANT, and should be given as much, if not more, thought than feature bookings. A poor feature can be made much poorer, or much better, according to the short subjects that are booked with it.

Advertise Your Shorts

Give them good space in your newspaper ads. On your marquee, and in your lobby. Let your patrons know what you are serving for trimmings. (Many an appetite has been created by a sign in a window, "Fresh Strawberry Short Cake Today.") To many of your patrons the short subjects are the best part of the program. And many a time a patron has walked away from your box office, after being informed that they would miss a certain short subject if they went in now. Many a time a good short subject could easily share newspaper space with the feature on a 50-50 basis. Many a time patrons could be sent out of the theatre with a GOOD taste in their mouth, by running a good short subject after a poor feature, that would otherwise send them out grumbling.

Every manager knows the short subjects that draw, and please. Don't hide this information under your hat. Watch your newsreel advance bulletins. What a chance to score on a famous kidnapping case or some important event or personality. How many foreign-born patrons would come to your theatre if they knew that a travelogue of their own country was to be shown. How the football fans would turn out if they know that pictures of some famous team were on your screen. How the golfers would come if they were properly informed as to the merits of a series of pictures showing golf instruction.

Watch your shorts subjects at the preview or your first show. Maybe there might be something in them that you could capitalize on. Recently the writer ran a musical short, and recognized a young man who sang a number, and who was from a neighboring town. We immediately notified the manager in this neighboring town of the fact. He booked this short, let his people know that a local boy was in it, and that he had a good part. And packed his theatre.

Good Audience Stuff!

Another instance two or three years back, the writer played a short, which was an act by two singers. They sang one number and couldn't decide what else to sing. One of them suggested to the other that they let the audience decide. After asking the audience, they repeated a name of a song just as if some one in the audience had called for it, and sang another number. They then repeated the same thing for the third number by letting the audience supposedly choose a song. After seeing this subject at the preview we decided to make it realistic. And done so by having "plants." In the audience to call out the name of the songs as the singers ask for them from the screen. The effect that this drew from the audience was remarkable, and it went over big and caused more comment then the feature picture. This short I don't think was produced with the above thought in mind. But by watching your short little effects like this can be worked out once in awhile.

Don't overlook the fact that your short subject is as important to your program as your feature. And that they are not merely "Fillers" to kill time while waiting for the customers to come to see the feature picture. For how many would come to see your feature if they knew that you didn't run short subjects? So bear in mind that variety is the spice of life, providing it's the right kind.

ON THE BILLBOARDS, TOO!

Many short features have grown in popularity to such an extent that showmen have created panels and special boxes on their billboard posters to plug them. This slant was brought to our attention only the other day when driving through Long Island our attention was attracted to a twenty-four sheet stand in which the short features were given prominent mention for both changes on the poster.

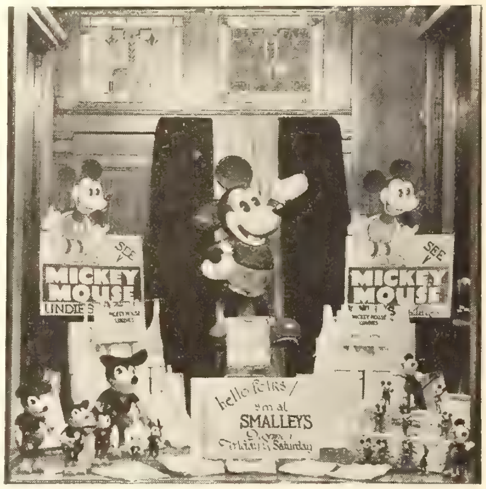
If you have a knack of layout copy for twenty-four sheets you can always work out a plug for those shorts which appeal most to your audience. It may act as the final tug to the box office for those who are not too keen for your feature picture.

MICKEY MOUSE NOW PLUGGING "UNDIES": GILLADETTE SAYS SO

We never expected to hear that the famous Mickey Mouse was plugging a brand of underwear, but, according to information from Norwich, N. Y., where H. L. Gilladette manages the Smalley Norwich Theatre, it's a fact and the photo on this page will prove our claim.

It all came about when the president of the Norwich Knitting Company conceived the idea that marketing undies under the brand of Mickey Mouse would be a great gag. He is a man of action and forthright contacted Mr. Walter Disney, the arch mouse of Hollywood fame. Result—a tie-up for the exclusive right to manufacture undergarments for children from 3 to 12 years of age.

And that is the reason why it may be recorded that the first display of Mickey Mouse undies for youngsters, not oldsters, was made by Manager Gilladette of Norwich. Furthermore, if the first display is a forerunner of what is to follow, the undie manufacturer, Mr. Lehman, has started something which will be duplicated in other towns if the tie-up works out the way he thinks it will. On the very first day the window appeared, it is reported that the kiddies begged their parents for an opportunity to don a suit of Mickies. (We shall claim a copyright for this name.)



Before we sign off on Gilladette's activities, let us call your attention to that window display. Note the Swiss cheese, if you can, at the bottom of the display. But you may take our word for it that it's there, likewise the many figures of Mickey and a card tying the deal in with showings of a cartoon at the Norwich. So prepare yourselves, fellow Round Tablers, for an invasion of "Mickies," providing the resourceful Mr. Lehman has his way. Thanks also to Tom Wear for letting us in on this gag.

Another New Novelty

"Flip the Frog," Metro's cartoon character, has a new coloring book for children. The book measures 11 x 15 inches and contains 32 pages of amusing drawings of doings in Frogtown. Half of the plates are in full color and the balance are in black and white for coloring. An arrangement has been made with the publishers for exhibitors to deal direct on a wholesale price basis when using the books as matinee premiums. Cost is about 6.3 cents apiece in quantities of one dozen and up.

"SCREEN SOUVENIRS" (Para.)

If there is any short subject which has captured the audience's affections, it certainly is "Screen Souvenirs." The series have now reached the point where the opening title is greeted with a spontaneous round of applause, not only on Times Square but on Main Street too.

If you have yet to run one of the "Screen Souvenirs" get busy and spot them on schedule. You'll find an audience reaction that mighty few shorts or even features can boast of.

if there is any shorts producer who has captured the exhibitor's affections,

IT CERTAINLY IS PARAMOUNT!

Just as in feature productions, PARAMOUNT is the style originator in shorts. SCREEN SOUVENIRS is only one example. Look, for instance, at BETTY BOOP, the little lady who captivated the nation's audiences on her very first appearance! Look at the names in PARAMOUNT TWO-REEL COMEDIES, SCREEN SONGS, ONE-REEL PRODUCTIONS! The splendor of PARAMOUNT PICTORIALS! Because of its unequaled resources and ingenuity, PARAMOUNT always provides the exhibitor with the newest ideas, the biggest names, the most entertaining short subjects. That's why the smart exhibitor, who chooses seat fillers instead of program fillers, buys—

All the world loves "The Eyes and Ears of the World"—PARAMOUNT NEWS! It gives them the latest and greatest events of the day, with full sound as well as accurate photography . . . a news reel that actually makes them feel they're right on the scene! Whether it's a war or a funny bit of human interest; an earthquake or a sports event—audiences live the moment when PARAMOUNT NEWS flashes it on the screen! And it's really news when PARAMOUNT brings it—if Jimmy Doolittle has to break an aviation record, if special trains and boats have to be chartered, if blizzards and battle-fields have to be braved—it's all in the day's work, as long as PARAMOUNT NEWS gets there first! INTEREST and TIMELINESS have made PARAMOUNT NEWS one of the most popular subjects in the theatre today!

I'VE been asked to submit to the Motion Picture Herald Round Table Club, an article on the "SELLING OF SHORT SUBJECTS TO THE MOVIE PATRON."

Gentlemen, I'm going to be very candid!

It's almost impossible for anybody in our great business to definitely tell other men throughout the field how to do certain things without raising a discussion which always ends in uncertainty; the great evil that has been a hindrance to our business.

Therefore, what I have done, is gathered various items that have proven themselves excellent selling media, sorted them into a simple systematic plan, and so arranged them that your assistant under your guidance and supervision can follow out a definite concrete plan—one that you can rest assured, will bring absolute results to your box office.

The plan is divided into five separate units, which, if carefully followed at each change of program will assure you of good coverage. Of course, there are other things that can be done, however, all in all, you can feel satisfied that your shorts are sold, without any further thought.

Another LAUREL and HARDY Comedy
New! FIRST TIME IN THIS THEATRE
I'm in a brand new cartoon tomorrow! C'mon Over.
Mickey

Since this article is directed more to the second, third and consequent runs, instead of to the downtown houses, I suggest the making up of a series of short one-frame stock trailers, as cards Nos. 1, 2, 3, attached herewith.

Trailers are so made that they always can be used. In other words, if you have a Laurel and Hardy short, simply follow the general idea, as shown in card No. 1, or in the Mickey Mouse card No. 2. These are always current and the line at the bottom of the trailers, "New! First time at this theatre," informs the patron that it is not a repeat. These trailers follow immediately after the National Screen sound trailer selling the feature attraction. In this manner the patron seated in the theatre becomes aware of the large and fine program and takes away with him a promise to himself that there is a program he mustn't miss. Card No. 3, selling the newsreel, should be run after every group of trailers selling the coming program. Newsreels are the vital part of every program. This plan is for the theatre that cannot afford to have trailers selling shorts for every change.

Other Trailer Slants

Included in the trailer material we dug out of Dave was some of the more eleborate style used for the downtown first runs and deluxers. One thing in particular which attracted our attention was an idea he used in conjunction with "Shanghai Express" and probably many times before.

His trailers started off with a special on the feature. This was followed up with trailer plugs for the surrounding program, but each carrying the feature title and Dietrich head in a comet effect.

In working it along these lines he not only succeeded in getting his short subjects across with proper emphasis but did not afford the patrons the slightest chance of forgetting the importance of his feature. We considered this an exceptionally good idea and feel that many other houses will find it worthwhile, as long as they are using trailers, to follow the same slant.

The continuity of his trailers is as follows: Feature, Screen, Act, Comedy, Screen Song and

'SHORT' EXPLOITATION!

News. If you can visualize the effectiveness of this advance plug then you will better appreciate it. Picture your house crowded with patrons and the big coming feature announcement is flashed on the screen. While they are still digesting that feature plug you follow it right up with your next strongest bet on the coming program. If it's a stage presentation or vaudeville act, makes no difference. Whatever it may be, flesh or film, it gets the proper plug. Then after the feature and act trailers, you follow it right up with the comedy trailer and then the News and Screen Song if that's the way your show happens to be booked in.

By using that comet effect at the top of the trailer card in which is carried the title and picture of star, you immediately tie the entire series of trailer's together and avoid the monotony of a different looking trailer for each announcement. It's merely a throwback on the old idea of institutional trailers when each theatre used an individual border or theatre monogram for their national special trailers.

ALHAMBRA Will ROGERS 'Business & Pleasure' S. S. Van Dine
ANNEX 2 Pictures Jack HOLT "BEHIND THE MASK" —also— "High Speed"

Because of the fact that the local theatre does not do much newspaper advertising, the short subject should not be overlooked.

The clippings of a group of neighborhood theatres are herewith attached, showing how advertising the "Short Subject" can be worked into the ads.

MARQUEE COPY

RICHARD DIX "THE LOST SQUADRON" LAUREL & HARDY COMEDY—NEWS

Please note the importance that the bottom line adds to the feature being advertised. This is just an idea of marquee copy. I have seen canopy copy which for the second line instead of reading LAUREL & HARDY COMEDY-NEWS, lists the other players in the feature attraction. If Richard Dix does not mean enough to the attraction, the featured players certainly do not. This is just an idea for comparison.

In writing marquee copy I generally list on a piece of paper everything that I have for sale; find out the amount of space I have for advertising, then use just the most important items. This may seem the usual procedure, but, having corrected canopy copy for ten theatres during the past two years, I'm satisfied in saying that marquee copy does not get enough thought and is sadly neglected.

STUNT ADVERTISING

Various methods of exploitation on selling short subjects would be, for example, Curios displayed in prominent locations to help sell Ripley's "Believe It or Not."

Newspaper tieups with newspapers carrying Grantland Rice Sportlights, for which you can receive big ads in return for mention. The running of a short subject personality is a great stunt, to be used a week before that star will appear in person, and things of that nature.

Stunt Advertising to me is so wide a subject that it's one man's idea against another's as to whether or not you can check an actual increase in the "Box Office," and because of this, I'm leaving this media to your own discretion.

SPECIAL STUFF

In addition to the type of material advocated by Davidson in his campaign to sell shorts as a direct medium to increase box office receipts, he also has used a multigraphed bulletin in the past for the purpose of aiding the individual house managers in how to get the most out of their surround show. Captioned, "XCHANGE" Sell Your Shorts, it conveyed special material on different series.

This same information is available to any and every showman by merely going to your local exchange and finding out what material and accessories they have on the different short series booked into your house.

Dave Davidson has set forth, briefly and to the point, some mighty helpful suggestion for the advertising and exploiting of the Short Feature via many different mediums. His suggestions are all based upon actual experience and tried and proven methods. You can therefore feel that in adopting any of the ideas incorporated in his suggestions you are taking very little chance of slipping up.

We could have made this a long drawn out article running three or four pages long, as a matter of fact Dave wanted us to build a complete story around the material he sent; but after studying it for a while we decided that the way he sent it, together with his terse comments, could not be improved upon. So here you have it. "CHICK"

MOTHER'S DAY!

Many showmen have already laid their plans for Mother's Day; others will be getting all set within the next week. Department stores, chain stores, specialty shops, florists, candy shops and other merchants will be receiptive for tie-ups for this occasion. A number of managers will have special covers for their programs; many more will issue special invitations to a selected group; special slides will be used and songs sung fitting the day, and numerous stunts will be employed throughout the nation to publicize the event.

Tie in with this nationally observed day and let your patrons know what you are playing then and the following week. Tell them to bring mother along. Do your share of the ballyhoo and reap a consequent reward.

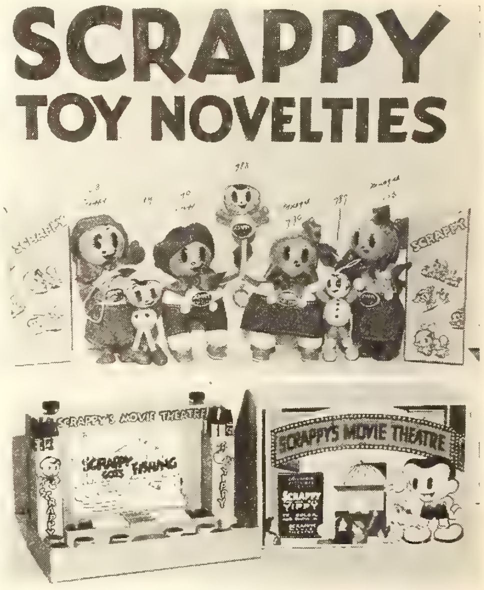
ARRANGEMENTS MADE FOR MANUFACTURE OF "SCRAPPY" GIVEAWAYS

Arrangements have been made by Columbia Pictures Corp. with a number of manufacturers for the manufacture and distribution of a variety of articles suitable for window displays in drug stores, toy shops and candy stores.



Pictured here is an assortment of "Scrappy" dolls and two games, "Scrappy's Movie Theatre and Scrappy Goes Fishing." Other articles interesting to children include pencil sets, paint and crayon sets, child's tea set, a series of drawing and story books, and "Scrappy" Chocolate covered candy. The company's suggests that the articles may be used as give-aways, tie-ups, etc. Your exchange will give you any additional information you may desire.

Sunday War Continues

The battle of Plainfield, N. J., Sunday movies continues, the latest development being the arrest of Manager Walter Haas, in charge of Publix houses in the city. Prior to Haas' arrest his predecessor was arrested, and so on and so on, all in spite of the fact that the County Court has ruled that operation of Sunday movies is not in violation of a city ordinance. However, indications are that local authorities will fight it out if it takes all Summer.

DOUBLE OR 'TROUBLE' FEATURES— DOES THIS ANSWER THE RIDDLE?

By FRED S. MEYER
Alhambra Theatre
Milwaukee, Wisc.

This Practical Showman Is of the Opinion That You Can Present a Better Show with Good Supporting Shorts!

IT is only natural that in a discussion about short features the double (or trouble) feature slant would inject itself. Fred Meyer tackles this problem in his own typical way; meaning that he calls a spade a spade and gives you the inside slant as seen through his own b.o. window.

We are inclined to believe that if most showmen would face this, as well as other problems, in a more aggressive manner they would arrive much sooner at the solution.

Once again we want to emphasize the fact that every item appearing on the Club pages can be construed as being put before the other Club members for their consideration. If you disagree we expect you to take the floor and express your own views.

In your next letter we suggest that you vote for or against Fred Meyer's views on the matters discussed in this article.

"CHICK"

IF, as has been claimed time and again, there is no ill in the motion picture business that a good picture can not cure, it seems ridiculous to assume, as so many showmen are doing these days that it takes two class-one feature productions to build up a program that will find favor with the public. It would seem that movie patrons are being over-indulged in this particular form of entertainment to a point where they will become so sated it will be hard to re-adjust programs to a sane level.

Just a Stimulant!

As S. R. Kent said in speaking of this condition, at the Washington convention last month:

"It is like feeding morphine to a sufferer. It brings temporary relief but when the effect wears off, then what?" Hence, bearing this sage deduction in mind, it would appear well to turn to some other and wiser method of program building which brings us to the subject of "shorts," always reliable when properly selected and presented.

This is my twenty second year in this industry. From the day a news reel first made its bow I can not recall a single instance where a patron walked out during its showing. Folks may disapprove of any part of the program, but NOBODY EVER WALKED OUT ON A NEWS REEL. Our patrons enjoy visiting strange places and peoples, and the sole difference in this "mode of travel" appears to be in the "route."

Did Sound Help Newsreels?

When sound first came into being and various producing companies started making talking news reels it was obvious that, due to the necessity of shifting cumbersome equipment, hot news for screen consumption would be retarded in its progress. This plus the fact of outside noise interference made a successful talking news a big problem. In the silent days it was the rule rather than the exception to show news reel shots of a sports event a few hours after the "classic" ended. Not only Broadway but key cities throughout the country would show the running of the Kentucky Derby, a major football or world series game in record time. This was because the camera man could set up in a minute; he was not bothered about sound trucks, etc., thus making the NEWS a worthy contemporary of the daily press.

It remained for "Uncle Carl" Laemmle to conceive an idea whereby animated news could still be kept as NEWS and have sound and voice behind it. Radio had become very popular in the homes and of the many announcers one name stood out, head and shoulders above the rest, Graham MacNamee. If MacNamee was a household word, why not utilize that popularity for the screen, must have been Mr. Laemmle's thought.

As a result, Radio's foremost announcer made his bow as Universal's newsreel talking reporter.

News That Is "Hot"!

The recent Lindbergh kidnapping case furnished a good example of audience reaction. Every newsreel covered the event and after seeing practically all, I believe I can state authoritatively that MacNamee created a feeling of sympathetic understanding not equalled in any other expressed method of screen or press. And again, some months ago, when gangsters shot down innocent children in Brooklyn, who can forget MacNamee's description of that calamity or his tirade against organized gangsters?

The old adage that you can "only get out of a picture what you put behind it" holds doubly true insofar as it applies to short subjects. Advertised as News, it means just that—supposedly current events. By the same token Literary Digest, Times, etc., also contain news depending solely on how new the subject matter is. In our advertising, we always mention MacNamee by name. Space is allotted to him in our ads, as well as on our lobby displays. Occasionally we use a likeness of the announcer. This attracts attention, because it is augmented by a brief resume of the current highlight topics. At the end of the news reel subject we carry our own stock trailer, containing MacNamee's likeness and mentioning the fact that he is a weekly feature in this theatre.

No one likes the Universal Talking Reporter but the public. No one ever walked out on our news reel. It has been found best—by actual test.

Find Out Definitely Whether Your Patrons Want Quality or Quantity and Be Guided Accordingly in Your Booking!

Some years ago, a Trade paper awarded a Gold Medal for the best short subject produced during that particular season. It seems to me that there never was a more opportune time than the present to do something for the shorts. They—short subjects—properly balanced and publicized are the sole answer to our "trouble feature" problem. Take the Babe Ruth series for example. We presented the five of them, and it was with genuine regret when the fifth was shown. I wish there had been ten more. I can recall no single or series of short subjects that were better liked by young and old than "Playing Ball with Babe Ruth" real entertainment A positive answer to the cry for getting the kids back again.

"Strange as it Seems" many of our patrons actually inquire when the next STRANGE will be shown. In this day and age where nothing seems to arouse more than casual interest, it is nothing short of unusual to have people comment and ask for the next release. In this case as in Universal's News Reel I believe the Talking Reporter is as responsible for the public demand as is the techni-colored subject matter. What the eye sees, the heart believes. Well, it's much easier to fool the eye than the ear. The latter is much truer than the eye. And the freaks of nature are but secondary alongside of an interesting description.

Let's Have Showmanship!

Three months ago I made a statement that I would like to repeat here: "What the industry needs above all else in 1932 is a restoration of COMMON SENSE SHOWMANSHIP."—I stick to this opinion. The country has had more than its fill of double features. Theatres have given away everything from a kitchen stove to a house and lot. Admission prices were reduced to pre-war days; "two-for-ones," family nights, etc. failed to bring anything but temporary relief. If we're to survive, there's but one thing left for us to do:

To build programs with vision. To carefully select and properly balance the "added featurettes"; to present and feature a news reel that is NEWSY; in brief, to go back to the "mixed program" days of 1912. Maybe I am wrong, but it was the result of those early days that brought us to the lofty heights of today. And why, may I ask, can't the public be interested again as it was in the Biograph Girl, the Vitagraph today, the Broncho Billy or 101 Bison days?

Backward, turn backward, oh time in thy flight
Let us be showmen and cure our plight!

WALTER S. CALDWELL

NOW! (Over)

Caldwell plugged one of his shorts via this tag, which was distributed throughout the city.

The abbreviated reels; the "shorts" or "featurettes" or whichever you care to term them, are what round out any program.

For the purpose of this brief article, I'll call them "shorts" and hope the B.V.D. people will think it an indirect tie-up.

We consider exploiting our shorts as seriously and carefully as we do the starred 60 or 70 minute feature. And this is WHY:

Laurel and Hardy, Charlie Chase, Our Gang, Boy Friends, the Dogville comedies and other funny shorts have won a definite and appreciative following. So have Mickey Mouse, Silly Symphonies, Flip the Frog and the other animated chuckle-inciters. Another portion of our clientele is partial to out-of-doors pictures, and naturally, the Traveltalks, the Sportsman's reels and the films pertaining to life in the open have their appeal.

But the short subject that is, in my opinion, the most important, is the newsreel. Witness the popularity of these timely audience-pullers, by the fact that the entire theatre programs in New York and elsewhere are devoted wholly to the projection of last-minute news shots from all over the world.

DO you know that the largest and most influential newspapers in the United States have standing orders to play up on page one and other advantageous positions in their periodicals, pictures of the day's happenings to the exclusion of almost everything else? The same is true of the newsreels in theatres, with the added zest of seeing them in action and hearing the voices of the subjects. That is why I always big type newsreel and emphasize its box-office value.

And another thing (you are probably doing the same thing, but it's worthy of a line) we have always eliminated ALL commercial advertising from our screens. The so-to-speak "silver sheet" if its use is prostituted by the flashing of "sales" at a local emporium or other non-entertaining matter, takes its function of entertainment away and the theatre ceases to belong to its patrons, the people who pay your salary and mine, and becomes an advertising medium and inadvertently, but most certainly, slowly antagonizes the clientele. Better by far to utilize the time a paid advertisement would occupy, with a short of some type—and there are scores of notable ones that would please an audience.

IN Toledo we exploit shorts almost as heavily as we do the features.

Witness:

With one of the Dogville comedies we tied up with a local meat-packing plant that furnished us 10,000 fresh full-sized "wienies." These were tagged with theatre mention and passed out on busy street corners by pretty girls with attractive looking baskets. Do you think that a single person passed them by? And, in addition to the laugh with which the passerby took the miniature "doggie" he or she was reminded of the Dogville comedy playing in Loew's Valentine and we had a healthy reaction all that week. We took a huge six-sheet frame and spelled out with "wienies" the name of the comedy, placed it near our ticket office, and one of the newspapers gave us a three-column spread on the strength of the novelty.

Same with the Laurel and Hardy comedy; same with a Charlie Chase; same with almost all of the shorts that garnish our programs. Each lends itself admirably to some kind of local tie-up.

WHEN the William Tilden Tennis reels were played, we tied up with the Toledo Blade, gave an inexpensive but flashy cup for a letter on "My Greatest Thrill in Tennis," and it was good for ten stories and three two-column pieces of art.

The "Fisherman's Paradise" with Pete Smith's glib and droll chatter, has won an army of devotees who wouldn't know if a nimrod was a portion of fishing tackle or a stage weight, but the reels have the out-of-doors lure and so we hammer away at them in our newspaper ads, on our screen and also in our herald.

THEY TALK! THEY SING!

It's a Bow-Wow

HO! HO! HA! HA! HAW! HAW!

In fact, the screen always announces a week in advance the shorts of the next program. When the celebrated "Cuckoo" musical prelude of a Laurel and Hardy comedy is flashed, audiences invariably burst into an audible wave of laughter and the same is true with some of the other established fun-creators. We have noticed that the impending advent of a Mickey Mouse draws plaudits and so does the announcement of a half dozen other favorite shorts. We find room on our marquee for our featured shorts each week. It is seen by uncounted thousands daily and at times I firmly believe that it is the magnet that draws patrons in equal proportions to the seven or eight reeler.

When we do not find space in our ads to run the schedule of shows we are deluged with phone calls asking when a certain short will go on. That certainly indicates interest.

Our lobby blazons forth the shorts of the present and coming week and we have cut-outs of the better known favorites on display in plenty of advance time to cause the patrons to chatter about them.

Oh, yes; as in the Tilden Tennis reels, when we played the series of Football pictures, we tied up with the high schools; got our football schedules and did the obvious but important things to win their patronage, and we certainly did receive it.

The Traveltalks are naturals for tourists windows in the local travel bureaus, and when we have aviation shorts the various air travel agencies and the airports are billed and heralded.

You may have heard something of a depression. It is asserted that some folks are a bit glum. That's the chap who can be sold on shorts. Not the Stock Market variety, of course, but snappy, entertaining, clever reels that for the time being at least, will make the down-in-the-mouth patron bid the blues begone.

HE'S your ace in the hole, the backbone of your business, the one who makes it possible to meet payrolls—and by the same token, that is true of your shorts—THEY are your ace in the hole; THEY are the backbone of your business; THEY are the best investment and the ones that pay the biggest dividends (properly exploited, of course) on any man's picture program.

A diversified program of intelligently selected shorts is what draws many a vagrant dollar to your till and the repeated return of your modern-day, hard-to-please patron.

BILL ADAMS SELLS HIS SHORTS DESPITE TWO-FEATURE POLICY

With a double feature policy in effect for the past two years, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Brockton, Mass., hasn't very many opportunities to exploit short subjects; however, now and then a short, or a series of shorts of outstanding calibre pops up and extra attention is given them.

Adams was one of the many showmen who cashed in on the Bobby Jones series of golf shorts released last season and in all probability will go to work on something else along the same lines this season, if it happens along. Last year he had no difficulty in effecting a tie-up with one of the largest department stores in the city for a golf equipment window display and was also successful with the promotion of a large co-operative ad among the sporting goods stores.

One of the best paying shorts he ever played at his theatre was a newsreel of the Brockton delegation to the American Legion Meet at Detroit last Fall. Adams made a special trip to that city in order to see that motion pictures were taken of the parade and was amply repaid for his time with the returns that came his way when the shots were shown. This stunt also crashed the local newspapers for front page stories.

Adams' reminders about golf and motion pictures concerning local residents are both well worth considering, particularly since the golf season is with us, and there's no telling when some local happening can be picked up by the camera and made into a box office bet.

School Advertising

Once again let us mention the advertising possibilities offered by the distribution of manilla paper text book covers among school children.

It is mandatory that all pupils cover their books and keep them constantly clean. One of the largest book cover companies (name on request) is putting out a cover that will fit all size books and imprinting same with theatre advertising. One at hand shows members of "Our Gang" on the front portion of cover. The covers cost less than a cent each.

HERE IS THE WAY SMART SHOWMEN GIVE THEIR SUPPORTING SHORT SUBJECTS THE PROPER BREAK IN THEIR UP-TO-THE-MINUTE NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING. MANY A SHORT HAS HELPED PUSH AN OTHERWISE WEAK SHOW UP TO GOOD B. O. RETURNS.

A HOUSE MANAGER DISCUSSES THE SHORT FEATURE QUESTION!

By

JIM LANDERS

Old Mill Theatre
Dallas, Tex.

How to Best Advertise Your Program Builders and Why, Is the Trend of This Interesting Story from a Smart Showman!

See if You Can't Follow Some of Lander's Suggestions to Improve Your Business with the Many Fine Short Subjects!

IN line with the promise we made at the start of this section we present, herewith, some fine slants on the short feature from a showman who, like thousands of other showmen, must interest his community in the entertainment angles of such subjects. Landers tells you how he built up business via his supporting program, and we would venture the opinion that many others could do likewise if they would but learn to appreciate the great asset these short subjects represent in th make-up of a motion picture show.

We could have filled up page after page with blurbs from the publicity departments of the various producers, but we choose to give the space over to the showmen in the field because we firmly believe that their comments and reactions are far more vital at this time.

We have every reason to feel that you'd rather read about short subject showmanship from showmen than publicity offices. Were we right?

"CHICK"

THE short subject selling policy of Jim Landers, manager of the Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, Texas, consists of investing as much time, energy and money in shorts as he proportionately invests in the sale of a feature picture.

"It's a deplorable fact, but true," he states, "that too many managers are prone to look upon the short subject as so much filler and let it go at that." He suggests that they sit down and look the situation right in the eye.

"How many two-reel comedians," he asks, "have they seen graduate to feature length pictures because of their outstanding work in shorts? And when they play a picture featuring one of these actors or actresses, how many patrons know anything about these newly-made stars of feature pictures? The theatre management knows them but the patrons do not know them, simply because they've never been sold as they should have been sold. I have seen this situation take place many times in my theatre and in others, and we would stand around and wonder why we didn't do the business."

Play Up Names!

Landers believes in booking name acts if you can always get them, but if you can't, play up whatever name you have in the act or comedy. Any name is better than none, according to his way of thinking. In other words, if important names in the cast are omitted, then the public has a right to assume that there's no one of any consequence in the picture. On the other hand, if you come right out and declare that Susie Cluck is in "Steamboat Sal," then a percentage of patrons will conclude that Susie must rate some attention from the public.

For instance, if your shorts set you back $300 per week and your feature costs $1,200, then it's logical to arrive at the conclusion that the shorts deserved at least one-fourth as much sales pressure as the feature. This rule applies to the average run of short reels. In the event of a Charlie Chase, a Laurel & Hardy, Billy House, Harry Langdon, and others, special effort is made to plaster the star's name and title of picture all over the screen, front, ads and lobby, to say nothing of special exploitation.

Trailers, Too!

With the same thought in mind, shorts are then worth at least one frame if two minutes are devoted to the feature in the trailer. In other words, sell your short along the same lines that you're selling your feature. Bill them the same way, with name of star or title, then a snappy catchline, and on to the next line. Sometimes a still of the star or some unusual pose can be used as the background, or on one side of the frame. And by all means, Landers states, after you have mentioned your feature, stage attractions and shorts, then sum them all up in one frame under some such caption as, "What a Show," or "Can You Beat This for Real Entertainment?" This can be followed by the titles or star's name again listed and numbered just like the old time vaudeville programs.

Many times, according to Landers' experience, a good "name" act will do more for business than a weak, no-box-office-appeal feature picture. Furthermore, just because a good stage comedian has made a few shorts, which you are going to play, is no reason for neglecting to mention him in newspaper ads. If you were going to play the same person on the stage in a revue or in a vaudeville unit, then you'd sell him almost as much as you'd sell your feature. Bill his name BIG and give the title of his act, plus a snappy catchline.

Also, he states, never take for granted that patrons know your program includes a Sound News or a Cartoon. Many times he has found shots in a News that could be played up for real money at the box office. He gets his exchange to send him release sheets of the News just as soon as it receives them. Cartoons are always mentioned, and when a well known Cartoon character, that name is also played up.

Here's another good suggestion: "Why not," he states, "take an interesting story out of the press book of some feature and adapt the name of your short star to this story, for, after all, the average press book story hasn't much more foundation than that and will fit most any name you care to use." Travelogue, Sport Slants and other kindred shorts are always good for legitimate news stories on the sporting page, and many times will lend themselves to a nice tie-up, especially in case you are booked for the entire series. This same procedure will apply on shorts of interest to women, golfers, swimmers and football teams.

He never makes up a panel for his features without including just a small card or plaque on shorts, or at least, one of the outstanding subjects, figuring that some patrons might only read that particular poster and will then see what constitutes the balance of the program. If he has four 3-sheets available, one is always devoted to shorts, and sometimes two if there happened to be a "name" among them. In these instances he also uses art heads, stills and cutout colored figures from 14x36 inserts.

Built Up Popularity!

To familiarize patrons with cartoon characters he identifies them week to week until they are well known. Special short attractions are billed as such, with a separate set piece in advance, and later in the outer lobby. He also believes in devoting part of the front to a complete line up of short subjects, either in a regular program panel, always in the same spot, or on one side of the front itself. He suggests that the marquee also be used, if size permits, for a name from one of the several shorts. If some short has particular appeal to women, he sees that a good comedy is on hand for the men, and then tells them about it. When weak features are played, good "name" acts are booked, and sold HARD.

As far as exploitation is concerned, Landers thinks there isn't any reason why this type of selling should be confined to the feature picture, and lists several as particularly adaptable to tie-ups, such as window displays, etc., for certain sports films or others of athletic nature. These immediately open the way to make contact with a local merchant for a tie-up and in nine cases out of ten he'll be more than willing to cooperate.

Many Selling Mediums!

Summing it all up, Landers observes: "You have the following mediums of sale: newspaper, screen, lobby and front, and exploitation. Make a definite decision regarding the comparative value of your shorts and your feature for that particular week, then adhere to that decision. You will find that you can educate your patrons to the fact that you have screen entertainment other than your feature that is always worth-while. Build up the fact that in their minds that even though they might not like the feature, they will certainly find something in the surrounding program that will please them. And by all means use all of the above-mentioned mediums of sale and devote the time, space, money and effort to your shorts that they rightfully deserve, both from an entertainment standpoint and from the box office angle.

SHERIDAN TELLS OF THREE SHORTS THAT BOOSTED BOX OFFICE

While picture playing policy at the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, has more or less made the plugging of short subjects an incidental measure, Manager Hal Sheridan can think of three recently played short features that deserve particular mention because of returning such exceptionally fine results.

The first of this trio, "Beauty Secrets of Hollywood," is a Paramount single reel subject with a running time of ten minutes. This was produced in color and much is claimed for its technical perfection. Apparently it is not only splendid entertainment, but offers many merchandising possibilities. Sheridan played this short for one week late last Fall and through the cooperation of one of the city's largest department stores arranged what can be classed as an outstanding campaign.

Store Co-operation!

At the store end the manager of the cosmetic department arranged at considerable expense for the appearance of an internationally recognized beauty specialist. In conjunction with the film she made addresses and gave advice to ladies at both store and theatre. The store also paid for all special newspaper advertisements to the amount of $165. All ads included an equal amount of theatre copy and also copy for feature attraction.

As far as the ladies are concerned, Sheridan states, this subject offers one of the greatest tie-up possibilities that he knows of. The only cost to theatre was cost of film and his campaign brought excellent results to the box office.

Another short played recently that brought fine returns to the Des Moines' box office was "Bard of Broadway," featuring Walter Winchell. This is a single reel Warner subject, with a running time of 12 minutes. Wherever Winchell is popular Sheridan recommends it.

Newspaper Tie-Up!

He tied-up with a local newspaper which was featuring a syndicated Winchell material and was able to arrange an effective campaign. Due to the fact that the Winchell column appeared daily many readers were interested in seeing the author on the screen. The art department made up a very good cutout of Winchell and he was played up on the marquee. The newspaper came across with generous publicity and played the reel up as a new subject, despite the fact that it is not a recent release. The only cost to the theatre was for the film. Box office returns were excellent.

A single reel commercial subject from Visugraphic is third on Sheridan's list. While commercial, it's not direct advertising and he believes it offers splendid entertainment and exceptional opportunities along merchandising lines, particularly in the aviation field.

He played this subject for one week last Fall and tied up with a local paper which owns and operates an auto-gyro for business purposes. The net result as far as the newspaper is concerned, was more free space and cuts than at any previous time, regardless of attraction or tie-ups. In addition to the newspaper's assistance, the local airport also cooperated, giving the theatre a giant lobby display. All of this, including the film, was gratis.

When a circuit of the high calibre of Loew's undertakes to give their supporting subjects such important mention then it ought to behoove many of us to do likewise. There are many reasons why we say this. First, it gives your prospective patrons the opportunity of knowing whether you are going to play some particular short subject which they like. Second, it immediately offers, in black and white, a complete listing of your entire program and makes the reading of it enhance its drawing powers. Third, it assures your patrons of a diversified show, and that, after all, is one of the things most movie-goers are looking for.

Totaled up, your short features, news reels and novelties amount to quite a sum of money. You'd be surprised to really dig in and find out how close it comes to feature length costs.

PICK YOUR SHORTS WITH CARE, ADVISES MANAGER MELINCOFF

No matter how strong your feature picture happens to be it is practically impossible to live down audience reaction to an hour of mediocre short reels, believes Max Melincoff, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., hence this showman takes particular pains in the making up of that end of his program.

His feature picture generally runs about 65 minutes, which means over an hour devoted to shorts, or some other added attraction, in order to fill out a two-hour and ten minutes show. Unless the shorts are selected with great care, weak spots will appear here and there in the structure and the whole show is very apt to fall flat.

Another point which is deserving of much care and consideration, thinks Melincoff, is the placing of shorts. He spots them as you would a five or six act vaudeville bill, carefully avoiding any clash between subjects. For instance, he will open with a Novelty reel, then follow with a cartoon; then, possibly, a Vitaphone singing and dancing "flash" act, to be followed by a two-reel comedy and the Newsreel. He always keeps his Newsreel 'way down on the bill, just before the feature, so that the latecomers for the last show will not miss seeing it, as next to the feature he considers the News one of the most important subjects on the entire program.

Max Melincoff has been a consistent contributor to this department and his suggestions have always been of a constructive nature. We are sure his views on the proper handling of short subjects will be received by his fellow Club members in the same spirit.

FRISCO HOUSE WENT FOR EQUAL BILLING OF A WINCHELLINGO

The importance of a Walter Winchell short subject not only impressed the manager of Warner's San Francisco Theatre to the extent of giving it equal billing with a feature, but it seems that a local newspaper critic reacted in the same manner.

The newspaperman devoted about seven-eighths of his column to the Winchellingo and the remaining eighth somewhat apologetically offered a brief review of the features.

Which all goes to show that knowing people believe that Mrs. Winchell's bad little boy Walter has an extensive audience in all parts of this country and, therefore, a likely subject for exploitation.

NEWSPAPERS GLAD TO HELP YOU SELL POPULAR CARTOONS

Newspapers will be glad to cooperate, states Vitaphone, in a tie-up between theatre and paper on the S. S. Van Dine cartoon strip which began during April. This tie may be arranged similar to the one already in effect on "Believe It or Not" Ripley shorts, whereby a review of the short and daily reader may be obtained in exchange for a short trailer calling attention to the newspaper's end of the deal. The idea of having one of the cartoon strips incorporated in the trailer has also been advanced as an excellent means of furthering the tie-up.

ANIMATED CARTOONS!

By BERNIE RYBACH

Mgr. Trans-Lux Short Subject Theatre

AFTER closely observing moving picture audiences for a long period of time it is very apparent that Aesop's Fables, Tom and Jerry and other animated cartoons are the most popular subjects on the screen. This popularity is not confined to the younger generation, but is equally apparent in adults of all ages and both sexes. Many Trans-Lux patrons have been questioned to ascertain the underlying cause for the universal esteem in which these short subjects are held and variety of answers have been given, from which the following observations are drawn:

1. The animated cartoon is light in vein and so different from the realities of life that it affords genuine relaxation. Although there is a theme of a story running through the subject, the portrayal and the characters represented are so far separated from any actual earthly existence that one is temporarily lifted entirely out of the sphere of earthly troubles and activities.

2. These cartoons are short and consequently do not ever last long enough to actually bore one.

3. Cartoons usually have lively and entertaining music which most every one enjoys.

4. Patrons realize that they are pen and ink work and are much intrigued as to the method of their production. The synchronization is also a never-ending wonder to patrons who marvel at the exact timing of the action with the talk and sound. Although this appeal is purely of a mechanical nature, it nevertheless adds much to the interest in this type of subject.

5. Of all the different cartoons it is my opinion that those featuring animals are the most enjoyable and I believe that in this observation will be found the principal cause for the popularity of cartoons in general. For instance, the antics of the various little dogs, cats, mice, elephants, etc., in Aesop's Fables take one back to one's own childhood days with memories of a pet perhaps long lost to the conscious mind, but still deeply embedded in the subconscious mind. Practically every one loves animals of some kind, or did in their childhood days. The cartoon, consciously or otherwise, turns back the pages to memories of very long ago; to childhood phantasies and the days of youth and fairy tales, when the lives of most were an eternal pleasure, and the responsibilities and grief of later years unknown.

After all, every woman is in reality a little girl grown up and deep within every man there will still be found a little boy. It is in that ability to prove the depths of the human emotions of adults in this respect that the animated cartoons featuring animals make their greatest appeal. And yet this reason is not realized by most adults who frequently cannot tell exactly what it is about these utterly fantastic subjects that they like so well.

6. It is amusing in fact to see persons mature in years laughing heartily at an Aesop's Fable and then, upon questioning, they will reluctantly admit that they really enjoyed it so much. It is so light, and so silly, that many adults are timorous about admitting that such frivolity should amuse them so much. They seem to feel that it is a subject for children and are a bit surprised at themselves for enjoying it so immensely. Upon finding out that they are no exceptions, but that adults the world over enjoy it, they seem relieved.

7. For children of course the appeal is much more direct and very understandable. It is aimed directly at their play life in and around which their childish interests center.

8. Animated cartoons, such as Tom and Jerry or Aesop's Fables, are clean entertainment and are suitable for children, which cannot be said for many other films.

SHEWELL FEATURES SHORTS IN ADS AS SCREEN VAUDEVILLE

Just to give you a small idea of how George Shewell values his short subjects and plays them up, take a squint at the illustration with this little story. Note, if you please, how he has made up a forceful program by reason of his intelligent show-selling and newspaper ads.

The reason why we go into a rave about material of this sort is chiefly because we are so darned anxious to emphasize the tremendous value and importance of the short subject and its need to help round out a perfect show regardless of what the feature attraction may be.

To us, and this is, of course, a strictly personal opinion, it is nothing short of criminal for any theatre to buy supporting short subjects and then give them nothing in the form of a plug or boost other than to throw them on the screen.

Learn to appreciate the true value of these subjects and the amount of strength they add to your complete show and then do as Shewell does for the Cort Theatre in Cambridge, Ohio. Feature them in your newspaper advertising just as he is doing.

Look a bit further, too, and note the coming show announcement at the bottom of the ad. Get that bold faced type telling about 4 ACTS OF SCREEN VAUDEVILLE, and then listing them just as though they were appearing in the flesh. That's showmanship and that's show-selling. You may claim that you're bettering this type of work but you'll have to prove it with facts before we'd believe it.

More power to showmen like George Shewell, and here's hoping we will watch him climb further up on the ladder of success. Any man who can handle himself as George does deserves promotion. Keep on sending us some more of your stuff, George. We like it.

Try a Laugh Night!

Many of our members have put over a "Laugh Nite" and found the occasion good for increased receipts and as a method of breaking up monotonous billing. It consists of a night set aside for short subjects only and generally results in the playing of as many subjects as would be taken up by regular feature time. Vaude style heralds, listing the attractions in proper order of value, can be used to publicize the show. It's hardly necessary to state that the program must contain some outstanding shorts.

BAIR TURNED OUT ANOTHER AD THAT CAUGHT THE EYES

Readers of this department have often had occasion to take note the novel brand of advertising turned out by E. E. Bair, manager of the State and American Theatres, East Liverpool, Ohio. It's that "different" touch given ads that makes Bair's work interesting to all Club members and we're herewith submitting another example of his work.

Note in the accompanying reproduction that a short subject catchline heads a feature ad—"What! No Mickey Mouse?". And then the answer in italic that there is one, and one of the best ever made. It even goes so far as to state that the cartoon is one of the highlights on the program.

All of which reminds us of the gag concerning some woman who 'phoned a theatre manager concerning the current program. When informed that there was a double feature, a band act, two reel comedy, newsreel, a scenic, etc., she replied, "What, no cartoon?" Now that that's off the chest, let us compliment Bair for getting together such a novel and attractive layout and sign off with the usual admonition, "we'll be looking for more."

EDITORIAL SEIZED UPON BY SILVER TO PUBLICIZE REISSUE

The "Letters from Readers" column on the editorial page of the New York Herald-Tribune was recently crashed by Milton Silver, advertising and publicity director for the Van Beuren Corporation, through one of the main editorials which dealt with the return of "the triumphant custard pie."

The editorial mentioned the old Chaplin short subjects and stated that "his return to the screen in his old part might do a lot to alleviate the economic sufferings of the celluloid industry." Silver straightaway wrote the editor a letter to effect that a number of the Chaplin two-reelers would be reissued with sound in the near future.

All of you can well imagine Silver's reaction as a publicity man for a concern about to reissue Chaplin shorts when he first read that editorial. His letter to the editor was carefully phrased and it got by the desk for a choice spot in the paper. A paragraph on the same subject also found its way into the screen news column. All of which means some kind of a medal for Mr. Silver.

WAUGH PLUGGED HIS SHORTS 10 YEARS AGO AND HE IS STILL AT IT

Maybe showmen plugged short subjects more intensively 10 years ago than they do these days—and then, again, maybe they didn't. But, anyway, we've run across an old clipping of 1922 vintage recounting what Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., did to exploit Fox's King Tut newsreel shots when he was publicity director for Peterson and Woods, Jamestown, N. Y.

Certainly most of you will recall that a lot of King Tut merchandise came on the market about the time that Fox reel was brought to this country. Well, then you can imagine just how long it took Howard Waugh to sense the opportunity for a big merchant tie-up between theatre and stores. Not long! Just long enough to grab his hat, rush out to the local newspaper office and sell the idea to the advertising manager. Then the two of them canvassed the town and lined up every available merchant for ads and prizes for "The King Tut Ball." For the latter, he took over the biggest dance hall in town and used two Oriental-clad girls as ballyhoo specimens of "A Troupe of King Tut Dancers." Windows were secured in all stores for placing of copy tying in picture with merchandise. Did the theatre do business? Use your own judgment.

To this day Waugh combs his newsreels for material which will lend itself to exploitation. Just a few weeks ago he came across one that showed an "Olympic Hat" and consequently cracked a tough store for a corking tie-up. Another short he cashed in on was "Washington, Man and Capitol" and did so by tying up with a local newspaper for an essay contest which he called "What Was the Most Important Act in the Life of Washington?" As the result of this the theatre received five generous publicity breaks in the paper and splendid displays in 11 library branches in the city.

You can make your own book on the difference between exploiting shorts 10 years ago and today and you'll probably conclude that good showmen will make the same effort on a good short subject these days. However, there can be no doubt at all that Waugh thoroughly realizes that many a short can be made the means of bringing home the bacon and isn't overlooking any opportunities to make them count as a box office stimulant.

BASEBALL TIE-UPS WITH BABE RUTH SHORTS!

(From "Howdy", N. J. Warner Theatre Bulletin)

The baseball season is with us—and you have BABE RUTH SHORTS with which to sell your patrons.

Every kid who owns a bat or a ball will be out hunting for back lots and some body to play with. That's competition—unless you organize it and make it work for you. Start now to organize a baseball team among the young folks of your town. Call it (NAME) THEATRE BOYS' BASEBALL LEAGUE, for example, set up a regular schedule and promote various prizes and gifts for the winning teams at the end of the season. As prizes for each game played, have the winning team at the theatre as your guest. Ballyhooed properly you should be able to get every kid in town clamoring to pay admission into your theatre to cheer the teams. Have some of the children say a few words and then present your loving cup or gifts to the winning team. The stunt can be worked up so that the newspaper will be forced to give you plenty of free publicity. You might even have the sports editor help organize the teams.

YOU CAN MAKE THIS IDEA PAY DIVIDENDS AT YOUR BOX OFFICE.

In towns where more than one of our theatres is situated, each theatre can have two or three teams which play among themselves for the honor of playing the best team set up by the other theatre.

THERE'S LOADS OF GOOD WILL AND PLENTY OF PROFIT IN THIS IDEA. . . START IT WORKING NOW!

SURE BACKING OF MUSIC LOVERS FOR OPERALOGUE SERIES

The Kendall - de Vally Operalogues, Educational's series of popular tabloid versions of famous grand operas, give exhibitors an innovation in short subject entertainment that is sure to find a wide welcome wherever good music is appreciated. Schools, churches, women's clubs, choral societies and similar organizations offer the showman ready-made patronage for this excellent series of short subjects, a clientele whose endorsement of these operalogues is a certainty.

Produced for Educational release by veterans in the operatic field, the Operalogues provide a novel treatment of these famous stories in music, with emphasis placed on story values as well as on the more popular, familiar arias. "Music for the masses" has been the watchword, and those patrons indifferent to so-called "good music" will find plenty of good entertainment in the unfolding of the narrative.

An effective lobby treatment for "Milady's Escapade," based on "Martha," first in the Operalogue series to be released, is reproduced here. A department store "dummy" dressed in the costume of Martha, with a rose in her hand, is placed in the lobby against a compo-board background painted to represent the quaint old English setting of the story. "The Last Rose of Summer," the famous melody sung in this opera, is played continuously on a concealed phonograph.

THE EVIDENCE

Jay Emanuel, publisher of The Exhibitor, commenting editorially on the decision legalizing block booking, says:

"Of course, positive evidence that the exhibitor does not have to buy shorts because of features may be found in any Educational exchange. Educational always has and always will base its plea for support and financial success on the quality of its shorts.

"Perhaps that is one of the reasons why Educational, under the guidance of Earle Hammons, has come along as successfully as it has."

PUBLIC ASKS VARIETY . . . PLAY IT . . . BOOST IT

Your public has clearly registered its preference for variety entertainment against the policy of two long features on one show. By actual count, five out of six want variety.

Newspapers have asked their readers' opinions. Theatre patrons have voted. Women's Clubs have taken action. And in every case, the diversified program wins by a landslide.

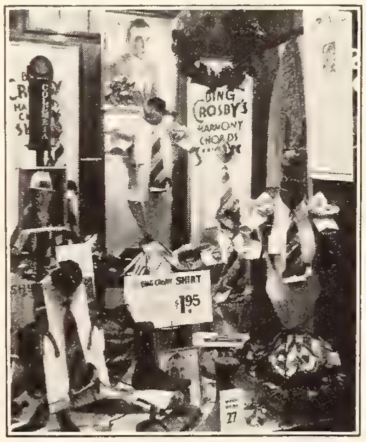
Isn't that mandate enough for any showman? And isn't it proof enough that you ought to exploit your short features? Play more quality short features such as EDUCATIONAL PICTURES bring you week in and week out! Give them more advertising and publicity! It's what your public is demanding. And it's the theatre that meets the public's demand that will win.

WIDE RANGE OF STUNT ACTIVITIES OFFERED BY TORCHY COMEDIES

The Torchy Comedies produced by C. C. Burr from the famous stories of Sewell Ford offer a wide scope of activities because of their appeal to young and old alike. They tell the stories of the mischievous doings of Torchy, the office boy, who is always in love with the boss' daughter. Any of the many stunts that appeal particularly to youngsters, such as clubs, harmonica contests, contests to find the boy with the most freckles, etc., etc., are suitable for exploitation in connection with Torchy Comedies. And a dancing contest with the contestants dressed to look like "Torchy" and his sweetheart, "Vee," is a "natural."

NATIONAL TIE-UPS PROVIDE BACKING ON CROSBY PICTURES

Educational's series of Mack Sennett Comedy Featurettes starring Bing Crosby are backed by a nation-wide exploitation and publicity campaign, with the cooperation of manufacturers of nationally advertised products such as Lion Brand Shirts and the Bing Crosby Three Hat Ensemble. Exhibitors playing these short subjects starring radio's most popular personality are cashing in on these important tie-ups, giving the Crosby comedies marquee billing, big display advertising and frequently "plugging" the short above the feature.



Reproduced here is the main display window of the National Shirt Shop in Times Square, New York, a typical exhibit featuring the "Bing Crosby Harmony Chord Shirts," a product of the Lion Brand Shirt Company. The National Shirt Shops are just one of the important chains of stores featuring this line of shirts.

Another manufacturer tie-up national in scope is the Bing Crosby Three Hat Ensemble, launched with the country's leading department stores as well as men's furnishers. Bing Crosby's signature is reproduced on the lining of each of the three styles of hats comprising this ensemble. Window space located in important central situations is thus available to showmen playing these comedies, with an effective display arranged without any cost to the showman.

RALPH COKAIN

Advertising Manager,

Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind.

THE best way to find out whether or not short subjects play an important part on the program is to dispense with them, leaving only the feature, and then watch the complaints. The public never says anything about the comedies, single reel acts, novelties, newsreels, etc., but when these subjects are missing, one hears criticism of it.

The double feature ousted the short subject for a time, but managers are finding the public would rather sit through one feature with short reels than two features. Too much is worse than not enough. Two features leaves no time for diversion; it leaves no time for the spectator to see the news of the day; it leaves no time for a good comedy; it leaves no time for a good musical number, or a novelty reel. Instead, no sooner has one feature been shown than another comes right on. Since it is only natural to concentrate more on a feature, the spectator does not relax, and as a result is not really entertained as much as he would be with the regular types of programs. Variety is the spice of good entertainment, and it cannot be found on a double feature program.

SHORT subjects today have celebrities whose names are known the world over, and whom the public are anxious to see. Walter Winchell, Ruth Etting, Horace Heidt and His Orchestra, Mark Hellinger, DeWolf Hopper, Benny Meroff's band, Ruddy Wiedhoeft, and other names have been featured in Vitaphone shorts. Rudy Vallee has more than once enhanced the popularity of the Paramount Screen Songs. And Bing Crosby, the radio crooning sensation, has made his hold on the public stronger than ever in Mack Sennett featurettes; he has proved that he is a comedian as well as a crooner, although I have heard many complain that he is not given the chance to sing as much as he should.

With names like that, it would be well to advertise shorts in a manner deserving of their popularity. Slim Summerville is a draw; so is Laurel and Hardy, Andy Clyde, Harry Barris, and others. Why not advertise them?

SHORT subjects should be given prominent space in newspaper advertising, as well as in lobby displays. Let them know you have Laurel and Hardy, or Ruth Etting, or Bing Crosby. While the reaction may not be exactly direct, the public will be keenly alert to see their favorites again, and they'll be watching for the announcements of their coming to your theatre.

FOR a balanced program of shorts, we like the Vitaphone subjects. They have "Big Star" comedies; "Pepper Pot" novelties, in which old time newsreels or old sensational hits are revived with clever dialogue by Bert Frank; "Newman Traveltalks," interesting trips around the globe; "Looney Tunes" and "Merrie Melodie" cartoons; "Melody Masters," in which we see the leading orchestras of the day; "Broadway Brevities," two reel musical numbers with sparkle and pep, and featuring favorites of the stage; Ripley's "Believe It Or Not's"; and "Ted Husing Sportslants." I think there are one or two classifications I have missed, but the above selection is enough to prove what a variety of short subjects can be shown on one program, provided they are arranged properly. Not only Vitaphone, but Educational, Paramount, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have various types of short subjects for the exhibitor. When producers pay strict attention to the production of these shorts, it is no more than right that the exhibitor should advertise and exploit them in order to get the full benefit therefrom.

THE value of the newsreel is underestimated. It is one of those valuable parts of your program that your public may not rave about, but which they wouldn't do without. Cameramen are always on the spot, gathering the news as fast as it happens. Within five days after the Lindbergh campaigning, our Fox Movietone News had full details of it. And I wouldn't be surprised to learn that it was shown in the larger cities much sooner than that. When the news contains something that is of nationwide interest, or of local interest, let the public know about it in advance. For many years the newsreel has occupied an important place on the program, and it is growing more indispensable every day. It is one subject that everybody likes, because it embraces items of general interest.

ON musical numbers, such as those featuring Bing Crosby, Ruth Etting, Harry Barris, etc., cooperation can be obtained from music stores, in most instances. In some localities, that is not always possible. However, by using part of your newspaper space and your lobby in the exploitation of your shorts, you'll find it will pay in the end. This year, more than ever before, better releases are available for the exhibitor who wants a good program.

It would behoove us to not overbuy on features, thus leaving room for comedies, novelties, and newsreels. And you'll find, I think, that the double feature will stimulate trade for just a short time, and thereafter it will go below normal again.

Use plenty of shorts, and advertise them.

WHAT, NO NEWS REEL?

'Sfact. Just the other night someone at the uptown Beacon Theatre in New York forgot, dropped or lost the newsreel during the first evening show.

If you have any idea that the customers let it go at that you're very much mistaken. Within our hearing six or seven departing patrons indignantly asked, "Where was the newsreel?"

If your schedule gets a little unsteady, never try to balance it by dropping the newsreel, even for one show. If you do you are going to learn that most of the customers insist on seeing it.

SEIDLITZ GIVES A SERIAL GOOD START IN NEW YORK HOUSE

In addition to running a fast-action trailer one week ahead of opening of a serial, "The Air Mail Mystery," Manager Seidlitz of Loew's Canal Street Theatre, New York City, mailed out special notices to the 6,500 members of his Loew's Birthday Club. A parade was staged to celebrate the event and the accompanying photo tells its own story. Note the banners that the boys carried when marching to the theatre. Special bulletin boards on the serial also brightened up the lobby.

Any theatre fortunate in having an active birthday club will undoubtedly find excellent results through using same for exploitation of a serial. The usual procedure is to print up a card with punch marks for each chapter, leaving the last for free admission as an incentive for the youngsters to attend all performances.

DELIS GIVES SPACE IN NEWSPAPER ADS TO SELL HIS SHORTS

Another showman who is not overlooking any bets among short subjects is George A. Delis, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio.

On any number of occasions worth while shorts have been featured in newspaper display advertising, generally by use of a boxed-in portion to catch the reader's eye. Subjects such as Laurel & Hardy, S. S. Van Dine Mysteries, Booth Tarkington's, Vitaphone Varieties, and other big-name Vitaphone acts or big-name comedies, have been played up in this wise.

At other times he has used 11 by 14 displays in front of his frame with the regular feature displays and on certain occasions has featured a strong short subject in heralds, special cards or on the marquee. Special tie-ups have also been made with local merchants when subject warranted such procedure. He has found a strong short the means of holding up a weak feature on a number of occasions and in those cases he played up the short equally as strong as the feature, even using mats in newspaper ads. However, Delis does not believe it good practice to ever over-feature the short above the regular picture unless it be a most unusual attraction.

Delis has a lot of dope on short subject exploitation, but in order to reproduce it here we'd have to tear up his scrapbook. That might be great for other Round Tablers, but not so good for him. So at this writing we'll have to be content with the suggestions he has offered and he may be sure that we are thankful for the information he has sent along.

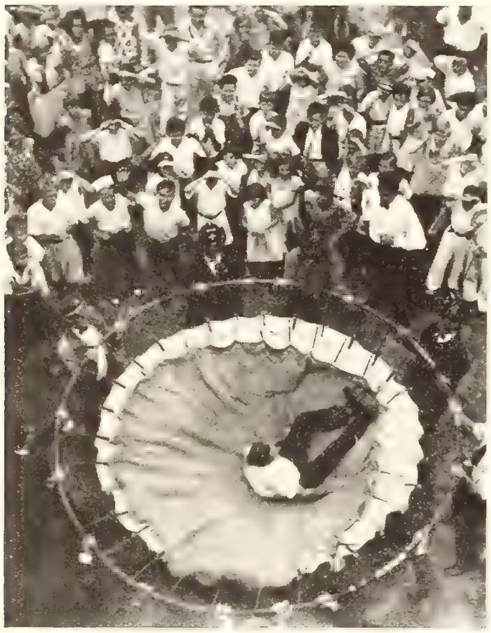
SHEPHERD BELIEVES OUTSTANDING SHORTS SHOULD BE EXPLOITED

Good shorts should receive their full share of attention, declares Sonny Shepherd, manager of the Biltmore Theatre, Miami, Fla., and according to some data at hand we have every reason to believe that Sonny backs up his statements with deeds.

For instance, all subjects relating to Bing Crosby, Rudy Vallee Ruth Etting and radio and record stars of like calibre are exploited for all they're worth. Tie-ups are made with music stores and advance lobby displays of standees and photos and other material are generally set about 10 days ahead.

When he has a subject such as a series of Burton Holmes travelogues booked he finds it profitable to make a personal visit to teachers of all schools so that they in turn will make mention of the shorts to pupils during classes in history and geography. Arrangements are made often as practical to show these pictures on a Friday night, and in some instances special 10-cent rates have been made to kiddies under 15 years of age as an incentive for them to turn out en masse.



Another one of Sonny's specialties is getting a serial off to a strong start. Some of our readers may recall a story published in this department last summer concerning his activities with "Heroes of the Flames." In that instance he had a good portion of the local fire department assisting with the exploitation of that serial by way of putting on an exhibition of a series of safety stunts. One of these stunts, showing a fireman leaping from a building into a net held by other members of the crew, is pictured above. Other fire-fighting activities were put on in a vacant lot across the street from the theatre. Believe it or not, there was some gang of youngsters on hand for the opening of that serial.

He recently started a campaign on a new serial, "The Air Mail Mystery," and while a little gag used did not tie in particularly with the picture, it was the means of stirring up a lot of interest among the younger element. What he did (and he states he believes the idea came from some other "brother") was to let the kiddies know that they could get in the theatre free for the first showing by presenting one penny, providing that the coin bore an Indian head and date of 1893. Merchants have been pestered by the kids for pennies and incidentally received an earful about the serial. The merchants in turn tell the customers about the gag. And so it goes, to the intense satisfaction of Mr. Shepherd.

Additional activities on shorts include the playing up of any local news shots in a big way; the circularization of dance schools whenever some clever specialty dance reels are to be shown, and consistent mention of shorts in all newspaper ads, despite the fact that this space is limited to a small daily allotment.

Shepherd is convincing in his arguments in support of the short subject and we have it on good authority that whenever he has a good one on hand increased returns at the box office have always justified the additional exploitation. Some of his tips in the above paragraphs may help one of his brother showmen over a tough spot and, if so, then we've done our duty in this instance.

"SCREEN SOUVENIRS"

If there is any short subject which has captured the audience's affections, it certainly is "Screen Souvenirs." The series have now reached the point where the opening title is greeted with a spontaneous round of applause, not only on Times Square but on Main Street too.

If you have yet to run one of the "Screen Souvenirs" get busy and spot them on schedule. You'll find an audience reaction that mighty few shorts or even features can boast of.

LOCAL NEWS SHOTS!

The importance of having a newsreel representative on hand to "shoot" an outstanding local event is brought to mind by a paragraph in a front page story in a Winchester, Va., newspaper, to effect that not one but four sound news outfits will be on hand May 1st to record the Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival.

This stunt was arranged by Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, and a showman whose exploits you've often seen recounted in this department. The newspaper notice mentions him as a member of the Festival publicity committee and as the person responsible for the coming of the newsreel men. Good work, Frank, and we'll say that that was looking ahead. Other members of this club will undoubtedly profit from your tip by getting busy on the lining up of a sound reel for one of their future local events.

Radio Stars in Shorts

Several of the most popular radio stars will appear in short subjects scheduled for release in the next three months, Paramount has announced. Among them are Alice (Dream Girl) Joy; Arthur (Street Singer) Tracy; Vincent Lopez; Eddie Younger and His Mountaineers; The Musketeers, and Ethel Merman.

Griswold Promoted

Charles Griswold, for several years manager of the Roxy Theatre, New York City, was recently promoted to the post of general manager by Harry Kosch, president of Roxy Theatres, Inc. It is planned to operate the Roxy independent of any producer affiliations.

LEE USES PROGRAMS, HERALDS AND PAPER TO PLAY UP SHORTS

Programs, heralds and newspaper ads are all used to play up outstanding short subjects, or for a complete listing of the entire program, by Harold C. Lee, manager of the Babcock Theatre, Bath, N. Y.

Laurel & Hardy comedies, Slim Summervilles, "Strange As It Seems" cartoons and others receive their share of space, according to some newspaper tear sheets we have at hand. A herald recently issued when "Man Who Played God" was current was headed, "Celebrate—Washington's Bi-Centennial at the Babcock." About one-third of the herald was devoted to "Washington, The Man and Capitol."

Which all goes to show that this Round Tabler is not losing any opportunities to make outstanding short subjects do their share of the work for the good old box office. When the subjects are worth shouting about he sees they receive mention.

Lee is going through his usual seige of Spring Fever about this time, brightening up the marquee and doing plenty of other work to keep his house in good shape, therefore we're flattered that he stopped long enough during his routine to let us know what he thinks of short subjects. This is the first we've heard from him since the Brothers Skouras took over his house and we're glad to report that everything is moving along at a satisfactory pace.

MORE TO COME!

Due to lack of space in this issue a number of articles on short subject exploitation were forced aside for future publication. These, however, will appear in future issues and we wish to take this opportunity to thank every member of the Round Table Club who responded to our request to submit material of this nature.

SCANLON ALSO SEES THAT SHORT FEATURE IS GIVEN ITS BREAK

Torrington, Conn., where Johnny Scanlon manages the New Warner Theatre, appears to be one of those rare spots in New England where the single feature still prevails, according to some tear sheets of a local newspaper. Therefore it follows that Scanlon gives considerable thought to filling out his bill with an interesting assortment of short subjects.

Recent newspaper ads bear witness that he lets his public know what's playing in addition to the feature picture. Headed by such words as "Added Enjoyment," "Other Treats," etc., he lists his added attractions. We also note that the newspaper readers, in addition to giving a description of the feature, also carry a paragraph or so for the short reels.

BOUCHER ON THE JOB WHEN NEW FORD CAR MADE ITS APPEARANCE

Taking advantage of the Ford insert in a recent issue of the Universal Newsreel, Frank Boucher, of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., tied up with a local Ford dealer for the cooperative ad which we are showing on this page.

Maybe the Ford does steal the ad—as a matter of fact, nothing could touch it in show-business all over the country on the day it appeared—but you will note that the Capitol Theatre received mention at the top and current and coming attractions got a break at the foot of the ad. Both theatre and auto dealer were mentioned in the amusement columns.

Boucher believes a good feature is always made better by good shorts and that a poor feature is always helped by a good short subject; in other words, the short is a balance wheel to any show. Hence, we note that he never misses a chance to give his shorts a boxed mention in newspaper display ads. We are glad to record that he is one of the enterprising showmen on the job to take advantage of the wave of publicity churned up by the new Ford car. That newsreel was made to order for the opportunity.

HOBBY GAVE CHAPLIN RE-ISSUE PLENTY OF MENTION IN HIS ADS

Charlie Chaplin's old two reeler, "A Dog's Life," is apparently still good for heavy mention in newspaper display ads, at least it was about a year ago when it was run as a short feature by Jack Hobby, manager of the RKO Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I.

In a long two column ad we note that Hobby gave it a good sized break as a "Roaring Two Reel Comedy" and billed it as an added attraction. In another smaller ad space was equally divided between feature and comedy.

All of which is definite proof that there's still plenty of life in those old Chaplin two reel comedies. Like an editor of a leading New York newspaper stated not long ago, or as near as we can recall his words, "what might do this country a lot of good is a return engagement of those old custard pie throwing pictures that Chaplin used to be seen in." So that's that. We just wanted you all to know that Hobby also thinks a good short is worth some space.

JANECKY PUT OVER BIG TIE-UP WHEN SELLING A COMEDY

Some time before Harold Janecky came East to take charge of the Lynbrook Theatre, Lynbrook, L. I., he was in charge of the Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., where he and his associates were always on the job when it came to putting over shows.

Among the many selling campaigns he made for the Warner was a corking tie-up used in connection with a Laurel & Hardy comedy. He arranged with twelve local merchants for a give-away of fifty suits of Faultless pajamas, a deal in line with arrangements already made between manufacturer and players.

Boys!

Each of the twelve stores came through with a window such as you seen in the accompanying illustration, all tying up the merchandise with the two reel comedy. Patrons were given checks when they entered the theatre and at a designated time each of the fifty received a pair of pajamas free. The photo also shows a lobby display of a cutout of Laurel & Hardy that was used on this occasion.

We're mighty glad to hear from Janecky again, for this is the first peep from this showman since he left his Milwaukee stand. Also, glad to know that he is getting along so nicely down in Lynbrook. We'll be looking for a call from him next time he runs into town.

AESOP'S FABLES NOW IN 12th YEAR

That old veteran of cartoons, Aesop's Fables, conceived by Howard Estabrook and Paul Terry more than 12 years ago, is well on its way to the six hundredth edition at this writing.

When Amedee J. Van Beuren backed his faith in the Aesop cartoon, consensus of the trade was that the new fad would last about one year at the most. Van Beuren thought differently and consequently made seven of the short subjects before he even lined up distribution channels.

Succeeding years of popularity for these shorts have upheld the producer's judgment and current editions of Aesop Fables feature the same characters as when originally presented.

BRENNAN KNOWS HOW TO EXTRACT REVENUE FROM SHORT FEATURES

Marquee space and generous space in programs is none too much to give deserving short subjects, thinks Charles J. Brennan, manager of the Queen Anne Theatre, Bogota, N. J., and data at hand backs up his contention.

The reproduction of a portion of his program, showing a Thursday-Friday show, tells its own story, with at least half space devoted to a Mickey Mouse cartoon, a Laurel & Hardy comedy and a Kiddie Revue on the stage. It was billed as a "Big Four-Feature Program," and to our way of thinking it was quite a lot of billing, aside from the feature attraction.

Mickey is a great drawing card over Bogota way and Brennan doesn't hesitate for a moment to tack his name up right alongside the feature on the marquee. We have a small snapshot on hand to prove that he does just that. Display frames for sidewalk and lobby are also used for one-sheets on the cartoon.

Brennan has quite a Kiddie Club at the Queen Anne and his Saturday matinees are the joy of the younger element. On these occasions he puts on a specially selected program of sports, a recent one consisting of a Fox Movietone News; a Mickey Mouse; "The Village Specialist"; Smith & Dale in "Fur, Fur, Away"; Gallagher & Sheehan in songs; Chapter Four of Rin-Tin-Tin in "Lighting Warrior"; Buck Jones in "Texas Ranger" and Tiger King, the Wonder Dog, on the stage. Kiddie Club prizes polished off the program.

He never loses an opportunity to make a Laurel & Hardy comedy, a Charlie Chase or Our Gang do a share of the work for the box office and experience has taught him that these two-reelers will often bring in patrons when some feature will fail to turn the trick. In the next week or so he plans to play a Minnie the Moocher cartoon with Cab Calloway. In view of Calloway's popularity over the radio and attendant publicity, this number will receive equal billing with feature on the lobby front, programs and heralds. And you may believe us when we state that the feature is not a weak one.

"Gold is in them thar shorts and he's one of the prospectors that's looking for that gold," states Brennan, and there can be no doubt but that his balanced programs are doing much for the Queen Anne's box office. He hopes that other Club members, similarly situated, may derive some benefit from the above suggestions.

SELL YOUR SHORTS!

(From "PUBLIX OPINION")

The buying public has become quality and quantity wise.

Its habits of prudent shopping now extend to every field of merchandise, including motion pictures. People now ask How Much? as well as How Good?

Are you telling them How Much they get when they turn in their good coin at your box-office? Are you telling them How Big your program is, how diversified, how stimulating, entertaining, and satisfying?

The difference between a sale at your box-office and a sale at the opposition house across the street often hinges on nothing more significant than a SHORT! Do you ever stop to think of that?

Betty Boop, Mickey Mouse and Screen Souvenirs are frequently the magnets that draw a patron's hesitating footsteps across the threshold of a theatre. All people like comedies, and will go out of their way to see them, provided you don't make a secret of their presence.

Some people like music (once we used to think that many people like music). A good musical short deserves at least a mention. It may be the feather that tips the scale in favor of a sale.

Tell your patrons that your screen offers a well rounded bill of fare. Enumerate the zestful, stimulating appetizers, the red meat of drama, the sweet dessert of comedy.

Play up the comedy. In a world gone gloomy, people want to laugh. If your feature is a drama, or a tear-jerker, or a melodrama, be sure to say "and a comedy" when talking about your attractions. It will sell tickets.

List your shorts in all newspaper ads, on trailers, and on lobby boards. DON'T SELL SHORTS SHORT.

FRED PERRY STRONG ADVOCATE OF SHORT REELS ON PROGRAMS

Little exploitation is given "name" shorts at the Capitol Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., a house managed by Fred Perry, for the simple reason that the featured players are considered strong enough to sell that portion of the program without incurring additional expense. However, he is a strong believer in the drawing power of the short reel.

For instance, he believes that the bare statement—"Hal Roach Presents an Our Gang"—is sufficient to stimulate interest among the short subject fans. As a matter of fact, Perry is somewhat of a short subject fan himself and he keeps in close touch with that end of the show. He is always on the alert for comment and audience reaction during and following the playing of a short feature and his statement regarding exploitation is based on years of experience.

If the short needed to be sold in his city we believe that Perry would see that the proper effort was made, for he's one of the most seasoned showmen in his section of New York State. We repeat that he likes the short subject—and one of the main reasons for this, is, that he doesn't have to sepnd a lot of money and time to exploit them. His message is, therefore, directed to those who have yet to be sold on the value of the short subject as a box office stimulator, and we're glad to be able to pass along his hint to get aboard the wagon.

RIPLEY CARTOON IS CONSIDERED NATURAL FOR NEWSPAPER DEAL

In many of the larger cities where newspapers are running the Vitaphone "Believe it or Not" shorts, theatres are tying up for a "natural" along publicity lines.

The newspaper runs a review of each short on the same page with the cartoons and in exchange the theatre runs a 10-seconds trailer immediately after showing of the short announcing that Ripley's "Believe it or Not" cartoon appears exclusively in (name of paper).

Beneath the cartoon the paper comes back with "You can see and hear Robert Ripley on the screen at (name of theatre)." The newspapers also carry generous readers on the cartoons.

LAMM GIVES SHORTS BREAK DESPITE TWO FEATURE EACH SHOW

Although a double feature policy holds down to a minimum showings of short subjects at the Paradise Theatre, Allis, Wis., Manager Louis Lamm realizes the value of short reels to his program and plugs them at every opportunity.

A couple of snapshots at hand show displays made for a Mickey Mouse Valentine Party and a Boy Scout demonstration made during a "Good-Will Good-Turn" Week. These are too faint for clear reproduction, but evidence that Lamm is not losing sight of these particular angles in show-business. Both displays were set in the lobby about two weeks in advance, the former decorated with caricatures of Mickey Mouse and the latter containing a board display of paraphernalia loaned by a local Scout troop.

While the Bobby Jones shorts were shown last season, it's worth while to note that Lamm issued a card with punch marks to cover the entire series of 12 reels. Fully punched cards figured in the give-away of a golf set at expiration of the showings. The reverse side of the card tied up the deal with a local sporting goods store.

McDONOUGH TIED-UP WITH JEWELRY STORE TO BOOST WEAK NIGHT

A local tie-up with a jewelry concern has been effected by A. J. McDonough, manager of the Bell Theatre, Scranton, Pa., which practically assures the theatre of a better than average attendance on Thursday nights.

The jewelry concern donates a beautiful article of jewelry which is given to one of the theatre patrons in attendance on that particular night. Some of the gifts include silverware, mesh bags, pen and pencil sets, rings, lockets, bill folds, lighters, etc.

Press Books on Shorts

Comprehensive press sheets have been prepared for many shorts produced by M-G-M and include Laurel-Hardies; Charley Chase; "The Two Barks Brothers"; "Boy Friends"; Pitts-Todd comedies; "Sport Champions"; Fisherman's Paradise Series; Our Gang; Sir Harry Lauder, and others. The sheets contain valuable suggestions for the promotion of shorts and full lines of accessories.

"Our Gang" Novelties

Two new novelties have been made available by the producers of "Our Gang" comedies for give-aways. One is the Our Gang Polo Top, consisting of a spring-wind top and two whips by which the top may be kept spinning indefinitely. The game may be used for give-aways over a three-week period, the whip given away for each of the first two weeks and finally the top on the third week.

Clay figures of "Our Gang" are also reported good business builders for both matinee and evening performances. These are furnished with a stage background for coloring by children and the complete set includes ten figures and a set of palettes for mixing paint. In many cases art classes of grade schools have been glad to cooperate with theatres in coloring contests.

Additional information on the above can ben secured from the Round Table Club or the Metro Home Office.

LIST OF CATCHLINES JIM LANDERS USED TO PLUG HIS SHORT REELS

Elsewhere among the material on short subject exploitation is a constructive article by Jim Landers, manager of the Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, Texas. Following is a list containing a variety of catchlines he has used time-and-again with excellent results. Adaptable to almost any short subject, we believe that many members of the Club will be able to put these lines to practical use.

"The Ace comedian"; "Famous laugh team"; "You'll die laughing, but don't worry, we sell insurance"; "Rubeville on parade for your enjoyment"; "News events heard round the world"; "A knockout of a comedy"; "They lead—others follow"; "Something new in song cartoons"; "Delightful and spicy comedy"; "The songbirds of Hollywood"; "You can't pass up a ——— comedy"; "Paramount Sound News, from the North to the South Pole it leads the way"; "It's a jolt for the pessimists"; "Some ridiculous mirth"; "That unbeatable laughmaker"; "The world's leading pictorial newspaper in sound"; "Paramount Sound News, hot off the press"; "It's a show in itself"; "And now hold on to your seats and listen to this"; "Interestingly serious for just a moment"; "Some sense and some nonsense"; "This comedy took Broadway by storm"; "When a better news is made, Paramount will make it"; "Beauty and song brought to life"; "It's a rip-roaring comedy"; "With a line of chatter a mile long and a laugh in every foot"; "He'll insure you against gloom"; "Full of the kind of laughs you read about"; "Here's a scream for you"; "This one lays you out in the aisles".

It's been some time since we last heard from Jim Landers, not since he moved from San Antone to Dallas. However, we might know that when he did come through we'd get a sample of his usual constructive brand of showmanship. For which we and his fellow Club members offer thanks and the hope that he will not remain silent so long again. He has sent many fine articles in the past and now that he's located in the live show city of Dallas, we'll be looking for other interesting contributions.

YOUR PUBLIC

by

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

RADIO mail, club women's reports from every state in the country, the ballots that are coming in on the nationwide Preference Poll of the MPPDA, the personal letters that pour in to this department, all bring the same grateful acknowledgment. With an almost unanimous voice they say: "The short features are the joy of the program! But why do not theatre men advertise their shorts so that we may know where to find the things we want to see?"

In the past year the national reviewing groups representing five major organizations announced that short features had improved in artistry, technique, entertainment value and photographic beauty more than any other type of picture. By actual statistical count they agreed that 80 per cent of the short features are now winning endorsement.

Quality in Shorts

The short feature is the appetizer of the program and, as is so often the case, the hors d'oeuvre is more piquant than the feast. In fact, for many months a great cross-section of the public has found the feast not much to its liking. And so the short feature has won more of attention and high praise.

The one and two-reel pictures are bringing to us with increasing authenticity and charm, travelogues of adventures in the remote corners of the world, from the jungles of Africa to the peaks of Mount Blanc, Timbuctoo, Manchuria, wartorn China, forgotten rivers, glaciers, Tahiti, the glamor of the South Sea Islands—all these things have come to the screen with a wealth of educational value, and a very definite box office appeal.

The good showman, recognizing the drawing power of the exceptional short feature, books them with careful discrimination. And if he has a good golf comedy, Babe Ruth at the bat, or an unusual scenic, he will advertise this fact in a prominent way, not only in the lobby of his theatre, but in his paid newspaper advertising.

Chicago's New Film Council

Representatives of motion picture producers and distributors endorsed this week the plan of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs to form a better films council intended to advise on programs of neighborhood houses.

The motion picture men met with the district chairman of the federation at a luncheon in the Hotel Sherman and pledged their co-operation in providing better films, especially for juveniles. The council, according to Mrs. R. H. McClure, chairman of the meeting, will meet for organization on Tuesday.

"The better films council will consist of a previewing committee," Mrs. McClure explained. "We will then relay to the members of the organization and to the theatre men whether the picture is suitable for children or adults. We hope eventually to establish a family night on Fridays and a junior matinee on Saturdays."

From the executive committee of the Wooster Better Movies Association, the following interesting message has come to this department:

"In order to provide discriminating persons with an unprejudiced guide in their selection of movie entertainment, the Wooster Better Movies Association presents its regular report on films to be shown at the local theatres during the current period.

"The judgment is not composed of the personal opinions of the members of the committee, but is quoted directly from the National Film Estimate Service. In exceptional cases it may be necessary to quote from other agencies, which will be indicated at that time. Only feature subjects are listed, as few ratings are available on short comedies, newsreels, etc."

Theatre Managers Cooperate

"The association wishes to express its appreciation of the co-operation extended by the managers of the local theatres, who present to it their programs early enough to make this service possible.

"What the Symbols mean: (A) for adults; (Y) for youths 15 to 20 years; (C) for children under 15 years.

50-Cent Ticket Admits Family

Once a week at Miss Julia Dolan's theatre at Coxsackie, New York, it is "family night," when a 50-cent charge will pay admission for father, mother, and all the young ones.

Massachusetts Film Minded

The motion picture chairman of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs has sent to us the following surprising figures which will be presented in the official report at the annual meeting of the Federation at Swampscott, May 18 to 21st:

> 320 clubs in the state have motion picture advisors.
> These groups have centralized their activities through eight motion picture councils.
> The compiled lists of better pictures issued by the Federation are printed in eleven important papers.
> All of which is highly significant of the growing power of organized club work in behalf of good pictures.

Music Week

The big return in the mail that has come to this department on the suggestions for Music Week, printed in a recent issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has been extraordinarily interesting. It is evident that many theatre managers believe there is an appeal in the musical picture, and that the proper observance of the week beginning May 1 will give them an opportunity to offer a cultural as well as finely entertaining program.

In addition to the features and shorts already listed in these columns, the following one and two-reel subjects will be found to be excellent and appropriate material for Music Week:

"Puss in Boots," Picture Classics, Inc. This is a charming version of the fairy story presented in operetta form, and one of the best pictures for small children that has been made in a long time.

"Milady's Escapade," Educational Pictures, is the first of a new series of Kendall-de Vally Operalogues, and is a delightful short version of the Von Flotow opera, "Martha." (2 reels.)

"Peg Leg Pete," Educational Pictures. This is a one-reel cartoon operetta in the Terry-Toons and is bright and clever entertainment.

Educational Pictures also has to its credit the following endorsed musical shorts: "Jingle Bells," "Radio Girl," both of which have catchy tunes; Bing Crosby singing "I Surrender, Dear," "One More Chance," "Dream House" and "Billboard Girl"; the new Vanity Comedies (Al Christie Productions) titled "That Rascal" and "He's a Honey" with Harry Barris, composer of "I Surrender, Dear," and numerous other popular songs. Barris plays some of his best known hits in these comedies.

MUSIC AND TALENT

Success at House Indicates Desire For Stage Shows

The success of the stage show policy at the Kansas City Pantages theatre, which recently inaugurated vaudeville with films, is seen as indicating the return of stage presentations to the city.

The Pantages reopened three months ago after being closed nearly a year. L. M. Garman, manager, tested the house with a straight film policy. Finding that the house had a good chance for a comeback, he arranged for vaudeville through the William Morris agency. Reported success of the new policy in the first three weeks has led Garman to believe there is a local demand for good vaudeville at low admissions.

A stage-band form of presentation is maintained. Harlan Christie, a local favorite, is master of ceremonies. The management scored when it signed Christie as he gained a large following during 96 weeks as m.c. at the RKO Mainstreet. Christie left Kansas City about two years ago and since then has been m.c in St. Louis, with Balaban & Katz in Chicago and in New York. Four acts are limited to about eight minutes each and they are not allowed encores, as it is the management's intention to present a fast-moving show. Garman believes a long,drawn-out stage show satiates the patrons, while rapid presentation whets the appetite for the balance of the program.

The admission price has been increased from 20 cents at matinees and 35 cents at evening shows to 25 cents after 2 o'clock and 40 cents after 5 o'clock, with Sundays 25 cents to 2 o'clock and 40 cents after that.

Ziegfeld Radio Show To Have Prominent Stage, Film Stars

Outstanding stage and screen stars will be featured during the broadcast, on April 24, of the fourth presentation of the "Ziegfeld Radio Show," over a WABC-Columbia network of 70 stations. Eddie Dowling will act as master of ceremonies.

Among the stars to be present will be Dennis King, Ray Dooley, Ethel Merman, Jack Pearl, Al Goodman and the Ziegfeld theatre orchestra, Charles Carlile, radio tenor. A mixed chorus of 12 voices will also be featured.

General Electric Sponsors Air Program for Musicians

Concert and opera stars will participate in a radio program on May 1 sponsored by General Electric, for the benefit of the Musicians Emergency Aid. The broadcast will be over a national NBC network.

An audience at the studio will be charged admission, the proceeds going to the fund for unemployed musicians. Walter Damrosch, dean of American conductors, will act as master of ceremonies.

JOHN GART

This young chap is making a name for himself as conductor of music at his new stand, Loew's Gates Theatre, Brooklyn. He is a former organist, incidentally having played in a number of houses in which he is now directing the orchestras.

Mills Brothers on Tour of Publix Houses; Also on Air

The Mills Brothers, Negro vocal group which has played numerous film theatres, have opened a 16-week tour of Publix houses in the key cities of the East and Midwest.

While on tour, the group will render its radio programs each Tuesday and Thursday evening from the Columbia Broadcasting System station in the city they happen to be playing.

Radio Players on Stage Bills

Paramount houses in southern Ohio and Indiana are featuring radio stars of Station WLW, one of the Crosley stations in Cincinnati, in acts supplementary to the films. The stars are appearing at intervals of about two weeks.

Cambria's First at Capitol

Frank Cambria is offering his first stage presentation at the New York Capitol since his recent affiliation with the house. The presentation is titled, "Three Screens," and features Mitchell and Durant, comedy team.

M.C. in Screen Role

Dick Powell, master of ceremonies at the Pittsburgh Stanley for three years, has been signed by Warner for a role in "The Blessed Event," starring Lee Tracy, and set for Coast production shortly.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Roxy

Week ending April 21

"Gay Vienna," the stage presentation in five scenes, produced by Clark Robinson, with the assistance of Russell E. Markert, Florence Rogge, Marco Montedoro and James Morcom, currently playing at the "Cathedral," features Lottice Howell and Fred Waring as its stars.

Opening with the overture, "Melodies from Vienna," "Gay Vienna" then features "Caprice Viennois." Opening with a cyclorama sky scene with the Roxy Ballet Corps and Samuel Antek posed to represent statues which, as Antek plays a violin solo, come to life and do a graceful grecian dance and finish with their original pose. Patricia Bowman and Charles Collins present an unusual ballet routine, and do very well.

Leona Smith, young girl cornetist, did a great solo of the popular song, "Zwei Herzen." She was followed by the 32 Roxyettes, all dressed as "Hussars," in a military precision march, which they did to stirring strains played by Waring's orchestra. Princess Elsie and Her Hungarian Orchestra offer a group of "Gypsy Airs," which they play from the ornamental balconies.

The finale features Denova's Male Singers, Lottice Howell, Ernest McChesney, Belle Flower, the Ballet Corps and the Roxyettes. The scene is called, "The Prater," and opens with a German Drinking Song, sung by Denova and his singers with the dancers following and the entire company joining in for the grand finale.

San Francisco Golden Gate

Week ending April 14

The Golden Gate has been turned into a clinic this week, with Doctor George Rockwell holding the pulses of capacity audiences and prescribing laughs as the cure for the blues, or what have you. He has the distinction of being entirely original and distinctively funny, with every performance varying from the preceding one.

The show opens with Vernon Rathburn and his aggregation of saxophonists, but it remains for the dancing number of the tribe to walk away with the honors. Somehow, the old standby, "Saxophobia," fails to thrill listeners as it used to.

Edith Bow, who is a treat for sore eyes, tells in song about boys and girls in the old days, as contrasted with moderns, and gets quite a hand, especially for her monologue as a party girl.

Doctor Rockwell, who is making his first Coast tour in five years, proceeds to dissect the human anatomy in a running fire of wisecracks leaving his patients in a state bordering on exhaustion from laughing. If the audience had its way the genial doctor would be kept at his fun indefinitely, but time is the essence of a show and all good things must come to an end. The fun-maker lets his patients down easy by offering to sit in on the next act, that of the Electric Trio, made up of Wes and Lisa Adams and Bernice Mershon. Wes and Lisa do some fine dancing in classical style, with a running fire of comment from the quack, quack artist. When Bernice sings he remodels her dress and his work with the shears brings gasps from the ladies, but the operation proves a howling success.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Capitol

Week ending April 21

Frank Cambria's first production, "Three Screens," proved a novel and entertaining presentation. Though this show was not as pretentious as some Cambria has produced, it nevertheless showed in many instances the ability of this producer. Louis K. Sidney personally supervised this production.

Opening with a beautiful Spanish scene in which Joe Griffin, tenor, Chaney and Fox, tango dancers, and the Chester Hale Girls participate, the show swiftly moves on to an equally beautiful early French scene in which Stella Powers, soprano, Chaney and Fox and the Chester Hale Girls are prominently featured. Between these two scenes, Al Norman, eccentric dancer offers his routine of stories and dancing, and is received well by the audience. After the French scene, Joe Griffin gets a very good reaction from the audience for his beautiful singing of "Lawd, You Made the Night Too Long." The stars of the show, Mitchell and Durant, follow with their routine of gags and other foolishness. The boys work hard, in fact nearly kill each other, but fail to do anything outstanding in the way of stopping the show. The finale, in which the entire company appears, was outstanding for its beauty. The show, as a whole, was well balanced and not only proved spectacular but entertaining as well.

Denver Denver

Week ending April 6

Fanchon and Marco's "Five Races" Idea is minus the usual line, but things are kept moving fast by Frank Jenks, who is master of ceremonies. Jenks, with a blonde foil, also does a turn. Idea started with Jenks giving audience lesson out of geography, and drop, when pulled up, shows band on stage and map of half the world showing through opening in rear curtain. Map is raised and acts make entrance through opening, with map back in place afterwards. Chief Clearsky, Indian, opening single, sings several songs. Has a voice not pleasing at first, but improves. His chatter good for laughs and gets a big hand at close. Two girls, Jones and Henry, do a dance routine with huge feather fans, using fans in various ways from shields to making a huge parasol. Here Frank Jenks' act is spotted, and with a blonde girl foil, pulls a lot of gags, old and otherwise, with stale business of kicking self in pants and saying "I get it"—talking down to the audience—not so good. Their takeoff, while not directly aimed at the Salvation Army, is so taken, and is out of place. Only used to build up to chatter about sending clothes to naked savages. Tabor and Greene, blackface, one a pianist and both vocalists, are well received. Their jokes are good for almost continuous laughs and their "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" is their best song. Audience tried to get them back, but next act was forced on in spite of the applause. The Kanazawa troupe gave about 10 minutes of tumbling and tossing each other about with the feet, from one to another, passing in air, etc. Unit could have used 10 minutes more.

Detroit Michigan

Week ending April 7

Vincent Lopez and his St. Regis orchestra are featured this week on the Michigan stage, with a bill of entertainers titled "All Star Broadway Revue." The show brings a certain swanky polish that is carried just far enough to be impressive. Paul Small, radio tenor, wins audience interest with tender "mike" vocalizing. His voice comes to the audience via loudspeaker. Darlene Walders, acrobatic dancer, works with amazing speed and precision. Other headliners on the bill are Jimmy Ray, Johnny Morris, Lou Bring and John Ingraham. Lou Bring, pianist, leaves the ivories long enough to put over a novel rhythm exaggeration, using the melody and lyric of "Bye Bye Blues," scrambled to suit his needs. The drummer led "The Drummer Man" with clowned lyric and gestures. Of a serious nature was the final orchestral number, "The Spirit of 1776," including an effective symphonic interpretation of Paul Revere's ride. A scrim traveller behind the orchestra opened to reveal a river scene with the belfry of the North Church on its shore. As the music continued two lights appeared in the belfry. The Brenkert effect was used to depict the Spirit of '76 and the ride of Paul Revere.

Salt Lake City Orpheum

Week ending April 6

On the stage "Sunkist" Eddie Nelson takes the top place with his intimate conversation, which draws hearty laughter. Pressing him hard as a laugh distributor is the trained seal, Charlie, put through his paces and his top notes by Ray Huling. Deno and Rochelle in pantomimic dance divertissement score big, and the Royal Uyeno troupe of tumblers do excellent work.

Ona Munson in Stock

Ona Munson, screen player, is appearing with the National Theatre players, in a season of stock in Washington, D. C.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Freddy Mack, the new music director at the Brooklyn Fox, is certainly building up a great following. . . . Freddy has been at this stand for the past eight weeks and is going great. . . . Incidentally it might be mentioned here that Freddy started out to be an electrical engineer and a banker; in fact, he received his degrees at Yale for engineering and for finance at N. Y. U. . . . but it was while attending the Yale Music School that he got the "music bug." . . . Freddy is just another college grad gone wrong. . . .

Ruth Etting, headliner of the "Music that Satisfies" programs was honored by a jury of Chicago artists not long ago when they chose her as the happiest combination of beauty and brains that they had ever seen. . . As a result she was asked to pose for a portrait to be entitled "Beauty and Brains," but, modestly, she refused. . . . "Her action confirms our judgment," one of the artists said.

Harold Ramsey, former organist at the Palace, Dallas, Texas, who has just completed his fourth and last week as musical director at the same house, is on his way to England, where he will preside at the console of the new Plaza theatre, London. . . . Fred Shawn, formerly of the quartette known as the "Four Cheerleaders," is now station announcer for WLW, Cincinnati. . . . Musical memories will again come to life in San Antonio, the Alamo City, when Ernest Hauser, composer-musician takes up the baton and leads his Ork in a massed musicale the first week in May. . . . Leslie Ketner, brother of the Herald's San Antonio scribe, is now the premiere drummer at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. . . . Elsie (Songbird) Thompson, the beautiful half of the organ team of Merle Clark and Elsie Thompson, over at the Brooklyn Paramount, is back on the job again, much to the delight of all her ardent fans. . . . I understand, that this team will be heard over station WOR in the near future. . . . You'll understand, after hearing them over the air, just why they are so popular at the Paramount. . . . Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians, currently at the Brooklyn Paramount sure are swell and it seems to me that even though "Follow Thru" is billed for the house, Guy and his music should be held over. . . . Olsen and Johnson, latest of the musical comedy and vaud stars to succumb to the lure of Hollywood, were recently presented with a gorgeous silver plaque by RKO officials for breaking all house-records while they were playing the Chicago Palace. . . . The boys have signed with the Van Beuren Corp. for a series of two-reel hokum pictures. . . .

You'll probably be looking around for a song to fit in your Mother's Day and Father's Day programs. . . . Let me give you a tip. . . . Handman and Goodman, Inc., are publishing the song, "That Daddy and Mother of Mine," a song which in my opinion is most appropriate for either of these holidays. . . . Incidentally, DeSylva, Brown and Henderson are lending their moral support to the song and have been appointed the selling agents. . . . Because the name, "Mills Dance Orchestras, Inc." did not correctly reflect the activities of his office, Irving Mills, sponsor of Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Baron Lee and other attractions, has changed the name to "Mills Artist Bureau, Inc." . . . Incidently Mr. Mills is assembling his first white orchestra over which Eddie Elkins will wield the baton. . . .

ORGAN SOLOS

GUS FARNEY (Salt Lake Capitol) recently presented an organ solo which was outstanding in its merits and surprisingly novel as well. Though the solo was a direct advertisement for the forthcoming Chevalier picture, "One Hour With You," it was put over so well that the usual "sting" of this type solo was missing and the audience did not realize they were being "sold." The popular Farney called the solo "Imitations," and opened with explanatory talk about the imitations. The first one is an imitation of how Paul Whiteman would play "When Day Is Done" on the organ. Next the audience are to imitate themselves on "One Hour with You." Incidentally they fall down somewhat on the tune, it being so new, so Farney had a professional singer backstage sing the number. At this time, Farney leaves the theatre, but the organ apparently continues to play. In reality the song, "We Will Always Be Sweethearts," is being played on a backstage portable organ and organ roll. After this tune, a slide announces Tony Farnola, who will imitate Chevalier. This Farnola fellow turns out to be Farney himself, and his playing of "What Would You Do" on an accordion and his imitation of Chevalier are both very good. As a grand finale, Farney brings the solo to a close with a flourish of his straw hat.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio RKO-Majestic) rendered a most pleasing organ solo last week titled "U-Auto-No." Abel's first selection was a parody on "A Cottage for Sale"; next, Earl had them all humming and whistling "Paradise"; then came "Was That the Human Thing to Do?"; and closed his presentation with a number to the tune of "The Sidewalks of New York." He drew a nice hand at the finish.

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) provided plenty of amusement for the patrons this week in his entertaining solo entitled, "A Radio Popularity Contest." Opening slide told the audience to applaud their favorite radio star as the pictures were shown. Al, as the pictures are shown, talks into the "mike" similar to each announcer as he plays each theme song. As Bing Crosby's picture is shown, Al played "Blue of the Night," and followed with a chorus of "Human Thing to Do," for the audience to sing. Balance of the songs were "Somebody Loves You," "Paradise," "Rhymes" and "You're the One." Special lyrics and clever dialogue featured the solo and the applause at the finish necessitated an encore for which Al played "Chop Down the Old Pine Tree."

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood), with a crazy slide text on the theme of Ripley's "Believe It or Not" and on the apt musical background of "I Don't Know Why" and "You Call It Madness," carried a responsive audience through a group of four well chosen popular melodies. "Lies" brought out the first timid audience echoes. "Strangers" overcame the inhibitions of strangers. "Two Loves" and "Home" balanced the program.

Use solos that hit "the spot."

DICK LIEBERT (Jersey City Loew's) didn't help that old spring fever feeling a bit this week. He called his community sing, "Spring," and had the audience singing "Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "By the Fireside," "Paradise," "How Long Will It Last," and a parody on spring to the last named tune. Dick's intimate manner of working, his infectious smile and his fine playing helped greatly in putting over an otherwise uninteresting solo. His big surprise and the part that earned him a great hand was his playing of the overture, "Poet and Peasant." Lately, after community singing is over, Liebert has been offering the patrons some really fine playing of the difficult type for the finish of his solos and these selections are partly responsible for his rapidly mounting popularity.

HERBIE (New Orleans Publix Saenger) doesn't get over so well with his current solo, a spring parody, cleverly handled, which opens with remarks about spring rhymed to the melody of "Sleepy Time Down South," goes into "One More Kiss," an automobile parody on a Bing Crosby tune which brings in the Ford and other cars, a humming of "Home," followed by a parody which takes politicians and almost every one else for a ride. Herbie worked hard, his material was clever, but the audience failed to respond, with the exception of the humming on the "Home" number.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum) continued with his singing class, the audience singing "Strangers" and "Before We Say Goodbye." He himself sang "Paradise" and then accompanied Frank Davis, an usher, who sang "Old Man River" in a deep bass to great applause.

OVERTURES

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) who has relieved Stan Meyers as conductor of the Jazzmonic Rhythm Kings, opened his engagement with a flourishing overture that served as prologue to the Fanchon and Marco "Slavique" Idea. Through this presentation, titled "Overture Russe," runs the bizarre atmosphere of gypsy music. Here is a range of tone and feeling that promises a bright future for the newcomer. Outstanding was a muted cornet solo of "Dark Eyes."

FRED WARING (New York Roxy) directed the Roxy Theatre Orchestra in an overture composed of "Melodies of Vienna." Included in the compilation are special arrangements of "Czardas," from "Countess Maritza"; "The Old Refrain," selections from "Die Fledermaus," "Every Little Movement," "I Kiss Your Hand, Madame," and "When Day Is Done." Miss Lottice Howell is featured in a vocal solo of the last named number. This young, personable leader and his group of young and versatile musicians is certainly an improvement over the old order of things at this house and it is with no attempt to flatter Mr. Waring when we say this orchestra is the most entertaining in any theatre.

DAVID ROSS (Philadelphia Mastbaum) very ably conducted the Mastbaum Orchestra in a kaleidoscopic review, responding to a burst of applause with a gay interpretation of "Life Is Just a Bowl of Cherries."

DELL ISOLA (Brooklyn Albee) and his RKOlians, in their recent overture, "Yankee Doodle the World Over," completed a 12-week "tour of the world." Each of these overtures featured songs popular in the respective countries. This one, as the title implies, was played in the various rhythms of foreign countries and proved highly entertaining.

CLAUDE SWEETEN (San Francisco Golden Gate) and his RKO-lians presented a selection woven around the popular number "Can't We Talk It Over?" They suggest that there are many treatments for a popular air and run the range from dreamy sentiment to snappy syncopation. An usher with a pleasing voice obliges with a vocal rendition of the song and gets a reception which necessitates an encore.

UNIFORM APERTURE DATA SHEET

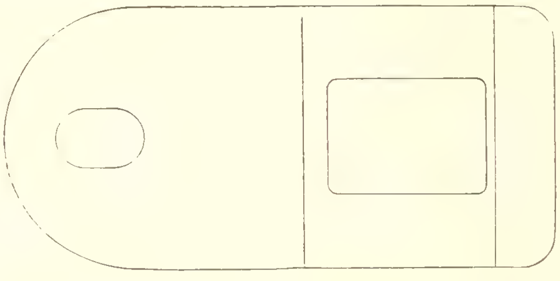
MOTION PICTURE HERALD here publishes for managers and projectionists, the instructions offered by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in connection with the adoption of the new picture frame size for all prints. It is suggested that these data be kept in the projection room convenient for ready reference. In order to provide suitable space for this material, the "Bluebook School" is omitted.—F. H. Richardson.

1—The new frame size was recommended February 15 by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and has been adopted by the following companies: Columbia, Darmour, Educational, Fox, Hal Roach, Mack Sennett, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount Publix, RKO-Radio, Tiffany, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National.



2—The new releases can be recognized by the fact that the frame lines are about four times as wide as previously. No changes have been made in the sprocket holes or sound track.

3—An initial minor adjustment of aperture plates and projection screen masks will be necessary to show the new product to best advantage and give the audience the full value of the picture photographed by the studio. When this adjustment has been made as stated below, all prints may be run with the uniform aperture.

SPECIFICATIONS OF NEW APERTURE

5—Plates of the specified .600" x .825" size are obtainable from your supply dealer.

SCREEN MASKS

6—Correctly masking the projection screen is very important. Black material should be masked over the top, bottom and sides of the screen only just enough to secure a sharp edge.

FRAME FROM THE TOP

7—New product is framed from the top of the picture by the studios and should be framed from the top of the picture in projection as well in order to allow the headroom intended in the photography.

PROPORTIONS OF THE SCREEN

8—The proportions of the projected screen picture with the new uniform aperture size will be approximately three by four at medium angles of projection and will vary slightly with lower or steeper angles.

9—To correct extreme keystone, "undersize" aperture plates slightly narrower in width than the specifications are obtainable. The full height of the aperture should be maintained, but theatres having very steep angles may, if desired, correct keystone by filing the "undersize" plate on the sides in addition to adjusting the screen masks.

LENSES

10—Lenses used for movietone or proportional apertures should be satisfactory for the new uniform aperture. It is desirable that the axis of the optical system be in the center of the projector aperture.

SPECIAL SERVICE TRAILERS

11—When ordering special service, managers should indicate that trailers are to be made for the new aperture.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

We have felt for sometime that there was a public need for a scientific treatise on the subject of neuritis that has been sadly lacking in medical journals, and our long and intimate association with this disease we feel qualifies us to speak with authority on this subject.

It is the consensus of opinion among pathologists that neuritis is a distinct and separate disease from all others, but that's all applesauce. Neuritis is a combination of all the ailments you can think of, and you will have overlooked some of 'em. You can take inflamatory rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, gout, asthma, hay-fever, prohibition, the Wickersham commission and a radio crooner and mix them all up together and you've got neuritis.

Neuritis vs. Neuralgia

Most people confuse neuritis with neuralgia, but there's a marked difference. Neuralgia shoots pains through you at irregular intervals while neuritis is on the firing-line day and night with its finger on the trigger of a rapid-fire gun and every time it shoots you will yell for the stretcher-bearers. Neuritis moves in and takes possession without the knowledge and consent of any member of the family or the Film Board of Trade. You won't know why it moves in but you will know WHEN it moves in, and you won't know when it will move out. Ours moved in at El Paso, Texas, three weeks ago and has been a constant tenant ever since without paying any rent, taxes or insurance. There are 113 positions to get your arm in to ease the pain, each position you will find to be a little worse than the rest. And there are 326 infalible remedies for the cure of neuritis, none of which are worthadam, we've tried all of 'em. If after you have had neuritis for a couple of weeks you drop off to sleep for a few minutes, which you probably can't do, you will find your neuritis sitting on the front porch waiting for you to wake up.

It's astonishing how many experts on the cure of neuritis a case will develop in your neighborhood—more than you supposed there were in the whole world. One neighbor dropped in and said we should use a hot water bottle on our arm. We had been using one for a week. Another one said we should use a bag of hot salt. We got a bag of hot salt. The third one told us what we needed was an electric pad. We got an electric pad. Then a kind, sympathetic sister dropped in to tell us how sorry she was to learn that we had neuritis, because but few people ever recovered from it. She said, "You know, Colonel, my grandfather was took down with neuritis and he only lasted 15 days." Encouraging, since we were just entering upon the fifteenth day, but we thought that if grandpa was anything like his grand-daughter he lasted just 14 days too long.

The Doctor Arrives

Our wife decided to call in a doctor, so she called an M.D. When he came in he asked us what the matter was and we told him that was what we called him to find out. He wanted to know where our pain was and we told him it was in our right arm and shoulder. He took our temperature, felt of our pulse and looked at our tongue.

He peeled us down to where the cotton mills left off and Nature commenced and grabbed hold of our arm and gave it a yank and we yelled, "Hey there Doc, what the—" And our wife said "There, there little boy, be a good little boy and let the nice Doctor mans examine your arm." Yeah, "nice Doctor mans," prune juice. She had taken the precaution to move everything out of our reach to prevent any possibility of manslaughter, she's so careful that way. Doc said, "Eh, eh, I see where you trouble is, it's in your shoulder and arm," and we said, "Yeah, we've known that for three weeks but what we want is a remedy."

Colyum Must Wait

And now dear reader, if you think, when you've got neuritis in your right arm until you can't lift it up, and trying to peck out a Colyum with your left hand on a typewriter for the world's greatest magazine is a picnic, then you got the wrong conception of a picnic when the mules ran over you with a load of hay and listen here, we want you to prepare yourself for a shock, and we won't assume any responsibility for results, but no matter what the havoc caused; no matter if the Ship of State goes on the rocks; no matter if it throws this entire picture into reverse gear, there won't be any more "Colyums" as long as this durn neuritis hangs around our main entrance with a season ticket. Please tell your folks.

If you have got neuritis and have given up hope and have cashed in your last white chip but think you want a copy of this thesis, you can obtain same by addressing the MOTION PICTURE HERALD at 1790 Broadway, New York, and enclose 25 cents to pay postage, which, under the new postal regulations, will be three cents, and it will be sent to you provided Ernie is in good humor. But if you are still hanging by a thread, if there is the slightest ray of hope for you, we would advise you not to squander the money, but would suggest that you get a copy of Chic Sale's book, "The Specialist" and Irvin Cobb's "Speaking of Operations" and read them, then if you still survive, you need have no fears for anything.

April Shower Can't Swim

James Hare of the County theatre at Bangor, North Wales, writes to the HERALD and asks why we don't come over there to visit the boys. We are taking this inquiry as an invitation, and we thank Mr. Hare for it, but there is a good reason why we don't go over there. There is a lot of wet water between New York and Wales and they haven't established any filling stations on that route as yet, and April Shower refuses to turn a wheel without gas.

There are three good reasons why we would like to go over there.

One is to visit our good friend, Mr. Hare, for we know he would show us a delightful time. Another reason is that there is a gentleman over there somewhere by the name of Bass who brews an amber fluid known as "cream ale" and we'd like to meet that guy Bass. The third reason being that we are Welsh ourself. Our ancestors came from Wales and we would like to see if we could discover any good, sensible reason why they left that country to come over here. We hope Mr. Hare will write the HERALD again, but at greater length next time. And we hope also that he will not get neuritis.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it... lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

'The Rich Are Always With Us'

Rating: Excellent

In the early, hectic days of the audifilms, Ruth Chatterton, long-accredited on the stage as being a fine artist; won the coveted title of "first lady of the talkies.

And now, I find that Miss Chatterton has appeared in her best film, "The Rich are Always With Us."

The film is a brilliant piece of entertainment. Ruth is not the "whole show," nor does she try to be. There is a newcomer that will make the very popular Clark Gable look to his laurels—Mr. George Brent. He is destined to make all feminine hearts flutter that extra beat."

PARKER'S DIALOGUE IS SIMPLY GRAND

The story, adapted superbly by Austin Parker from a novel by E. Pettit, is simple enough. The charm lies in the manner in which it is told and the dialogue—very witty and smart—that carries it through strange, romantic situations.

When a rich woman tries to hold her husband, herself constantly besieged by a most ardent admirer, there is apt to be both comic and dramatic episodes. The heavy, sobby stuff is treated with the deep, but cool manner of the sophisticate. Tremendous suspense is established to the end. One never knows or is apt to guess just who the heroine will win.

Besides Miss Chatterton doing her finest work since entering pictures, George Brent, as I said before, makes things terrifically interesting. Bette Davis, now minus her jerky style of speaking, is splendid. So good, in fact, that she causes the two leads to divide honors with her.

Adrienne Dore makes good with her first big role. She's a real comer. John Miljan turns in another of his usual fine performances. The others in the cast lend adequate support.

Alfred E. Green is to be praised for his easy not-too-smart style of directing what might be termed as a high brow and sophisticated yarn. It isn't at all. He's kept the tempo swift and presented in the risque moments in a rather cute manner.

"The Rich are Always With Us" is a film that every woman should see—if she brings along her hubby or the boy friend.

—Jimmy Starr, in syndicated preview

IN STATE OF FLUX

THIS somewhat exciting week finds a number of formative and significant movements in progress in the general process of a motion picture readjustment to the fluxing status quo of a disturbed economic world. Mr. M. C. Levee arrives from Hollywood as the courier of the tidings of a revolutionary project in production, the Screen Guild, a promising new floration of the unit idea which flamed up and faded a few months ago. Mr. Adolph Zukor dramatically rises before a meeting of Paramount stockholders and puts a plea for understanding and support of that great corporation confronted with many complexities. Meanwhile Mr. Jesse Lasky, production chief of Paramount from the days of its founding and through its rise to dominance, departs on a three-month leave of absence. The electrical industry's adventure in movieland, RKO, has a new chief in Mr. Merlin Hall Aylesworth, who travels between Broadway and his continued responsibilities as president of the National Broadcasting Company. Fox is squaring away on a program of reconstruction, going forward without external sounds of machinery under Mr. Sidney Kent, swiftly elevated to the presidency. Indications of a growing new economic consciousness are heard, faintly, from Hollywood. New York home offices are growing intense over coming product announcements for the new season. The industry generally is repining less and working more than for some months past.

DAVID HITS OUT

WRITING in our gay and decorative contemporary, the "Hollywood Herald," Mr. Leo Meehan records that young Mr. David Selznick, RKO production chief, had boldly abolished that ancient, if not honorable, production functionary known first as "the supervisor" and subsequently as "associate producer." Mr. Selznick, it seems, considers the "supervisor" as a waste of time and "just another mind to convince, to compromise with and to argue with." Mr. Selznick appears to recognize that a lot of help may in fact be no assistance. His sensational decision against the tradition of Hollywood and the sanctity of the supervisor system is likely to be approved by everyone, except the supervisors. Another cheering phase of the announcement is its inference that Mr. Selznick intends to do his own work, in person.

ART FOR RADIO CITY

IF Radio City does indeed prove its dream and become a fusion point of the old arts and the new technology some tremendously interesting developments for the motion picture may be expected. At the moment one is intrigued by the possibilities that may repose in the just announced acquisition of Mr. Robert Edmond Jones as art director for the RKO Theatres in Radio City.

If some part of the high pictorial intensities of his stage work might be carried back to the screen, results would be interesting. Mr. Jones brings with him high attainment on the American stage and a large background of experience and observation in the best of European production. The announcement, incidentally, comes from Mr. Samuel Lionel Rothafel, who years ago brought John Wenger and other able artists to the service of motion picture presentation on Broadway, conferring important distinction on the film drama in a day when it needed it nearly as much as now.

Mr. Rothafel in his announcement says, "It gives us great pleasure," etc. The irrepressible "Roxy" has, it seems, gone over to the "we" school of concept, along with Lindbergh and the traditional editors.

OWNERS' RIGHTS

SOME recent court decisions in film cases tend to indicate that the judiciary holds to the old fashioned opinion if a man or a corporation owns something, he, or it, may elect to whom he or it will sell and for what price. Some of the geniuses engaged in the promotion of regulatory litigation of the motion picture could have thought of that several years ago. They might even think of it now.

The railways' announcements, putting the Twentieth Century and the Broadway Limited on an eighteen-hour schedule, bring Hollywood two hours closer to Broadway. That does not make much difference. If some way could be found to get Hollywood that much closer to the United States it would be news. The present change merely shortens the bridge game.

ECONOMICS LECTURE

WE are hearing a deal these days from hard "business" men who voice and seek to put into practice a policy of lengthening working hours, cutting wages and increasing the output. They think that there is special virtue in toil and that America ought to go to work. Just how they expect that increased over-production, delivered to a public of workers with less money to spend and less time to spend it in is going to help business is not clear. The policy of more work for less money is no service to the industry of the motion picture. An increase of consuming playtime and the price of entertainment in the public pocket would certainly end the depression in the amusement industry. America has plenty of workers; what it needs is more spenders.

—BALTIMORE MORNING SUN

FACTS

The familiar subject of the Sunday show and whether or not it interferes with matters of the church returns to life decidedly at BALTIMORE, with a Sunday Liberalizing Ordinance to come before the voters May 2. Says the EVENING SUN:

In their zeal to prevent the passage of the anti-blue law ordinance, various clergymen preached powerful sermons last Sunday denouncing the law and its supporters.

To keep the record clear, it should be repeated once more that the ordinance does not prevent any person from attending church services according to his custom nor propose in any way to interfere with the habits of the clergy and their flocks.

On the contrary, the law takes unusual care to protect the churches against competition. It specifically provides that there shall be no baseball games or other commercial recreation before 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, when most churchgoers have come home and had their lunch. It specifically provides, further, that no games whatsoever shall be played within 200 feet of any permanent place of worship.

The law goes even further. It says that no motion-picture show, nor any concert even, shall be held before 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, whether an admission fee be charged or not.

These are facts to be borne in mind. The clergyman or other opponent of Sunday recreation who claims to the contrary is either unfamiliar with the ordinance or else is seeking to make it appear different from what it is.

A "frank and cheerful order of things, in place of mockeries, is proposed by the MORNING SUN, as follows, under the heading, "Recognize Conditions":

Any one who went out of doors on Sunday could not help seeing people engaged in activities forbidden by the blue laws. An example was the baseball game at Oriole Park, attended by hundreds. This was a plain violation of the blue laws, but nothing can be done about it. An ancient statute prescribes standards of conduct to which the citizens of Baltimore will not conform, and grand juries have refused again and again to indict.

The same thing is true of many other amusements and activities engaged in on Sunday. We all know it. The fact is so well settled that the most active advocates of the blue laws make no effort to have them enforced as to numerous kinds of violation. They are enforced neither in letter nor spirit. We not only tolerate, but encourage at the present time, the doing of any number of things that are prohibited under the most liberal interpretation possible of the statute covering the matter.

The ordinance to be voted upon is intended, in part, to bring the law into harmony with long-settled community habits and practices; and, in part, to legitimize moving pictures and theatrical entertainments on Sunday after 2 o'clock in order to permit those who do not go to ball games, play golf or own automobiles to seek recreation that appeals to their taste. It also will have the effect of permitting the poorer people to have on Sunday afternoons pleasures corresponding in some degree to those that are freely enjoyed by the well-to-do, without frowns from any authority.

Broadly speaking, the issue before the electorate is to recognize that over a long period custom has established the only character of Sunday observance to which the people of Baltimore will conform, to enact law that reflects the will and the conscience of the people, and to have a frank and cheerful order of things in place of mockeries.

BRAINS

It's not a question of "brains" in Hollywood, but "the difficulty seems to be to get them to function together," the GAZETTE at BERKELEY in CALIFORNIA quotes Paul Green, Pulitzer prize-winner:

Novelists and playwrights who go to Hollywood usually win momentary fame by calling movies and movie people lowbrow and uncouth and other uncomplimentary things. Paul Green, author of the Pulitzer prize-winner, "In Abraham's Bosom," who has gone to Hollywood to assist with a screen adaptation of that play, wins a little publicity by being original.

"Every one in Hollywood talks freely of Hollywood's intellectual inferiority," he says. "Yet in New York and London and Berlin, I venture to say, it is not possible to find the stage or literature more intelligently discussed and analyzed than is the motion picture in this same Hollywood. There is no paucity of brains in Hollywood. The difficulty seems to be to get them to function together."

There must be truth in this statement, too, for an honest observer must admit that good pictures have been coming out of Hollywood quite as regularly as poor ones. There have been talkies which have shown the use of brains and ability in plot, in acting, in photography. More intelligence would be welcomed in publicity methods, in choice of titles and in weeding out rubbish. Yet, after all, Hollywood probably is no longer, if it ever was, as moronic as it has been painted.

MEASURE

"A measure of cinema progress from the silent form," says the TRIBUNE of NEW ORLEANS in commenting upon the talking version of "The Miracle Man":

The talking version of "The Miracle Man," showing at Loew's State, is more than just another picture. It is a measure of cinema progress from the silent form. When the film was first presented, 15 years ago, it was hailed as one of the greatest shown up to that time. Its cast included Barthelmess, Compson, Chaney, Meighan and half a dozen others to whom it brought fame. Even viewed by present standards it was a good picture. Pantomime has not improved, but photography has made great strides and the screen has acquired voice. For several years it has been proposed to give a modern presentation of "The Miracle Man." Keen interest is manifested in the new film. The cast is as notable as the one seen in the old picture.

AYLESWORTH PUTS SHOWMANSHIP FOREMOST IN NEW REGIME AT RKO

Great Electrical Interests in Adventure Into Field Recognize Motion Picture Must Be Dealt With as Entertainment

New President Turns First to Establishing Morale; Points To Parallel Problem of Radio, Stage and the Screen

By TERRY RAMSAYE

Up on the eighth floor of the old Palace theatre building, with its offices in approximately Georgian white mouldings and pseudo-mahogany doors, there sits a new chief of RKO, that assortment of amusement enterprises which derives its brand from the occasionally spectacular Radio Corporation of America and Radio-Keith-Orpheum theatres.

On door Number 803 entering a reception room is a name so newly painted that every messenger boy has to try it with a tentative finger—M. H. AYLESWORTH.

Deep in an inner suite, surrounded by the fumed oak panelling and leaded glass windows that glamoured the working days of B. B. Kahane, before they took him from the law to the presidency of the Radio Pictures Corporation component of RKO, is Mr. Aylesworth, engaged in considering quite a number of things. That leaded glass window, just because some one got a degree from New York University, probably Maurice Goodman, now casts a hallowed glow over Mr. Aylesworth with a medallion inscribed PERSTARE ET PRAESTARE, which of course says, and mayhap means, "to persevere and to succeed." So has culture come to Broadway.

Meanwhile Mr. Aylesworth has uptown at 711 Fifth Avenue, another office elegant in modernism and Lalique glass, high in the corner at the northwest angle of the building, with a brighter outlook, where he continues to be president and the operating chief of the National Broadcasting Company. It takes something like a half of his time and probably constitutes, just now, about a tenth of his worries.

Over on the Avenue the steam shovels, the steel workers and the bricklayers are working ardently and expensively and extensively, putting up another office for Mr. Aylesworth in a place called Radio City. And that is yet something else again—for the all too soon tomorrow.

This Mr. Aylesworth, who just a little while ago was so happily content up at 711, has you see quite a number of things on his mind.

Motion picture exhibitors used to bicycle films between theatres, but now the great RCA is bicycling a president between corporations.

MERLIN HALL AYLESWORTH

Meanwhile Mr. Aylesworth's new motion picture post presents him with the problems of a troubled company in a troubled industry in a whole world economically, socially and politically distraught. Aside from that, he has merely the normal problems of the radio and the motion picture, one an experimenting industry pioneering its way, the other the most violently competitive and speculative industry in the world.

For the while, which means through the lean days of the financial status quo, there is unlikely to be any vast spectacular excitement at RKO under the Aylesworth regime. He will not be engaged in selling Titans, those dynamic, dominating nude Apollos, for quite a while. There will be an endeavor at the establishment of a morale, a settling down to the task of making and purveying acceptable amusement, at a price consistent with the times. Bursts of glory and the red fire will have to come later.

"Whatever the answers to the problems of the day for this company and for the industry," observes Mr. Aylesworth, "they will be written in terms of showmanship.

"The audience, the consumers, whether of entertainment on the air or shows on the stage or talking pictures on the screen, is the same audience all the while. Showmanship, and the same identical showmanship, is required in entertaining that audience. Each medium has its limitations, and its special requirements, but, as we have seen in radio broadcasting, it is the real showmen who succeed. It is fair to say that the tools, the instruments, may be new, but the art is the same old art."

Bearing on the plight which sound has brought upon the motion picture industry and its assortment of attendant problems, Mr. Aylesworth remarked upon some analogies of the air.

"We had a situation in broadcasting in which we sat on one side and looked at the music people, and they sat waiting on us. A good deal of time had to elapse before we each spoke up and admitted that we were expecting the other fellow to be the rescuing Moses."

With marked discretion, Mr. Aylesworth has little to say about what is to be done at and with RKO, yet, his first steps have been aimed at taking the anxious stresses of holding their jobs off the minds of the staff, so they may engage in filling the jobs. Meanwhile, he will have a look about. Extensive changes of personnel are unlikely. Just to deliver him a touch of the standard flow of controversy and disturbance, within the week a brace of attorneys, representing a Chicago stockholder, have been making "suggestions" about some important departmental executive positions and their current incumbents. Papers in a threatened litigation over the issues of management are said to have been drawn, possibly as a gesture of pressure.

Aylesworth in a decidedly good humored fashion, appears to be somewhat definitely aware that he is on the spot of ultimate responsibility as the sole figure of showmanship evolved by and in the course of the adventure of the great electrical interests of General Electric and Westinghouse in the field of entertainment. The move placing him at the head of the picture project is to be taken as a recognition of the immediate necessity for dealing with the motion picture as an entertainment concerned with people in masses and in individual personalities, rather than entirely as a concern of the kind of round hard dollars tabulated by an adding machine.

The somewhat conspicuous fact is that in all of its consideration of the affairs of this RKO the motion picture industry, its press and the contemporary leaders of the business have been thinking of it too pointedly as just a motion picture concern. It is something rather more complex than that, and only by a clear view of what it is can some of the eccentricities of the RKO organization and its highly assorted expressions in terms of personnel and moves on the checkerboard be properly understood.

RKO as it stands today is the result, or rather one of the several results of an engineering gadget, the photo-electric cell wedded to another gadget called the radio tube, superimposed on the prior mechanisms of the motion picture.

BUSINESS BUILT ON BUBBLE BLOWING

It must also be realized that the really big profits of the electrical manufacturing concerns have come from blowing bubbles, extracting the air and selling the resultant flocks of vacuum as electric light bulbs, which are, after all, just holes with a wire in them and glass wrapped around them. Girls make them on machines, they burn out and break and there is a big turnover, so business is merry. This vacuum market is profitable, mostly because there is almost nothing in it. The electrical industry loves to sell bottled vacuums. The radio tube and the photo-electric cell are both just fancy vacuums.

Now the great electrical interests a few years ago found themselves in the possession of this new kit of tools and set about considering how money was to be made with them. Radio broadcasting was the first step, beginning as a method of creating a demand for reception equipment and evolving into today's hybrid advertising-amusement medium—or, as Mr. Aylesworth terms it, "a magazine of the air."

Three big concerns were deep in it, the Telephone Company, General Electric and Westinghouse. The Telephone Company decided it was just a utility, not an entertainer, and its stations went over to the Radio Corporation of America which, on a basis of 60 per cent General Electric and 40 per cent Westinghouse, was formed to see what all was to be done with the radio gadgets—with the Telephone Company cannily contracting to supply that very costly wire service which the radio networks must have.

Then into this arrangement came the additional gadgets of the photo-electric cell and the sound picture. The Telephone Company through its Western Electric wing became just the supplier of equipment and licenses to use it. The Radio Corporation of America, having become the amusement ramification of the solemn General Electric and ponderous Westinghouse, fell heir to their sound-picture system. Two things happened: first, RCA Photophone, which started to be a producer and a vendor of equipment and tentatively a home-sound-picture maker. Then Photophone forgot production and more latterly merged with RCA Victor, the talking-machine-radio making subsidiary, and, second, a considerable but minority interest was acquired in the FBO picture concern and in the same package the Keith-Albee-Orpheum organization, operating theatres. This was partly because it was to be an avenue to the market for making money out of the new gadgets, and partly it was merely because the late Guy C. Currier of Boston and Joseph P. Kennedy, owners of interests in the concerns for sale, were salesmen.

AS AYLESWORTH SEES IT

Only the best entertainment has any value at all with a buying public careful of its money and critical enough of values to shop for its fun.

The problems of RKO and of the motion picture industry are problems of showmanship, to be solved by showmen.

Operations in this industry must be conducted with the most conservatively careful economies, both in the expenditure of funds and in the preservation of values. General business conditions will be unchanged importantly, until after the November election, and after that they may be different, and, possibly, better.

RKO's immediate job is to settle down to work, with an improving interior morale and more assurance of permanence of position and continuity of effort in its manpower.

The competitions of the day, under the increased pressures of adverse conditions, point to the elimination of some of the concerns and enterprises of the industry. It is his job to make RKO one of the prospering survivors.

The broadcasting business had been found to have considerably complicated creative problems, to say nothing of sundry administrative problems, and had evolved for the Radio Corporation of America into the National Broadcasting Company, a considerably independently operated corporation, hewing out a policy against a background of no precedent—another lovely vacuum in commercial history.

Incidentally the radio tube market, while considerable, did not develop the raging demand for bottled vacuums that was expected of it. The infernal things last too long and they die a lingering death. They are hidden in the cabinet work and as they die they merely get the broadcasting stations in ill repute with the consumer. The public which was expected to buy a lot of radio tube vacuums has failed to consume profitably. That obviously is not the Golconda the electrical interests expected to uncover with the mess of new gadgets. Meanwhile permaloy cables increased capacity on the old line international communications and, as usual, the telegraph and telephone methods kept ahead of the demand on land lines with facilities and technique a-plenty, so that radio communications business has not precisely set the world afire.

It has therefore, with this and that, looked more and more as if the real paying ore, if any, would have to be dug out of the motion picture and the amusement industry, with this grand set of gadgets.

But all the while the RKO motion picture and theatre project has not been proving of such promise as this peculiarly lone responsibility to the new vacuums would make desirable.

Furthermore, in the first great enthusiasms and in the golden high tide, which went out in 1929, the whole project had been sold to the Rockefellers in the grandiose terms of what is called Radio City.

For some months it has been most clear in a number of places, including, to be specific, the offices of Owen D. Young, Gerard Swope and David Sarnoff, that something would have to be done about all these things pertaining to the art and industry of the bottled vacuum.

Looking the new vacuum business over as a whole, it became increasingly apparent that the best showing in the bottled hole business that the General Electric-Westinghouse's 60-40 offspring, the Radio Corporation of America, has achieved, the one spot in the picture which looked like success was, after all, the National Broadcasting Company, which rather conspicuously was and is to a considerable degree a lot of wires and microphones wrapped around one Merlin H. Aylesworth.

It is somewhat common knowledge among the better listeners at the roots of the very short, foot-worn, grass that grows in Times Square and Fifth Avenue that this not entirely royal crown of the presidency of the motion picture company, RKO, had at least twice been suggested, oh, so delicately, suggested to Mr. Aylesworth. Also that he was otherwise happy, doing rather pleasantly, thank you, etc., and softly responded that he was perhaps not aflame with ambitions on Broadway and in movieland.

Some two or three months ago Mr. Sarnoff got interested in a number of matters and set a considerable amount of high-powered machinery of investigation to work looking into the picture situation, the personnel situation, and incidentally and ornamentally, the vaudeville situation. The reports began to shower on his desk over in Lexington Avenue like the big fat snowflakes of the surprise storms of April. Possibly up to that time he had thought the stories he had heard of that strange region called movieland were the gentle fictions of fireside entertainers.

In any event, there came a day when Mr. Aylesworth again got an invitation to take the presidency of RKO. Two times

BACKGROUND OF WIDE EXPERIENCE

may be a politeness, but the third is different. The big vacuum industry was beginning to get firm. And, of course, a suave, genteel and able executive never makes mistakes in a situation like that. Mr. Aylesworth became, almost immediately, president of RKO.

What Aylesworth will do about it all is likely to be conditioned a deal by the breaks of the business from here on, as conditioned by the points of view and the background of experience which he has brought to the job, which are considerable, various and occasionally ornate.

Aylesworth is personally exciting. He brings color, a grin and the merry outlook of a young man bound for somewhere, into the business. He is among the relatively few persons, including the Cherry Sisters, of vaudeville fame, born in Cedar Rapids in Iowa. As soon as they realized it, when he was about nine years old, his parents removed to Colorado. He grew up into the college habit for a while and took an LL.B. at the University of Denver in 1908, attended the Colorado Agricultural College, and had a fling variously at the University of Colorado, the University of Wisconsin and at Columbia in New York. He practiced law at the outpost of Fort Collins, Colorado, up to 1914 and was chairman of the Colorado Public Utilities Commission from 1914 to 1918. He was only 28 when he got that job, but he had background. His father was a minister, and from his father he learned the value of tact, and maybe dogma. He tells his story or carries a long argument with a rare sense of continuity, which no series of telephone calls can break. He is scarred with no traces of the courtroom, but his facts are soldered together, the way a lawyer marshals them to prove something and get somewhere.

Somewhere back in college days he gave evidence of a gift for public relations. He was an organizer of clubs and fraternities and movements. Of course he had to be a politician to become the head of the Colorado Public Utilities Commission.

From the commission post he went to an executive position with the Utah Light & Power Company in 1918 and in 1919 became the managing director of the National Electric Light Association, which gave him direct contact with the big electrical interests and their subsequent activities and problems in the vacuum canning industry. Personality and performance in that connection won for him the presidency of the National Broadcasting Company when it took over the air in 1926.

Mr. Aylesworth lives near his Fifth Avenue office and has put endless hours into broadcasting activities and his tireless round of contacts. He is a member of half a dozen clubs and is on the directorate of that many corporations.

In New York and rather well across the country he knows all the Who which are Who. He is the pleasant well poised person who puts all of the Whos on the air to tell their version of Why and keeps NBC charmingly neutral all the while. He is in effect the publisher of the magazine with the greatest circulation in the history of the world, the "magazine of the air" on the NBC network. He has notions about the mob, the masses, the man-in-the-street and presently he will be having them about the man-at-the-box-office, who is likely just that same fellow.

Radio broadcasting has no censorship, no restrictive legislation, no announced code—in recorded terms, but they are all there and they are Aylesworth. He has a notion that great publications are one-man jobs—citing Lorimer, Ochs, Hearst, etc. He looks on NBC as a publication and it would not be a surprise to find that he will look at RKO in the same light. That will be notice to the contributors.

Trained Study of Story Material Is Wanger Demand

Selection of all story material for Columbia will continue to be the particular charge of Walter Wanger, who personally will read as much of the available material as possible before passing upon it. The company's plan is to obtain as much original and novel material as possible, and in order to accomplish this will rely less upon readers and story department personnel and more upon a trained executive bent on discovering hitherto untouched production material having revolutionary casting possibilities.

Wanger, who returned to the Coast this week after a brief visit to the home office, said that his personal attention to the company's story material would be given in the hope of obtaining for production the correct type of new material in demand by audiences. This material, he says, involves departures from accepted casting and production values which have come to be regarded as standard, in addition to requiring entirely new story substance and characteristics.

"During the coming production season," Wanger said, "producers will make pictures based on story material they never dared to use before. I do not mean that it will be sensational, nor that all of it will be original writing, but I do mean that it will be novel from the standpoint of past ideas of production. It involves novelty in respect to casting as well as story novelty, and it means increased production budgets for its realization. Columbia, in consequence, will increase its production budget 25 per cent on every picture."

Wanger said that casting innovations would very likely include more stars and "name" players in forthcoming productions than casting customs have prescribed in the past.

"The public has tired of the conventional feature plots and the customary casting devices," he said. "Obviously, this indicates a market that is crying for new ideas, ideas which can be supplied only by entirely new plots and new casting methods."

Wanger indicated that Columbia would seek some outstanding starring material during the season in order to fulfill its "novelty" program.

"Do you plan any innovations in methods of selecting story material as a result of your decision to search for 'novelty'?" was asked.

"Yes," was the reply. "We intend to read it before putting it into production."

Listed in new Columbia story material are the following: "Brief Moment," stage play by S. N. Behrman; "Bitter Tea of General Yen," novel by Grace Zaring Stone; Anthony Abbott Murder Series (three stories); "War Correspondent," story by Ray Schrock, and "Destroyer," story by Harry Hervey.

Circuit Pooling Is Advisable, May Be Expanded: Franklin

That pooling of theatres in certain cities and localities by major circuits, such as has been undertaken at Memphis by RKO, Loew's, and Publix and Warners, as a test, is advisable and may be furthered, is the opinion of Harold B. Franklin, president of RKO theatre subsidiaries.

"The circuit theatre pooling plan," said Franklin, "has numerous possibilities in many situations, but it must be determined entirely by local conditions. New York, for instance, has no need for a pooling arrangement."

Franklin said that the circuit pooling plan is still in a theoretical stage, and that RKO is experimenting with it nowhere but in Memphis, where it has entered into a pooling arrangement with Loew's. He denied that he had participated, with other circuit executives, in conferences on theatre pooling plans in New York, as reported.

FLINN, LALLY CLEARED BY COURT OF APPEALS

Decision Closes Case, Quashing Manslaughter Indictments That Followed Pathe Sound Studio Fire in 1929

The New York State court of appeals at Albany this week cleared John C. Flinn and Henry F. Lally, former Pathe executives, of manslaughter charges growing out of the Pathe Sound Studio fire of December, 1929, in which the lives of four dancing girls and six men were lost.

The court of appeals, highest tribunal of the state, reversed the appellate division and sustained a writ of habeas corpus, brought by Nathan Burkan and Henry F. Finkelstein, attorneys for the defendants. By its action, the high court quashed indictments for manslaughter voted against the two film men by a New York grand jury, early in 1931, and brought the case to a close.

Cites Double Jeopardy

Flinn and Lally were arrested and charged with homicide following the disastrous fire in the Pathe studio at 134th street and Park avenue, New York. An extraordinary grand jury, investigating political conditions under the Tammany regime in New York, took over the case, after which the homicide charge was dismissed in criminal court, but it was kept alive by the grand jury's investigation. As a result, Flinn and Lally were indicted for manslaughter in the second degree; only on the occasion of their facing criminal charges for the second time, they were accused of killing the Misses Porter and Burford, two of the fire victims, instead of Norene Byrne and Ruth Sparks, the victims named in connection with the first indictments.

In reversing the lower court's decision this week, the court of appeals applied the constitutional safeguard against double jeopardy, holding that since all deaths occurred under the same circumstances, at the same time and at the same place, the film men could not first be indicted for one death and then for another.

At the time of the Pathe disaster, Flinn was a vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in charge of comedy production. His particular duties were to find stories and casts. He had no association with Pathe Sound Studio, Inc., the Pathe Exchange subsidiary which operated the studio at which the fire occurred. At that particular time the studio was under engagement to Harry Delmar for production of an independent picture. Origin of the fire was never determined.

Political Regime Was Under Fire

At the time, the New York City political administration was under fire and a suggestion that there had been connivance between someone who was supposed to represent Pathe, in the matter of a sprinkler system at the studio, and the Board of Standards and Appeals in New York, brought the case into the center of the political jousting by making it the basis of an attack on the Board of Standards and Appeals. The chairman of the board, William E. Walsh, was forced to resign under the fire of the political attack, though subsequently he was cleared of all charges in open court.

The entire crop of New York City political scandals, involving magistrates, police graft charges, frame-ups and the whole city administration headed by Mayor Walker, is said to have had its origin in the Pathe fire inquiry.

Flinn is now with the Collier-Flinn artists' agency at Hollywood.

Kansas City Owners Seeking Charter as an Association

The Independent Theatre Owners of Greater Kansas City have applied to the circuit court there for a decree of incorporation. Judge A. Stanford Lyon appointed Fred Whitten, attorney, to investigate the application and submit recommendations.

The officers listed are Jay Means, president; W. D. Fulton, vice-president; Mrs. A. Baier of the Lindbergh Theatre, secretary, and J. L. Johnson, of the Aladdin Theatre, treasurer. The organization was formed last fall during the trouble with the operators' union. Practically all suburban independants have joined the organization, which has a membership of 35.

Inventors Pay Tribute to Memory of Eastman, Edison

The National Inventors' Congress, in session this week in San Francisco, paid tribute to the memories of Thomas A. Edison and George Eastman in a memorial service.

Baldwin Vale, president of the Patent Law Association, said: "Eastman went into the sunlight and etched the beauties of the shadows and recorded them where all might see. Edison went into the shadows and brougth forth light."

Failure of Unanimity Keeps Double Billing in Cleveland

Efforts to stop the practice of double featuring in subsequent run situations in Cleveland have failed because of lack of unanimity in the plan.

M. B. Horwitz, ardent advocate of the single feature, and general manager of the Washington circuit, said in commenting on the situation that only if every subsequent run in the city agreed on the policy could single features become an established fact.

$1,584,256 Equals 1931 Net Of Balaban & Katz, Chicago

Balaban & Katz and subsidiaries, of Chicago, reports net of $1,584,256 for the year ended December 26, 1931. This equals, after interest, depreciation, amortization and federal tax provision, $5.25 per share on 264,206 shares of common.

The earnings for the year compare with a 1930 net of $2,289,263, or $7.91 per share on the common stock.

Webb Elevated to Pathe Presidency As Control Shifts

The annual meeting of stockholders of Pathe Exchange, Inc., held on Tuesday in New York, marked the elevation of Stuart W. Webb from the post of senior vice president, to president, the election of directors and the passing of control of the corporation from the so-called J. P. Kennedy group to a new group of preferred stockholders headed by Webb.

A. B. Poole was re-elected treasurer and elected vice-president at the meeting of directors which followed the stockholders' session. Norman Bauer resigned as secretary and assistant treasurer and in his place J. C. Walsh was elected. E. U. Keough was named assistant secretary.

The preferred group secured a stronger hold in Pathe management under terms of the corporate structure, which gives them the right to elect eight of the 15 directors provided eight dividends are passed. With Charles A. Stone and Theodore C. Streiber, Webb recently formed a voting trust of the preferred. Other new directors are: C. J. Scollard, Wallace Graves, Andrew McKean, George Montgomery, Jr., and Arthur Sewell. Old directors renamed were: George Armsby of Transamerica, Carl Panthon of Chase National, Paul C. Fuller, Arthur B. Poole, Huntington Sheldon, Lester D. Burton, Charles A. Stone and Webb.

Pathe Exchange is trying to get laboratories to use DuPont Pathe film raw stock to bolster returns from its 49 per cent interest in that company, which represents the best possibility for the company to show a profit in 1932, Webb told the stockholders. Pathe received $195,000 as its share from DuPont Pathe in 1931, he said, adding that it is difficult to forecast with any degree of accuracy prospective earnings for 1932. He said the firm still is receiving income on Pathe films released by RKO.

Shubert Firm To Continue In Operation for Summer

Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey, in New York, has granted an application for the continuation of the Shubert theatres during the summer, submitted by Lee Shubert and the Irving Trust Company, receivers. An allowance of $25,000 for counsel fees and $12,500 for the Trust Company was granted. Shubert refused any compensation for his services.

The plan submitted calls for abandonment of non-theatrical properties which cannot be carried through the summer months on their own earnings. It is planned to retain five leased theatres in New York.

Academy Meeting May 2

The meeting of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, scheduled for this week in Hollywood, at which Sidney Kent, Fox president; M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, and Conrad Nagel will speak, has been postponed until May 2.

THE EXHIBITOR HOLDS THE BAG, BUT—

The Industry Must Sell Old Man Public a Pretty Good Show, Says Noted Reviewer and Exhibitor

By BLAND JOHANESON

Among the large national membership of the Order of Amalgamated Bag Holders, it is difficult to select, between the movie critic and the movie exhiibtor, the Grand Exalted Holder of the Bag. Both are mugs. I know, for I am both. Probably the only female critic-exhibitor in the country.

The critic is a mug. It is a plausible necessity that he should be one. Should the art-conscious reactions of any single idealist be given unrestricted power to jeopardize any $500,000 production investment? A hundred million starving stockholders raise their voices in the answer, "Nuts!" So the Big Shots lay down their restrictions.

These have been so shrewdly devised and so artfully veiled, they are worthy of admiration. The movies have their capacious sleeves simply loaded with aces to call the hand of any reviewer who annoys them.

The "personal contact" stunt is a mere preliminary. Having subjected the reviewer to the hypnotic flutterings of the stars' false lashes, the cheery comradeship of the press agents, having tossed him into the gaudy society of the world famous, the movies have not played their last trump.

Should he have proven himself immune to all this magic, should he still persist in taking himself seriously as a critic, there remains his own business office to cudgel him into line as another pro-producer agent for the box office good. And finally—the movies can take an ad and make a mug of him right in his own paper.

The boys and girls who see movies for the metropolitan press fully recognize the nebulous quality of their critical integrity. Or most of them do. You hear them use the word "reviewer" more frequently than the word "critic" in describing their jobs.

"Kindred Slaves"

And how odd it is that, though they are kindred slaves to the producing industry, there should exist so little sympathy and warmth between critic and exhibitor!

Why, my own heart bleeds for the exhibitor. I can't sit in a de luxe Broadway theatre without listening for hums, watching for change-over cues, frowzy apertures, out of frame pictures. And a bad picture tortures me with pity, for I know it had to be played. The poor, little exhibitor, going down for the third time in his particular little pool of red ink, cannot even raise his timorous voice to inquire why it ever was made.

The exhibitor dare not inquire. But who could answer him did he dare? Who is making the pictures? The public is in the picture business. The bankers are in it. The churches. The reformers. The mothers' clubs. The press. The artists. The businessmen. The poor showmen, who started the whole fabulous business, simply haven't a look-in.

BLAND JOHANESON

motion picture reviewer of The New York Daily Mirror and exhibitor, Music Hall, Clinton, N. J.

So the exhibitor holds the bag. He gets, during his season, a few box office pictures which are awful art, a few artistic pictures which are awful box office, and a carload of compromises between the two. The compromises are acutely painful.

Not long ago, waiting while Tony shook up another sidecar, I heard a really top reviewer comment on a production: "The motivation was very weak!"

Motivation! Hell! What the exhibitor wants to know is "how many people got killed." Imagine such a line in ad copy: "The motives will knock you out of your seats!" Even if they did, the picture would still be "a critics' picture"—the exhibitor could read the rave notices to the sheriff as he unbolted the fixtures.

Booking pictures for a small village, heart of a farming area, has taught me more about them than five years of reviewing. There is not a daily paper in the county, no theatrical section, no critics, no press agents. Each picture clicks or flops on its own value as entertainment.

An exhibitor can make his house comfortable, choose pretty ushers, garnish his lobby, get the right boys drunk and vote dry with the right women. He can pull every trick in every manual. But, finally, what is on his screen is what he has to sell. And I don't mean the beads.

And watching a screen can be pretty tedious unless there's something doing on it. If the motive for what's doing isn't quite sound, is that important? When what's doing is exciting?

Two women politely arguing over the affections of the hero isn't movie. One shooting the other, or shooting the hero, is. It seems to be as simple as that.

Why show airplane rides, if the plane doesn't crack up?

Why photograph boats, if they aren't going to be wrecked?

Why animals, if they aren't going to stampede?

Why regenerate the heroine under her own steam? Let her be pummeled, injured, or terrified into the reformation.

Let the sex be sexy, involving just enough suffering to be a lesson to you.

Let the sweetness be bona fide Cinderella, tantalizing, absurd.

Let the laughs generate below the beltline.

Then exhiibtors wouldn't be bothered with "critics' pictures," and everybody would have a first rate time.

Censorship a Hobble

Because censorship hobbles the entertainment business, because it always will be politic to play the uplift game, the movement for worthiness and artiness will go on. There can be pictures so sound in motivation, so inspiring in message, so Classy, in short, that Progress humbly can be served. But why can't the producers make them with glass shots, consign them to the art theatres, write off the cost to lobbying, forget the inevitable "tea to the press" their advent entails; and go right on making movies?

Why, with an overture of Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C Sharp Minor even the most insistent uplifters would know the movies were giving them Art!

The idea isn't feasible. But isn't it sweet? How is an exhibitor to train for his final days in the funny house, if he doesn't solace himself with charming, unfeasible ideas?

It is the exhibitor who still holds the bag, from chain to the midget who runs a Saturday night show in the cider mill. He may as well walk into Film Center with his chin out. That's where he's going to take it. Though he be accompanied by a whole minion of professional lamenters, the movies will show him all the touching mercy which distinguishes a sellers' market.

Must Sell Pretty Good Show

The movies can control the critics and maneuver the exhibitors. They can outsmart the press, the politicians and the patriots. They can agitate the hysterical jealousy which keeps exhibitors disorganized and eternally impotent. They can do what they will, but one thing. They can no longer cajole old man Public out of his quarter. They have to sell him a pretty good show.

It is the exhibitor who keeps the store open. He is a mug, but he is the Movies' own mug, of no use whatsoever as a dead mug. He must be kept alive until it is again profitable to take his theatre away from him. His own cashier can pity him. She was born with a sideline.

ALLIED LAUNCHES NEW CAMPAIGN TO AMEND COPYRIGHT MEASURE

McGOLDRICK SERVICE IMPORTANT: GRISWOLD

Rita C. McGoldrick's departments in MOTION PICTURE HERALD—"School and Screen," "The Junior Show," "Selections" and "Your Public"—represent a work which is "highly important to the industry and should be recognized as such," says Glenn Griswold, vice-president of Fox Film Corporation.

"I have a genuine interest in what you are doing and would appreciate it if it were convenient for you to send me copies of your radio broadcast and any other information having to do with your work," Mr. Griswold wrote Mrs. McGoldrick. "Motion picture companies must meet the challenge of public opinion; first, producing the sort of pictures the public wants without fooling itself with Broadway notions, and second, by letting the public know that the right sort of pictures are being produced. The work you are doing is highly important to the industry and should be recognized as such."

Cole Cites Letter from Woman Exhibitor in Oklahoma Protesting $400 Settlement With Bureau for Holdovers

Citing the instance of an Oklahoma woman exhibitor who charges that she was placed in financial stress and is threatened with the loss of her theatre property because of a $400 cash settlement imposed one year ago by the Copyright Protection Bureau for holding over pictures, Allied States Association is making a national effort to bring the case to the attention of legislators in its campaign to obtain amendment of the existing copyright statutes. The Copyright Protection Bureau made a general denial of the basic circumstances surrounding the case. Mrs. W. T. Brooks, the woman exhibitor who authors the complaint against the Bureau, operates a theatre at Broken Arrow, Okla. Several weeks ago, she addressed a letter to Colonel H. A. Cole, general manager of Allied Theatre Owners of Texas, in which she set forth the history of her infringement case and its settlement and requested Cole to make an effort to obtain a refund of part of the settlement for her because she "feared the loss of her show." Cole had reproductions of Mrs. Brooks' letter made and forwarded them to Texas representatives at Washington, accompanied by a letter urging support of the copyright amendments being sought by Allied. Additional copies of the woman exhibitor's letter were supplied other Allied units nationally and are being forwarded by them to the representatives of their states at Washington. Cole, however, according to the Copyright Protection Bureau, made no attempt to bring the woman's case to its attention for investigation of her charges, or in an effort to obtain the relief sought by her.

Woman Exhibitor's Letter

Mrs. Brooks' letter to Cole says in part:

"In April, 1931, I was called to Oklahoma City by a Mr. Liebler, a man representing himself as a Copyright representative. I had used, I think it was eight . . . comedies, three days, when my contract called for use of two days. When I bought the comedies from . . . I said, 'Suppose I want to use some of these comedies three days, what about it?' He said, 'Go ahead, and it will be O. K.' After business became so poor I used my programs three days instead of two (and had my features bought for two or three days). . . . Exchange never said a word to the contrary, never said I had made any trouble, or caused a miss-out with any other exhibitor. In fact, they never asked me a word about holding the comedies the three days. When Mr. Liebler called me to Oklahoma City I had no idea what he wanted. I did not know that I had violated a Copyright law. He fined me $400 and said if I didn't arrange to pay it he would start suit against me at once. He simply scared me into agreeing to pay him the $400. I told him I was an old woman, didn't have any money as I had been losing pretty heavily on account of the depression, and that my husband was an invalid, not having done a day's work in two years. I came home and gave a mortgage on my show for the money to pay this fine. I have not been able to pay one dollar of this money back. Do you think there would be any chance of getting this money back, or even part of it? I am afraid I will lose my show, because I have very poor health myself, and am not able to run the show and make it pay. Is there anything you could do to help me? I did not do this trying to beat the company, but because the salesman told me I could do it. I certainly will appreciate any thing you would do, or any suggestion to help me get at least part of the amount back."

Cole's Letter to Senator Hill

Copies of this letter were supplied Allied units and a copy was sent Senator Samuel B. Hill, of Texas, by Cole with the following letter:

"My dear Senator:

"Never before has my indignation and pity been so aroused as by this letter enclosed!

"A 60-year-old woman with an invalid husband, a small-town exhibitor for years, faces the loss of her little business—and destitution—through a comparatively innocent infringement of the Federal Copyright Law, and the advantage taken of it by a damnable, heartless organization of Film Distributors, known as the 'Copyright Protection Bureau,' run by the Hays Office in New York.

"Cases similar to this have happened and are happening all over the country. The Copyright Law must be amended to see that this cannot happen again.

"Mr. Abram F. Myers, General Counsel for the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, has proposed an amendment to cure this legalized blackmail. We will gladly furnish further data and information, or you can obtain same from Mr. Myers, whose office is in the Union Trust Building. (Signed) H. A. Cole."

Levin Says Bureau Records Show Case Involved 24 Infringements, Features and Shorts; Cole Writes Senator

The Copyright Protection Bureau produced records and correspondence to show that complaints of this kind, when shown by investigation to have merit, were granted relief through the intercession of regional Allied officers in the past. No attempt was made in this instance, according to the Bureau, to obtain the relief sought by the woman or to investigate the merits of her complaint.

24 Infringements Says Levin

The Bureau's records, revealed by Jack H. Levin, general manager, showed that the Brooks case involved 24 infringements, rather than the eight cited in the exhibitor's letter, and that feature pictures, as well as short subjects, were also involved in the holdover charges. The infringements, according to the Bureau, were determined by two investigations, in order to prove consistency of the violations, one investigation having been made in February and a second in May, 1931, with holdovers discovered on both occasions.

The $400 settlement was effected in June, 1931, rather than in April, and on the basis of the 24 violations with which the exhibitor was charged, approximated only a $17 penalty for each infringement.

Information supplied the Bureau by an unnamed resident of Broken Arrow holds that Mrs. Brooks' credit relations with a local bank are excellent; and that she meets her obligations promptly. The same source reports that in addition to being the owner of her theatre building, she is also owner of the Brick Business Building, in the town, and that her husband, a former postmaster, owns their home in his name. It also was revealed that Mrs. Brooks has been successful in driving opposition from the town on several occasions in the past, and that she has had no opposition there for the last five years.

"Obviously, Allied has made no investigation of the merits of this case," said Levin. "It has merely seized upon it, regardless, to win sympathy for the amendments to the copyright statutes which it sponsors."

Los Angeles Allied Unit To Offer New Protection Draft

The Los Angeles Allied organization has prepared a draft for a new zoning agreement, to be presented to distributors. The national association, however, has declared against zoning agreements.

The proposed changes contain a provision seeking to ban preview showings on double bills. It also provides penalties for double bills, two-for-one admissions and gift premiums. The draft also would ask clearance of seven days on subsequent runs over the schedules of 1930-31.

TESTING NEW LENS. Operator with motion picture camera equipped with Bell & Howell "zoom" lens, capable of following a moving object at various ranges without moving the camera, yet retaining the same detail. It is expected to have effective application in newsreel work.

INTERNATIONAL FILM FOUNDATION FORMED

New Independent Non-Profit Company to Produce and Distribute Educational Films; Outgrowth of Fox Enterprise

The International Film Foundation, self-described as an independent non-profit organization for producing and distributing educational films, was announced this week from its offices at 151 East 50th street in New York.

It is stated that the organization is in no way controlled by or affiliated with any motion picture producer. It is, however, in some measure, an outgrowth of the educational film department of the Fox Film Corporation, an activity recently discontinued coincident with the withdrawal of Harley Clarke, who had instituted the enterprise.

The announcement of the Film Foundation is made simultaneous with the preliminary presentation at preview showings of "The Cry of the World," a survey of the World War's aftermath assembled from the talking film archives of Fox Movietone News. The picture is to go into general circulation with its earnings to be devoted to the further activities and production of the Foundation.

Dr. Wallace W. Atwood, president of Clark University, is the newly elected president of the Foundation. He was also connected with the educational film activities of the Fox organization. In discussing the new organization he said:

"The Foundation is non-partisan and non-sectarian, and has the full sympathy of the Hays Organization with our plans. Many leaders in the field of visual education will be identified with this movement. Some of the leading motion picture companies have already offered us the use of their complete facilities.

"Up to the present time, all production and distribution of educational motion pictures have lacked centralization. There has been a shortage of good teaching films, and while picture producers have made spasmodic efforts to enter this branch of production, these have failed because of the absence of proper educational supervision.

"We intend to produce three types of films, both sound and silent, in the standard 35 millimeter and 16 millimeter sizes. These will be, the specialized classroom teaching film, the non-curriculum film for auditorium use and a number of special feature films for general distribution.

"All sums derived from rental and sales will be devoted to further production and to assist worthy institutions in financing the purchase of films and equipment.

" 'The Cry of the World' will have world wide distribution, and has been previewed by executives representing international social and cultural organizations. They have accepted it with great enthusiasm. Among these are Lena Madesin Phillips, president of the National Council of Women and the International Federation of Business and Professional Women, and Mrs. Grace Allen Bangs, formerly director of educational films for the Fox Film Corporation, now executive secretary of the Foundation."

"The Cry of the World" is a 55-minute production, presenting, in addition to the action, pictorial material from all parts of the world, the talking picture utterances of a vast array of statesmen and notables from Ghandi to Hoover, and expression from many leaders among women's movements and organizations in the United States.

The picture was edited by Louis De Rochemont, assisted by Beverly Jones and S. H. MacKean, all members of the staff of the Magic Carpet division of Truman Tally's Fox Movietone News organization. The sound recording, which in this picture presented some extraordinary requirements, is by Walter Hicks and William Jordan, also of the Movietone News staff. The picture has been previewed by the National Board of Review and at a special showing at the Little Picture House in East Fiftieth street. The picture is scheduled for a Broadway showing in May.

Powers Deal With British International for 5 Years

The P. A. Powers and British International Pictures deal runs a total of five years with options covering renewals each year and a rising scale of guarantees, according to Arthur Dent, B. I. P. executive in London, who conducted negotiations with Powers.

The contract limits American pictures to be released by Powers Pictures to 10 annually, which will give the company 35 a year, including 25 British pictures from B. I. P. Powers expects to sail for Europe this week.

3 San Francisco Circuits To Merge for Greater Economy

Three neighborhood theatre circuits in San Francisco, Golden State, T. & D. Junior circuit and the Sam Levin theatres, are planning to merge for economic reasons. Included in the deal are 62 houses. Each circuit will retain its own officers but greater economy in operating, buying and booking is expected to be effected.

The total value of the circuits is claimed to be $6,000,000. The report of the impending merger was confirmed by Robert McNeil, vice-president and general manager of the Golden State circuit.

Wolf of Erpi To Read Paper At Paris Electric Congress

S. K. Wolf, director of the Acoustic Consulting Service of Electrical Research Products, will leave for Europe about the middle of June to deliver a paper on his subject before the International Electric Congress in Paris, July 5.

The paper is titled "Noise Investigation and Measurement in the U. S. A." Three authors collaborated: C. R. Hana, Westinghouse Company; H. B. Marvin of General Electric, and Wolf.

Walker To Handle Best of Talent at Paramount Studio

Stuart Walker, director, has been appointed to take charge of the training of embryonic screen talent with star potentialities at the Paramount studio, under a new plan sponsored by B. P. Schulberg, managing director of production.

The special training will combine the technique of the theatre and studios and only those with exceptional talent will work under Walker's direction. He is organizing his players as a stock company, with the "students" to be trained in all forms of the drama, developing each according to the type of work for which he shows himself best adapted.

Walker has had experience on the American stage for many years, having been associated with the late David Belasco at one time. Walker will work in close contact with other directors and with studio executives, according to the plan.

Loew Houses Drop From Association

Loew's Ohio Theatres has tendered its resignation from membership in the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association. It is expected that other affiliated members will follow suit. This action is the outcome of the suit now pending in federal court in which the Independent exhibitors of Cleveland charge the Hays organization, its distributor member, the Cleveland Film Board of Trade with monopoly in restraint of trade.

United States District Judge Jones last week dismissed the Cleveland Exhibitors Association as party plaintiff in the suit. The dismissal was based on the fact that the Cleveland Exhibitors Association has no interest in the suit other than in its represenative capacity. "Since many of the constituent members of the association have joined in their own and individual interests, as well as in behalf of others of a class having a common interest, there is no real necessity of the plaintiff association appearing as party plaintiff." the court ruled.

"Scarface" Is Passed by Ohio Censor; Before Other Boards

"Scarface," Howard Hughes' latest film of the underworld, has been passed without elimination by the Ohio censor. The film is now before the censor boards of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Kansas. It has already played cities in numerous other states over the country.

Joseph Johnson Gets $22,500 In Settlement of Fox Suit

Joseph Johnson in Hollywood has withdraw all charges against Fox in consideration of an out-of-court settlement of 50 per cent of $45,000 he asked. He had charged in his suit that Fox was guilty of breach of contract. He received $22,500.

ADOLPH ZUKOR TELLS STOCKHOLDERS STORY OF THE PARAMOUNT OF TODAY

Indicates He Intends and Expects to Remain President; Says Hertz Joined in Management Upon Invitation

With tears flowing unashamed Adolph Zukor related the story of Paramount Publix of today at a dramatic meeting of stockholders Tuesday.

Questioned from the floor, Zukor indicated that he intends and expects to remain president of the company.

Other interrogations brought from Zukor and other officers details of the company's financial and operating conditions.

Nathan Burkan, the lawyer, was conspicuously present as a stockholder and asked most of the leading questions of the meeting.

Zukor's Status in Company Clarified

Burkan first insisted that Zukor or the management make an open statement about "street reports" of the resignation of Zukor. Zukor replied that such a statement was out of order because it involved "a personal matter," but he assured Burkan that he was the largest single stockholder in Paramount and that he expected to continue as long as his usefulness to the company continued.

Burkan insisted that as a holder of a large block of stock which he said he had purchased because of his confidence in the personnel—mentioning Zukor, Sam Katz and Ralph Kohn—that reports that Zukor was to be "shoved aside" should be cleared up.

"The record ought to be cleared for the sake of you, Mr. Zukor, and for the sake of the other stockholders."

Zukor waited until Burkan had concluded and there followed one of the highly dramatic moments of the afternoon.

"I feel that I have the confidence of my fellow officers and directors," he said. "I know that these men have the courage of their convictions, and having that they would not hesitate to tell me if I should start to slip. It would be unfair to the company and to me if the management allowed me to continue under such conditions."

Zukor appealed to the stockholders to support the officers of the company through the existing general business situation.

"My pride is broken, my heart is torn—I want to help restore the company to its former position. I do not want money. I want to rebuild this company for which I have given my life.

"Some mornings I have left home feeling that I could tear the world apart, and before I went home I marveled that the world had not torn me apart."

Zukor Explains Hertz's Position

Present at the meeting and frequently mentioned from the chair and the floor was John Hertz, Chicago financier, who since the last annual meeting of Paramount Publix has become a director and chairman of the finance committee, and an important factor in the management.

Replying to questions, Mr. Zukor made it plain that Hertz had joined the company in the management upon invitation.

"Mr. Hertz has no ambition other than to help put the company back on its feet. He has said to me repeatedly that he hoped I would remain as long as he remains.

"Contrary to the impression that seems to exist from some quarters, Mr. Hertz did not force himself into Paramount. He was invited in after five of our important financial advisors recommended that he be invited. Mr. Hertz has given up greater things to accept the chairmanship of the finance committee and every stockholder in this room should be grateful that he is here. I often ask myself why he made the sacrifice. In view of his experience and ability and financial standing he has been of great help. He has been a tower of strength for all of us and we should pray that his health will be preserved so that he will continue to help us."

Adjourned Annual Stockholders' Meeting

The meeting, which had been adjourned from the week previously because of the lack of a quorum, was held in the Paramount Building. John Hertz, Sir William Wiseman, director; Ralph Kohn, treasurer; Austin Keough, secretary, and Norman Collyer, assistant secretary, sat with Mr. Zukor. Sam Katz, vice-president of the company, and a director, was inconspicuously among the stockholders.

Adolph Zukor, Mr. William English, Felix Kahn and Casimir I. Stralem were re-elected directors. Warren Wright was elected director to fill a vacancy. He is president of the Calumet Baking corporation, General Foods corporation, John R. Thompson corporation and the First National Bank, all of Chicago.

The regular annual meeting of the board of directors is set for May 9, at which time officers will be elected.

The management submitted to the stockholders for ratification six personal service contracts with weekly compensation as follows:

|---|---|
| Adolph Zukor, President | $3,000 |
| John Hertz, Chairman of the Finance Committee | 2,750 |
| Sam Katz, Vice President | 2,500 |
| Emanuel Cohn, Vice President | 2,500 |
| Ralph Kohn, Treasurer | 2,500 |

There also was submitted for ratification a contract without salary but with stock options for Sir William Wiseman.

It was explained that the contracts of Zukor, Katz, Cohn and Kohn are new contracts in substitution for old contracts. The old contracts provided for a profit-sharing participation. The new contracts provide options to each on 108,000 shares of stock on a graduating scale from $15 to $32 per share. The new contracts run for three years and are substitutes for five-year contracts which would have expired September 1, 1934.

Questions from stockholders elicited the following information about the operating and financial status of the company:

Warren Wright Is Elected to the Board; Operating and Financial Conditions of the Company Are Explained

The first quarter of 1932 will show an operating deficit of approximately $1,236,000 after depreciation. The income for the period, however, exceeded expenditures.

Economies effected by John Hertz resulted in a reduction in expense of approximately $6,000,000 during the first quarter as compared with the first quarter of 1931.

The cash budget for 1931 makes ample provision for paying mortgages and obligations to subsidiaries totaling approximately $6,500,000.

A bank credit of approximately $13,000,000 has been arranged in the last few weeks by the Hertz group to meet the company's current requirements, of which $10,000,000 has already been used.

Drastic reductions in operating costs have been effected in every department of the corporation.

Holdings of the corporation, fixed assets, equities, etc., are equal to four or five times the total amount of indebtedness.

The questioning then took on additional color. "I want to know if the company is solvent," asked a stockholder, "or will it end up like a lot of others? Are the fixed charges being covered?" he inquired.

Kohn stepped into the discussion, armed with encyclopedic financial data, from which he gathered the information that evidently satisfied the stockholder.

Thirteen banks participated in the $13,000,000 financing arrangement. A 100-per cent-owned Paramount subsidiary was formed as a holding company to work out the legal details. The obligation is due in March of 1933. The banks have a preferred position on all negatives through the subsidiary.

Old Theatre Deals Questioned

There was some discussion from the floor by the stockholders about the wholesale theatre acquisitions by Publix during 1929 and 1930. Mr. Zukor answered questions frankly, replying, to implied criticism, that the investments were advisable at the time that they were made, but that since economic conditions have changed, the investments have depreciated in value. Mr. Zukor expressed confidence that with the return of normal business conditions, these investments would be highly profitable.

Because of a lack of the necessary two-thirds of the outstanding stock by proxy or in person the meeting did not act upon the proposal to change the value of the common stock from no par to $10 per share.

In the meantime, and apart from the stockholders' meeting, it became known late last week, in the nature of reports, that

LASKY ON VACATION

Jesse L. Lasky, Paramount vice-president and one of its pioneer operators with Zukor, was about to withdraw temporarily from company activities. This was verified Monday afternoon by Lasky, who publicly announced that he had been asked by the corporation to take a three-months leave of absence. In a statement, Lasky said:

"I have been requested to take a leave of absence for three months on full pay with the understanding I can be recalled on two weeks' notice. I am leaving Wednesday for Hollywood, as I have a home at Santa Monica. I am under contract to the Paramount Publix Corporation until December 31, 1934."

Executives Prepare for Sales Meeting

Adolph Zukor, Sam Katz, John Hertz, George Schaefer and Ralph Kohn, advance guard of Paramount officials attending the company's annual sales convention, were scheduled to leave New York for Los Angeles on Friday to be followed Sunday by an additional home-office group of 25.

The convention opens at the Ambassador on May 5 and will run four days. About 150 executives will attend, including Paramount district and branch managers, salesmen, and Publix divisional directors and divisional managers.

B. & K. Financial Statement Ready

Balaban & Katz, controlled by Paramount Publix, including subsidiaries, this week reported for the year ended December 26, 1931, a consolidated net income of $1,584,256 after interest, depreciation, amortization, Federal taxes, equal, after preferred dividends, to $5.25 a share on the common stock. In the year previous earnings were $2,289,263, or $7.91 a share on the common.

New Paramount Executives Named

The appointment of Montague F. Gowthorpe as comptroller, and Fred Mohrhardt as general auditor of Paramount Publix Corporation and its subsidiaries was announced on Monday. Gowthorpe has been with the company in various executive capacities for over 12 years. Mohrhardt has been with the company a similar period, and during the last five years has served as assistant general auditor.

Robert Sparks Joins Schulberg

Robert Sparks, for the past ten years stage manager and director of leading stock companies in the East, on Tuesday joined Paramount as assistant to Louis D. Lighton, associate producer on the staff of B. P. Schulberg, director of production.

He has managed and directed plays for the Boston Stock Company, the Lakewood Players in Skowhegan, Maine; William Harris, Jr., Broadway producer; the Actors' Theatre and the Philadelphia Theatre Association. Last year he produced and directed an all-Negro play, "Never No More," which he followed with "Inspector Henderson," his last New York production before going to Hollywood.

Kansas Court, State Fight in Interpretation of Blue Laws

Open warfare has flared in Kansas City between the attorney general's department of Kansas and the judiciary of the state, which believes in a liberal interpretation of the archaic blue laws. The Kansas supreme court was the scene of a clash last week when Roland Boyton, attorney general, assailed Judge Frank Forrest of the district court of Allen country, who twice refused to grant an injunction to restrain Vogel Gettier, manager of the Iola theatre, Iola, Kas., from Sunday operation. The official called Sunday shows a "common nuisance."

Judge Forrest used strong terms in refusing the writs, aiming chiefly at the churches, assailing preachers who meddle in affairs of the state and branding preachers and lawyers as "necessary evils." The state's legal department charged in the supreme court that Judge Forrest abused his discretion as a judge in refusing to grant the injunction. It also calls the supreme court's attention to Judge Forrest's reference to preachers and lawyers and points out it regards his remarks as "an insult to the legal profession of Kansas."

Fox Signs Clara Bow

Fox has signed Clara Bow for one picture, with options for several more. Sam Rork is on the Fox staff as supervisor of the film. Miss Bow's first will be "Her Savage."

Roxy Board Replaces Waring With Riesenfeld, Band of 80

A symphony orchestra of 80 musicians, directed by Hugo Riesenfeld, will return to the Roxy theatre in New York on May 13, it was decided by the board of directors of Roxy Theatres Corporation on Wednesday.

Fred Waring and His Pennsylvanians, who have played at the house since January 1, have been given two weeks' notice. The directors are continuing discussion of terms of a new film franchise with Fox Film.

Sales, Theatre Men To Sit In On Meetings for Cooperation

A member of the staff of George J. Schaefer, Paramount general sales manager, will in the future sit in on all meetings of the theatre department executive staff to bring about maximum cooperation between the sales division and theatres.

In the same way, and for the same reason, a member of the theatre executive personnel will attend all Schaefer's home office sales conferences.

Studio Official Asphyxiated

Erich Schay, secretary and part owner of the Metropolitan Studios, Fort Lee, N. J., died of carbon-monoxide gas on Tuesday in the garage at the rear of his home in Brooklyn.

Brandt To Coast To See Hammons

Joe Brandt, formerly president of Columbia, is en route to Hollywood, where, it is understood, he will conclude negotiations with E. W. Hammons, of Educational Pictures, whereby he will become associated with the Educational companies in the development of the company's dual studio properties, the Metropolitan studio and Educational's own plant.

Educational's studio is equipped with Photophone Metropolitan, in which Educational and Western Electric are associated, was taken over from the Christie Brothers last year. ERPI is interested as a creditor of Metropolitan.

His visit will also be for the purpose of lining up various independent producers. Brandt expressed himself as not ready to reveal details of his plans at the present moment.

He said, however, that a deal has been completed with B. F. Zeidman, independent, for a number of pictures. The exact number has not as yet been definitely set, according to Brandt. His Coast visit will probably be for an extended period.

Paramount May Sue von Sternberg

There was brought to a climax Tuesday a controversy between Paramount studio executives and Director Josef von Sternberg, who walked off the lot when studio chiefs insisted that he direct a story the treatment of which he disliked. It was indicated on the Coast that a suit would be brought against the director. Marlene Dietrich was later suspended when she failed to appear at the studio. She was scheduled for the lead.

By remarkable coincidence, von Sternberg, en route East, accidentally met Emanual Cohen, Paramount production executive, en route to Hollywood, as the two alighted at Kansas City for a "stretch." At the station, von Sternberg told a reporter of Quigley Publications that he had been "suspended—fired—because I didn't like the script. That is nothing unusual," he added, "what is one picture when 600 are made in a year?"

"I have nothing to do with the picture, now," continued von Sternberg, "and I don't know whether Dietrich will be in it or not. She doesn't like the script, either.

"I will return to Hollywood later this week," he said, "but not to Paramount." When asked about his contract he stated "a contract is only a piece of paper." He inferred he was all through with Paramount, although Cohen, after chatting pleasantly with the director, admitted he and von Sternberg will "talk it over" in a few days.

H. A. Bandy Leaves Warner

H. A. Bandy has resigned as Warner general sales manager in the foreign department. His duties will be assumed by Sam E. Morris. No appointment is planned for replacing Bandy.

CLAIMS PROCESS WILL CUT COSTS

A process, perfected after many years of experimentation by a young Viennese engineer, H. Jellinek, will reduce materially the costly architectural construction in film studios, it is claimed in Vienna. The process, it is said, permits the photographing of one film over another, and enables the camera to bring into conformity scenes played by actors in the foreground with a film projected on a white background. The process is claimed to give a perfectly uniform impression, without suspicion that the background has been "shot" at another time and place. The process is based on the use of ultra-violet rays for the projecting of the background film, while the actors in the foreground are exposed to the normal electric arc-lights used in all studios.

Kodak Buys Nagel Plant in Germany

Eastman Kodak Company has purchased the camera works of Dr. Conrad Nagel, at Stuttgart, Germany. The plant will continue to be operated by Dr. Nagel as a branch of Kodak Aktiengellschaft, Berlin, Kodak subsidiary.

The acquisition gives the company the use of valuable patents which are said to have popularized the Nagel products in the European markets. Kodak now has three plants in Germany, two in England and one each in Canada, France, Hungary and Australia, in addition to six factories in the United States.

RKO Shifts Exchange Heads

George F. Law has been named RKO Radio Winnipeg, Canada, exchange manager, and S. H. Decker, former Winnipeg manager, has been moved to the Calgary exchange, succeeding Vernon Dixon, resigned. Jules Levy, general sales manager, made the changes.

Assumes Warner Coast Post

George R. Bilson, recently named West Coast advertising manager for Warner-First National has arrived at the studio to take up his new duties. He will be in charge of trailers.

New Television Company

Canadian Television, Ltd., has been formed in Canada to manufacture television transmitting and receiving equipment. It has acquired exclusive licenses in the Dominion for exploitation of the inventions of Charles Francis Jenkins.

Plan Dinner for Unger

Joseph J. Unger, newly appointed Paramount divisional sales manager, will be tendered a testimonial dinner by friends on May 25, at the Hotel Astor, New York.

SCREEN GUILD TO BE ARTISTS' OWN VENTURE

Mr. Levee, in New York on Behalf of Co-operative Production Enterprise, Explains Its Basis, Methods and Hopes

Blue-eyed and dynamic young M. C. Levee has come briskly across the nation from Hollywood to tell Manhattan and Broadway about the Hollywood Screen Guild and announce a radical policy and point of view in motion picture production.

From his apartment in the Hotel Pierre on the avenue, at the Motion Picture Club, at the AMPA and Broadway way stations, Mr. Levee proclaims the dawn of a new day, the hope of a bright young idea.

Levee might well be called a native son of the motion picture industry, having started as a piano player in a Halsted street nickelodeon in Chicago, just two blocks away from the theatre where Sam Katz at the same time was hammering andantes out of an old Chickering for Carl Laemmle. Mr. Katz stayed by exhibition, and Mr. Levee went west to grow up with the country—the country being Hollywood. He did nicely, starting with the now historic Brunton studios, the first to supply complete stage service on rental to producers. Since then he has been variously in production, including a partnership with Joseph Schenck in the United Studios to considerable profit of operation and an ultimate sale. Until recently he was business manager of the Paramount studio. Mr. Levee's most exciting current activity has been as the aggressive president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

The Reasons for the Guild

Mr. Levee sees the fall of the old order of things in Hollywood, and in the current perplexities and problems of the motion picture production community, opportunity for the founding of a new structure of production.

"Hollywood is full of the heritages and habits of other days," he remarks with considerable feeling. "There is a group committed to the special policy of maintaining their own high and extraordinary salaries. They offer no place for the new idea, for the new enthusiasms which this industry must have if it is to prosper. If you don't belong to the 'lodge' you can't get in.

"I know I am talking about my friends. I live with and among these fellows. I play bridge and golf with them and all that, and because we do know each other so well I can dare to say what I think.

"Now the worse things get, and the more trouble the industry has, the better is the opportunity to demonstrate the value of the idea that is represented by the Hollywood Screen Guild."

This Hollywood Screen Guild of Mr. Levee's is in effect a cooperative production project, calculated to permit stars and directors to engage in production on a basis where their returns are governed by the box office performance of their pictures.

The Guild has been duly incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $1,000,000. It is announced that the product will be distributed by United Artists Corporation, and that for the present the schedule will include somewhere between four and six pictures a year.

Original Creators Sought

"The Guild will prove an open field for creative ideas," says Mr. Levee. "The eligibility of material will be decided upon by the board. After the picture has been accepted to be put into production, no one shall have anything to do with it save the responsible artists whose production it is.

"Each picture project becomes a separate trust, entirely by itself, with all of the funds administered and distributed by the Bank of America. The Guild will not handle the money, and there will be no possibility of a great many such misunderstandings of the sort that have supplied the bitter controversies of the production business."

His New York sojourn is just one long conference for Levee, including sessions with Mary Pickford (who is or is to be a member of the board of directors), and a meeting with Jesse Lasky, who has just begun a leave of absence from his post at the head of production for Paramount.

The Screen Guild is frankly modeled on the Theatre Guild of New York, with a frank hope of as much success.

"See what the Theatre Guild is today in the world of the stage," cites Levee, "and remember the day when there were such mighty names as Shubert, Klaw & Erlanger, Savage and Frohman. I tell you it can happen in the motion pictures, too."

Levee paused for a deep breath.

The Case of "Carl Smith"

"Now let us suppose something for just a minute, and let any picture man give the answer. Just suppose that there was a young man whose name was, let us say, 'Carl Smith,' just 'Carl Smith.' And suppose he came out to Hollywood and went, in the full flush of his enthusiasm, around to the studios, suggesting that they make a picture out of that novel entitled 'Frankenstein,' and that they make one of that Erich Remarque story, 'All Quiet,' and that they do one called 'Dracula.' You know the answer. If he ever got into the office with ideas like that—an unknown, mind you, by the name of 'Carl Smith'—they'd have him thrown out. But of course that wouldn't happen—because he'd never get far enough in to get thrown out in the first place.

"The Guild will make only the pictures that have the drive of that creative interest behind them. The young unknown will have his chance to try to sell his idea to the board. If he can make the board like it the picture will get made.

"Incidentally the Guild is to accept no financing fees or interest on the money advanced. It will take its fixed and proper share of the profits of production, and that will be its only source of revenue. It is not going to be another loan agent."

CANADIAN FILM TRADE EXCEEDS AUTOMOBILE

And 94 Cents of Each Dollar Taken In at Box Office Are Spent in Canada; 95 Per Cent of Pictures from United States

Canada "has more Canadian dollars invested in the motion picture industry and more Canadians employed in it, receiving higher wages and salaries, than in the automobile industry," says Vice Consul Donald H. Robinson at Toronto in a report to the Department of Commerce. As an indication of organization he also points out that 94 cents out of every dollar taken in at the box office in Canada are spent in Canada. Only 6 per cent of the receipts go to producers in France, Great Britain or the United States, though 95 per cent of the pictures exhibited are produced in the United States. The investment in theatres alone today totals $60,000,000.

Business Five Times Larger

As for distribution, in 1930 the business done was five times that done in 1919. Nine large distributing companies have head offices in Toronto, most of them branches of parent companies in America, though one French company in Montreal provides 60 pictures a year in French dialogue for the province of Quebec.

According to the vice consul, sale and distribution in Canada have dropped between 40 and 50 per cent below 1930, the fluctuation in Canadian currency to a discount of 15 per cent on Canadian money being cited as one factor. More than 100 theatres have closed.

In production of unprinted positive film since the decision to expand in 1924, such has been the growth in this field that for the 12 months ended in March, 1931, exports of this product were valued at more than $4,000,000.

Imports 500 Features

Canada imports 500 features a year besides more than 1,500 shorts, exclusive of newsreels. Ninety per cent of the positives used in Canadian theatres is printed in Montreal and Toronto from imported negatives and on unprinted positive, most of which is manufactured in Toronto.

Canada is making use of the film for publicity and education, through the Motion Picture Bureau, which each year produces 12 to 20 one-reel pictures 800 feet in length. The Bureau operates a modern laboratory and plant at Ottawa.

Actual production in Canada is limited chiefly to government, scenic and nature films, industrials and newsreels.

Appellate Division Denies Fox Tax Exemption Rights

The attorney general's office at Albany, New York, received as an important precedent a decision handed down on Tuesday by the court of appeals denying the Fox Film Corporation the right to exempt from taxation money it received from its foreign companies.

Assistant attorney general Wendell Brown, who appealed from a ruling of the appellate division denying the right of the tax commission to include in its assessment such moneys, pointed out that the court of appeals' action would mark the way for the state in future dealings with concerns which have foreign connections.

Kahane Leaving to Set Independent Producing of RKO

Final arrangements for RKO's independent production plans will be made by B. B. Kahane, president of Radio Pictures, who leaves for the Coast on this and other studio matters, late this week.

Joseph I. Schnitzer, Larry Darmour and J. G. Bachmann apparently are definitely set to comprise the first three producing units under the plan going into effect. Each will contribute four pictures to Radio's distribution schedule for the coming season, although there is a likelihood that Darmour will handle only Mickey McGuire comedies, and will produce no features. In the event Darmour does engage in feature production for Radio distribution, there is a probability that he will take over the William Boyd contract from RKO Pathe, using this star in four feature productions. Darmour is already under contract to make three Westerns for Paramount.

Unit Production at Pathe Studios

Bachmann is a former Paramount supervisor, and has been linked by report with production posts at Columbia. Schnitzer's deal for unit production for Radio has been under discussion since his retirement as president of Radio Pictures. All unit production for Radio will be done at the Pathe studios in Culver City, according to present plans.

Harold B. Franklin, president of RKO theatre subsidiaries, will join Kahane in Hollywood within a few days after the latter's arrival there. He will be accompanied by Phil Reisman, general manager of the RKO film buying department, whose mission is to go over new product.

Robert F. Sisk, director of RKO advertising, publicity and exploitation, will visit the company's studios for the first time immediately after Radio Picture's sales convention, which will be held at the Drake hotel, Chicago, May 16 to 18.

Eddy Eckels, newly appointed editor of the new house organ for the RKO circuit, arrived in New York this week from the Coast and is now engaged in the preparation of the first issue.

Appointment of E. J. O'Flynn, formerly with Brown, Wheelock, Harris & Co., New York, to a position in the RKO real estate department, was announced this week.

Indications this week were that Watterson R. Rothacker, who was engaged a month ago as managing director in charge of business administration of the RKO studios and to make a survey and report, would not be retained following completion of his survey and filing of a report. Rothacker presented a preliminary report to RKO home office executives last week and returned to the Coast immediately afterwards to resume his survey which, it is expected, will require a few additional weeks.

Regarded as a probable outgrowth of Rothacker's survey was a reorganization of the studio business administration staff by David O. Selznick, production chief. The reorganization makes Charles E. Sullivan business assistant to Selznick, with M. J. Abbott as comptroller. Both appointees are from the RKO organization, Sullivan having been a Pathe production executive and Abbott has been active in RKO management capacities for some time.

Still in abeyance is action on the considered appointment of Maurice Goodman, film counsel, to the post of RKO chief counsel vacated by Kahane's election to the presidency of Radio Pictures, and that of J. J. McCarthy to the post of liaison executive between RKO and its unit producers. Divisional theatre directors for the middle west and New England territories also remain to be appointed.

Fox Will Reduce Accessory Prices As a Concession

Fox will reduce the price of advertising accessories from 25 to 50 per cent in an effort to induce exhibitors to conform to its new regulations which ask for the return of posters and other accessories within five days after use. The concession on the part of the distributor comes in response to exhibitor complaints that the company's new poster restrictions, by forcing theatres to buy all accessories from Fox exchanges, increases costs of these materials at a time when minimum overhead is a prime consideration.

According to plans now under consideration, Fox will reduce poster charges from 15 cents per sheet to 10 cents. The cost of stills, now $1 per set, may be halved. Independent poster exchanges charge 30 cents for a set of stills and five to 10 cents per sheet for posters.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, commented that exhibitors do not care from whom their accessories are purchased as long as the price is equitable.

Additional protests against Fox's application of its new poster regulations were voiced during the week by Michigan and New Orleans exhibitors. Sentiment in both localities, according to surveys among exhibitors, indicates that the Fox edict on accessories will be ignored, with enforcement of it left entirely up to the distributor.

Sheehan to Europe

Winfield Sheehan, Fox vice-president, has sailed for Europe. He will be gone only a short time.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

EXECUTIVES and employes of Radio, NBC and RKO who possess a cultivated sense of things esthetic will find much to their liking in their new headquarters at Rockefeller's $250,000,000 "Radio City." Ezra Winter has been commissioned to paint an immense mural depicting an American adaptation of the age-old quest for the "Fountain of Youth." Considering that the "city" is a mountainous monument in itself, born of Rockefeller and Radio Corporation executives, the story of the proposed mural strikes us oddly. An old man, who has followed the path of the ages to the heights in search of the fountain of youth, will stand in the foreground gazing at the mountain, realizing the impossibility of ever reaching it. Floating before him across the sky in the form of a rainbow will be a great procession of the ambitions and vanities of his life, from the flowers of youth, upward through early aspirations, fruits of labor and strength, love, ambition for power, wealth, fame and glory, to end in the clouds of age.

News item in the Denver Rocky Mountain News:

"Rumors of drastic changes of policy and a sweeping shakeup in the executive personnel of RKO reverberated through Denver yesterday. The readjustments follow a battle for control of the corporation which resulted in victory for Martin Beck, who immediately placed Sidney Franklin in charge of theatre operation."

We take exception to two phases of the above. Firstly, belittling of the Radio Corporation, which was the principal opponent in the fight to gain control of RKO, is unfair. Secondly, Mr. Harold Franklin is in charge of RKO theatres and he is no relation to Sidney Franklin, who is a bull-thrower of no mean repute.

Major Edward Bowes, an executive of the Loew corporation, showman extraordinary, operator of the Capitol on Broadway and star of a weekly broadcast is also somewhat of a philosopher and spreader of cheer. During his Capitol "Family" broadcast the other morning, Bowes gave some sound advice to his radio audience which extends from coast to coast. Said the Major:

"These are difficult days for almost everyone. Many are depressed and unhappy over what they haven't instead of being grateful and happy for what they have.

"Good health—your home and your loved ones are of paramount importance. Wealth may be dissipated and later recovered, but every day of happiness you lose is irrevocably and forever lost.

"Think it over—count your blessings. You'll find you've much to truly give thanks for."

"CHICK" LEWIS, our colleague in charge of the "Managers' Round Table" Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, periodically contacts exhibitor members in order to gather first hand knowledge for use in his editorial columns. Recently, "Chick" received a batch of questionnaires, properly filled in, answering a request for biographical data of his theatre friends. The answers to one question in particular: "Why Did You Enter Show Business" supplied the basis for a series of interesting and even amusing disclosures.

An operator in Illinois, who appears to be an obliging chap, frankly admitted that his start was prompted by a desire "to create a position for my son-in-law," while a Warner manager in Connecticut said that he was lured into exhibition because he believed it to be "fascinating, interesting, intriguing."

"It runs in the family," wrote an independent of Nebraska; "to satisfy a yearning," said a fourth.

A Canadian disclosed the fact that his reason was "no reason" and another said he entered "with the idea of becoming a projectionist." That was three years ago and to date this chap has advanced to the exalted position of doorman. There were several "yens" and "longings" listed, while the "influence of relatives" had something to do with other cases. Another Canadian liked the idea of "being amongst people and serving them."

From an owner at Florida "Chick" learned that his reason was "because it is a clean-cut business for a clean-cut man" and a Pittsburgher said he "always had a weakness for music."

"Love for the profession," "interested in electrical and mechanical machinery," "liked to swing a paint brush," and "because I was temporarily unemployed at the time," wrote in other managers. Only one operator out of several hundred said that he entered the business because he wanted to make money. A few needed a job, and one chap "had to eat."

"Having been a newspaperman before, I went into the show business," was the odd reply from a Mexican exhibitor.

Other reasons for the beginning of some of the current crop of theatre managers ranged all the way from "infatuation," "enjoyed playing the piano" and "love for the business," to "liked the work and could sing fairly well," "fascination and the glamour of night life."

A rare case is that of a manager from Nebraska who was "afflicted with the fever." Another revolves around a New England man who entered just "for the fun of it."

The most adjectives used in describing a reason emanated from the publicity director of a circuit house in downtown Brooklyn who could not resist the picture business because at the time he thought the field was "the grandest, swellest, most fascinating game-business in the world!" Sounds like some of his newspaper ad copy.

From a chap in Illinois "Chick" Lewis heard a little story of economics, as follows: "Had a hardware store that was losing money and the man who had the picture show wanted to trade it for my store. We made the trade—he went broke in two years—and I'm still running the show."

In conclusion we offer the reason of a New York operator who said: "I often wonder."

LAW ENCROACHMENTS ON TRADE REDUCED TO MINIMUM, SAYS HAYS

Air Cleared by Decisions on Blockbooking in U. S. and Monopoly in Canada, MPPDA Head Declares in His Report

Points to Readjustments at Studios But Also Notes That Producers Are Avoiding False Economy Impairing Product

Legislative encroachments upon the orderly conduct of the industry have been reduced to a minimum by "the steady growth and importance of ethical standards in the motion picture business since 1922," and by distributors' recognition of the fact that their success "is interdependent with and upon the success of the exhibitor," according to Will H. Hays.

In the following and concluding instalment of his report to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America at the end of his tenth year as president of the organization, Mr. Hays discusses in detail two court decisions in the United States and Canada which "have clarified the atmosphere created and maintained for years by claims against this industry that the blockbooking of pictures was illegal and in Canada that all engaged in the industry were a monopoly."

Hays points to the readjustments and economies at the studios but at the same time points out that the producers are avoiding the "false economy that would result in the production of entertainment without drawing power."

The third and final section of the report follows:

The steady growth and importance of ethical standards in the motion picture business since 1922, and your commonsense recognition that your success is interdependent with and upon the success of the exhibitor, your customers have operated to reduce to a minimum legislative encroachments upon the orderly conduct of the business.

This is not the place for an exhaustive review of the tax situation in regard to motion pictures. Analyses indicate that our industry bears, at the very least, its full share of the nation's tax burden. Admission taxes, representing, as they do, special class legislation and placing a burden upon the necessary entertainment of the working man and his family, have proved, in the rare cases where tried, justly unpopular. The cost of collecting them is excessive in proportion to the return and they reduce motion picture attendance so much that the value of the tax is more than lost by reduction, through diminution of income, of other taxes paid by the industry.

No state censorship law has been added to those eight state censorships that were in existence when our Association was formed in 1922. In one commonwealth, Massachusetts, we were able to bring this issue directly before the people through referendum, and by a majority of more than two to one the people of Massachusetts repealed the state censorship law that had been in effect there.

Our roadway is being pointed by judicial decisions. Two such decisions, of far-reaching importance, recently handed down by the Courts of the United States and Canada have clarified the atmosphere created and maintained for years by claims against this industry that the blockbooking of pictures was illegal and in Canada that all engaged in the industry were a monopoly.

It has now been definitely decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Second New York Circuit that every distributor has the undoubted right to sell in blocks or to adhere to a policy of terms of sale, price of sale and persons to whom they sell, and the court found that the smaller producers or distributors, as distinguished from the larger companies, have not been shown to have been affected by any combination between the larger companies; that the sales methods of selling pictures in blocks has not been shown to have any effect upon competition when the whole field is surveyed and that it is impossible to say on the evidence that the effect of blockbooking as practiced in the industry unfairly affected competition. On the other hand the court found it may farily be said that all persons engaged in the production of pictures have been able successfully to distribute their product and that this has permitted fair competition in the industry.

Further, a most illuminating court decision of exceptional interest in regard to the motion picture industry was handed down in the Supreme Court of Ontario on March 7, 1932. This opinion consummated a trial lasting several weeks and in which the defendants were charged under Canadian law with conspiracy to prevent or lessen competition. The Combines Investigation Act and Section 498 of the Criminal Code of Canada differs from our American Antitrust law in that conspiracy cannot be established on the basis of the form and method of an agreement. The agreement must be shown to have had as its purpose and its effect the lessening of competition.

Canada Refutes Monopoly Charge

The following excerpts from the voluminous decision of Mr. Justice Garrow indicate the sweeping approval which he gave the industry in connection with his finding of not guilty against the defendants:

A. "The main question of fact here involved so far as the Combines Act is concerned, is this. Has the evidence established that there existed during the years mentioned between the accused, or some of them, an actual or tacit agreement entered into within this Province which had or was designed to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition in or substantially controlling within Ontario or generally the purchase, barter, sale or supply of film? . . .

B. "The evidence taken at the trial failed to disclose that there was any attempt at price fixing as between the exchanges. On the contrary there was at all times very considerable rivalry and marked competition for business between them with the result, so far as the general public is conserned, that no complaint whatever is made as to the prices of admission charged. There have been available throughout the years in question more films supplied than there were theatres to play them in. There has never been an instance of a theatre being obliged to close its doors for want of film so far as the evidence discloses. And the rentals charged by the various exchanges to the exhibitors have been fair and reasonable; or at any rate have been arrived at solely by bargaining between the individual distributor and his customer and not as the result of any pre-arrangement among those controlling the product. . . .

"Protection" a Proper Practice

C. "The Standard Contract was as much to the interest of the exhibitor as of the distributor in this sense at least that it was desirable that the former should know, when he was dealing each season with many different distributors, that the contract he signed with each was the same in its general terms and differed only in details. . . .

D. "I find as a fact that protection in itself is conceded to be and is a proper enough arrangement. Undoubtedly there are individual cases in which it may have seemed to work a hardship. But I am quite unable to find that the accused or any of them combined together to grant to Famous Players or their associates such a degree of 'protection' as worked to the detriment of the independents as a whole by controlling or limiting the supply of film. It was to the benefit of the exchanges to keep all their pictures working continuously—they had nothing to gain and everything to lose by doing otherwise. While Famous Players was enjoying a first run and protection afterwards with one film of a certain picture there was nothing to prevent some independent exhibitor having the same privilege with another film of the same picture in some other district.

E. ". . . the so-called independent exhibitors constitute a very considerable proportion of the whole. Their business is very valuable to each distributor and he would not willingly risk the loss or dissatisfaction of valuable customers. It is pretty safe to assume that in this, as in most other kind of big business, each individual is looking out for himself without too high a regard for the interests of his rivals, and it is difficult to accept the suggestion that these hard-headed business men were willing at the dictate of any one to tie up their product and turn away or antagonize a large number of their customers, unless it was very clearly to their financial advantage to do so, and I have not been able to discover evidence of such advantage.

Fairness to Exhibitors

F. "There may have been a few cases in which some inconvenience and delay was experienced in getting the particular kind of picture that the exhibitor wanted, but that there was any general discrimination against the independent theatre proprietor has not in my opinion been made out. There is abundant evidence that they were permitted to cancel contracts, they were given generous terms on reductions of rentals if the occasion demanded; when the change to sound occurred many of their obligations as to unplayed pictures were wiped out; they got protection if demanded; they could and did get 'selective' contracts; they had the right to screen before contracting; they were given credit if they were entitled to it; their so-called 'delinquencies,' i. e., failure to take and exhibit pictures within the time specified by their contracts, were treated fairly, if not generously, by the distributors. All this and much besides to the same effect negatives the suggestion that the independents as a class were the victims of a conspiracy designed to cut off or limit their supply of film.

G. "One does not in a case of this kind look for the terms of the combine or conspiracy to be set out in black and white in the minutes of the companies involved or contained in so many words in some document or series of documents. It is not at all necessary that the parties shall all actually have put their heads together, nor indeed that they shall ever have met together and formally agreed, but it is essential that one is able to gather from all the evidence that the combine or conspiracy alleged did in fact exist between at least some two or more of the accused; that there was a common design or plan to do the thing forbidden by the statute not resting in intention merely but reduced to a common undertaking to carry that intention into effect.

H. "I have not been able to gather from the material before me that the existence of such a combination between the parties has been made out, and I find myself quite unable to arrive at the conclusion that the Crown has discharged the burden which rests upon it, and consequently the prosecution fails as to all the accused and upon all three counts of the indictment."

This definitive and well reasoned action of the Candian courts offers a contrast to the necessity, faced by our courts in the United States, of inhibiting many of the vital processes of modern business because of the letter of laws we passed when the world was geared to different speeds and lesser exigencies.

One of these instances I described as follows in an address delivered Thursday December 13, 1931, before the Boston Chamber of Commerce:

> "The seven thousand theatres in the United States enter into written contracts with distributors calling for ten million five hundred thousand separate exhibitions of pictures every year. The occasions for honest differences of opinion arising in execution of these contracts are almost limitless. In 1922 over four thousand lawsuits were pending, representing such differences of opinion. No matter who won or lost these lawsuits, the value of the picture in question was faded out long before the award, with inevitable bad feeling.
> "With the co-operation of representative industrial thought and leaders from all branches of the business, a standard exhibition contract was agreed upon which provided that any dispute arising therefrom should be submitted to a board of arbitration of six men. These boards were established in thirty-two cities, and were composed of three local exhibitors and three local distributor representatives.
> "So practical and fair was this arrangement that in six years 51,255 claims that were filed were settled or withdrawn before the date of hearing; 36,777 awards were rendered; only in 1/3 of 1 per cent. of all these cases was a seventh arbitrator required; there were only eight lawsuits in six years, and claims totalling $27,197,596.36 were peacefully and effectively settled.
> "This plan was cited again and again as a conspicuous example of self-regulation in American history.
> "But the question was raised as to the technical legality of the procedure under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890.
> "The trial judge, in deciding the case, said:
> 'That competition between distributors has been promoted by the adoption of the standard exhibition contract, and that in many ways generally trade conditions have been vastly improved, I have no doubt, and so find.'
> "The producing companies that had agreed upon arbitration had stimulated and not restrained competition among themselves. They had evolved a procedure which, in the words of the distinguished jurist, 'vastly improved conditions' in the trade. Nevertheless, the wording of a so-called Anti-Trust law passed in 1890, before motion pictures were dreamed of as a commercial enterprise, compelled the courts to undo the fair, orderly and economical process set up.
> "This is referred to mainly for the lesson that business generally may draw from it. The motion picture industry will still be able to build from our experience an arbitration system within the limits fixed by judicial decision."

Comprachico Legislation

Commenting upon the lessons to be drawn from such a divergence of fact and law, I said:

"It is the appointed province of legislation to regulate traffic and barter. But no bill of rights, from the Codex Justinian to the Constitution, confers upon the government the authority to contain the processes of business in permanent strait-jackets. Such procedure is akin to the practice of medieval Comprachicos who confined infants in earthen jars and left them there to grow in the shape of the vessel, producing synthetic dwarfs for the courts and fairs of the Middle Ages.

"And if we do not take prompt and vigorous action to revise certain punitive statues, we shall soon find many of the soundest and most essential of our industries similarly dwarfed and distorted by Comprachico legislation through which the economic theorism of forty-two years ago still contrives to exercise control over industrial management today.

"The modification of inconsiderate law, to premit the orderly development of business, is a first and essential step toward the restoration of permanent prosperity in the United States.

"This necessary modification affects every American. I propose that we concern ourselves a moment with it.

"The philosophy of commerce and the methods of business have undergone revolutionary change in the past two decades. This applies from the most simple process of business to the most complex. You do not keep your books like you kept them twenty years ago. You do not plan your sales campaigns in even remote conformity to the methods your fathers used. You no longer view labor as a commodity. You counsel with it as an equal in the partnership of endeavor. World market reports are as pertinent to your morning planning as were the fluctuation of local supply and demand to your predecessors.

Archaic Law

"But we have had to effect much of the progress of business in the face of and sometimes in conflict with a body of archaic law, enacted into statute when the problems of industry were naively simple compared to economic conditions of 1931-1932.

"In the era of ruthless competition these now antiquated statutes of restraint and inhibition were necessary. But business has progressed in spirit as well as method, in conscience as well as complexity. The American business man today is entitled, on the basis of his proved intelligence and recognition of community interests, to reasonable freedom at the hands of government—freedom to work out the problems that are equally germane to the legitimate successful operation of business and to the welfare and prosperity of every workingman and every workingman's family.

"There is a healthy disposition on the part of our national legislators to consider the revision of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law and the Clayton Act. This is well.

"No one, of course, would suggest that legislation yield its right to interpose upon business reasonable conditions, clearly in the public interest. I only urge that the method employed shall be such as to cause the result to coincide with the intent. I ask for reasonable freedom for American business to keep itself abreast of changing conditions and to erect a more stable edifice of prosperity."

Not only our own industry but leaders in every form of American business stand solidly together in this position.

Economics at the Studios

In common with all American industry, we have accorded due thought during the past two years to the adjustment of our internal economics to meet the general financial situation.

You are all familiar with the rigorous efforts that have been made and are being pursued at the studios to bring the cost of picture production to an irreducible minimum consonant with the artistic necessities. You know that every process of distribution and exhibition is daily under the closest scrutiny and that in each of your companies it has been made a principal order of the day to conserve every possible dollar. Nevertheless, we are avoiding the false economy which would result in the production of entertainment without drawing power. Every picture which fails to draw is "expensive,'" no matter how little it costs.

It is short-sighted policy that would deny the necessity of research for product as yet undiscovered, for uses and processes unknown, for markets yet undefined, on the basis that the charge for research is merely waste. Our studios are the entertainment research laboratories of the industry. Themes are tried and either succeed or fail, directors are constantly exploring to discover new trends and techniques, producers are courageously striking out on new roads of entertainment appeal. Such proper efforts are not to be considered "extravagance" or "waste."

JUST A SLIGHT CHANGE OF MIND

The Seattle Board of Theatre Censors last week presented the amusing spectacle of exerting authority over a picture during a second run showing which they left absolutely unscathed during its first run engagement at the Fox Fifth Avenue only two months ago. "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" is the victim. When John Danz announced the opening of the film at the Winter Garden for a week's showing, Dave Himelhoch proclaimed from his chair at the head of the local board, that children under 18 years of age must be refused admittance. Checks indicated that some 700 children had seen the film at its first showing, and so far none have been arrested for juvenile delinquency. It is the general opinion of much of Seattle's population that perhaps the censor board in this instance leaped just a bit before it looked.

When valuable machinery is scrapped to make way for newer and better processes, when vast research laboratories spend millions of dollars each year in investigation and discovery, when new lines of merchandise are manufactured to tap possible new markets, when every successful newspaper must buy twice as much material as it uses, when vastly more misses than hits issue from the publishing industry, the investment chargeable to enterprise is an accepted factor of business. So when a story bought for picturization is shelved because of production problems subsequently developed, when investments in entertainment personalities are made subject to the confirmation of public favor, or when a finished film is refashioned in the attempt to make it better, the cost should not be considered "waste." It is the experimentation incident and necessary ~~to the~~ production of motion pictures and not a proper charge to an indefinite "overhead."

I do not say this to justify the abuses, the extravagance or the waste which a mistaken policy in any industry may effect. I say this to make clear the fact that financial and business reorganization in the motion picture industry is making real progress, that entertainment research is being placed on an organized and purposeful basis, and that ths problems of management are being met on an increasingly effective scale.

Future of the Industry

The motion picture industry offers a splendid example of the principle that the saturation point is remote for an art, an industry or a service that remains fully susceptible to creative forces.

There is a vast distinction between the figures of attendance at motion picture theatres and the number of possible customers. Just as every picture produced upon a higher standard of entertainment value is lifting by that much the standard of public appreciation for pictures of the better kind, so does every such picture help to create a greater market for motion picture entertainment. Every theme that rises above the previous level of entertainment appeal draws another group of theatre-goers to motion pictures. Every classic of literature, successfully translated to the screen, introduces a new element of attendance.

Among the inquiries constantly conducted into the state of public taste, one recently instituted and still in process of development is of particular interest. The Motion Picture National Preference Poll, inaugurated by the organized industry in March of this year, promises a very broad and thoughtful response. The first returns of this national service indicate that the audiences want release—they apparently want vicarious realization of what their own condition or life makes difficult or impossible. This means the widest range of entertainment theme for the screen.

Obviously the maximum development of the screen is before it, not behind it. So truly stupendous is its task of universal entertainment that it is only against the background of the almost immeasurable consequent problems that its real progress becomes apparent. That progress to date is richer in drama than any motion picture scenario and replete, indeed, with service.

I view the last decade with a deep appreciation, measured by my exact knowledge of your accomplishments. You are merchants—entertainment merchants—manufacturing and distributing drama, diversion and graphic education. But your constant and expensive willingness to abandon profitable practices and disregard balance sheet advice in order to keep covenant with good taste and constant improvement testifies that the motion picture industry has demonstrated its competence to regulate its own household.

We have maintained competition without squandering time and money in confiscatory litigation. We work in constructive harmony because we have consistently conformed to the decision of internal arbitration. We have avoided unintelligent friction by joining experiences and efficiencies for mutual benefit.

Self-Restraint

Dealing in a commodity which serves every state and class in the Union, we have invoked no legislative straight-jackets because we have preferred to exercise self-restraint. Because of continually closer understandings of common responsibilities, we have long appreciated that we cannot separately affront community sensibility without casting disrepute upon the entire industry.

We wish to be right, not only because it is preferable to win under the rules, but also because it pays best.

We frequently misestimate what is best to do. We are sometimes misled by impetuous judgment, sometimes by calculated opportunism, but our sins of commission and omission, alike, have less year by year, and our praiseworthy performances correspondingly increased. The important things achieved compare so favorably with the unimportant things which we failed to accomplish that we look to the responsibilities of the future with high hope.

I share a willing partnership in the mistakes which the industry has made; I claim no more that partnership in the progress achieved. There is, indeed, much yet to be done, but, together we will meet the problems and all of the industry's varied responsibilities with an increasing faith in its vast future and in the industrial virility of the nation.

Italian Film Imports Drop; Germany Issues New Ruling

The import of foreign films into Italy in 1931 declined 825,385 meters from 1930, according to George R. Canty, American trade commissioner in Berlin. The total in 1931 was 2,265,749 meters, which compares with a total of 3,091,134 in 1930. The only individual increase was from France, which raised its imports from 599,535 meters in 1930 to 822,708 meters in 1931.

Germany has issued a ruling, expected to effect foreign importations, stating that the Film Board, at its discretion, may inspect not only the versions of films intended for release in Germany, but also the original production.

A petition by Tiffany for a writ of prohibition has been submitted with briefs to the supreme court in San Francisco this week. The writ is against the Los Angeles superior court.

The case involves the appointment of an arbiter by the Los Angeles court, who with two others, would arbitrate a contract dispute between Tiffany and James Cruze Productions. The latter claims Tiffany broke a contract calling for 10 pictures.

Producer-Writer Agreement Goes Into Effect May 1

Labor shall be paid for its hire, whether worthy or not, under the proposed producer-writer agreement which goes into effect May 1, having been ratified April 21. It was discussed and explained at a meeting of writers in the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Monday night.

Elimination of a practice of "writing on spec" is expected to end many of the disagreements formerly arising between the writing craft and studios. Under the new proposals, when a writer delivers a story treatment (defined as a "complete story outline") he is to be paid a specified amount.

Upon delivery of a first draft of a continuity, another specified amount; upon delivery of final script, the final payment of the amount agreed upon. If the producer exercises his option to eliminate the writer after either of the first two processes, the writer will get paid for what he has done, regardless of its acceptability.

Another important issue settled by the pact is the matter of screen credits, which would be limited to the names of the two who did most of the work, irrespective of how many writers had hands in it. After a picture is completed, in which several writers were concerned, the producer shall show it to them. They then vote upon the two whose names, in their opinions, deserve credit for writing the piece. The producer then agrees to give credit on the screen to those so selected. If the writers cannot agree, "then and in that event" the producer will have the right to write up his own credit sheet.

Producer representatives who have worked for months on the problem are Irving Thalberg, B. P. Schulberg; writers, Waldemar Young, Clara Baranger, Ralph Block, Alfred A. Cohn, Martin Flavin, Benjamin Galzer, O. H. P. Garrett, Howard Green, Percy Heath, Gerrit Lloyd, Bradley King, Herman Mankiewicz, Jane Murfin, James Seymour, Frank Woods, John Meehan.

Producing companies already ratifying the agreement include Columbia, Universal, Fox, Radio, Tiffany, Feature Productions (Joseph M. Schenck), Warner-First National, MGM, Paramount.

COMMITTEE IS READY TO REPORT TAX BILL

Senate Group Considers Voluminous Testimony; Several in House Indicate Regret at Having Opposed Sales Tax

Planning to submit its report to the Senate this week, if possible, the Senate finance committee is engaged in consideration of the voluninous testimony submitted during the more than two weeks of hearings. At these hearings, without exception, every industry selected for special taxes declared the impossibility of bearing the burden and painted a dreary picture of the economic disorders and unemployment which would follow the application of the measure as originally passed by the House.

Members of the committee are faced with a difficult task in deciding where the burden of the nearly one and one-quarter billion dollars to be raised shall be imposed.

Last week the committee was urged to increase the admission tax exemption to 50 cents or, better still, to impose no new admission taxes, and representatives of the theatres—both legitimate and picture—exhibitors, actors, scenic artists and musicians told how hard the stage and screen has been hit. Only about 40,000 of the 140,000 theatrical musicians are working, only a small percentage of actors are employed and those who are rarely draw full salaries. Many theatres are dark and there is little work for scenic artists, and the motion picture houses are largely "in the red" with little hope of recovery if a tax is imposed, theatrical leaders told the Senate committee.

A similar picture was painted by representatives of other industries subjected to taxes. The jewelry industry is bankrupt and the fur industry is broke; the automobile industry can stage no comeback if taxes are imposed, the radio industry is suffering from a plethora of competition, and so on down the line. Nobody can pay.

Rather than special taxes, the committee was urged almost unanimously to provide some kind of general manufacturers' tax in which the theatre, manufacturing entertainment, were willing to pay their share, according to exhibitor spokesmen. A strong effort will be made in the committee by Senator Reed (Rep. Pennsylvania) and other members to bring this about. Senator Reed favors a general manufacturers' tax under which every manufacturer of every commodity except food and clothing would be taxed upon his gross sales from which he might deduct the amount paid for materials, a low rate being provided, which would be little burden upon the average manufacturer.

There is, however, considerable doubt whether the Senate would look with favor upon such a measure, although there are indications that some of the members of the House who most vociferously opposed the manufacturers' sales tax now regret their action as the task of framing an equitable revenue bill grows in difficulty.

Possibilities also are seen that the finance committee will go to the original Treasury Department recommendations for its taxes. The Treasury program had the virtue of providing only a few industrial taxes, mostly upon industries which it was believed could stand the burden. That program, however, provides for an admission tax exemption of only ten cents, and it is doubtful if, after its hearings last week, the committee will care to impose such a burden on the theatres. In all probability, if the Treasury program is used, certain taxes will be selected from it and others added to make up the necessary and others added to make up the revenues.

There Is Something to Think About in Frank Young's Fight That Won Out Over Gloomy Days

There's the tang of oldtime showmanship in this yarn of the adventure of Frank H. Young, as recorded in the joyous enthusiasm of Scott Leslie, MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S correspondent "way down in Florida" at Tampa. Mr. Leslie is an exhibitor of no small experience, and besides recording the affairs of his region for our readers, publishes a diminutive magazine of pithy good nature.

Here in essence is the story of an exhibitor fighting against adversity with final success with a comeback won, of all things, by bringing a black house out of the red, beating the depression by a black-out, you might say.

In view of some of the grandiose endeavors in Chicago where "Girl Crazy," full length musical comedy, was super-added to a picture show, one finds here an amusing, and eminently successful, parallel effort in a most remote stratum of society.—THE EDITOR.

By SCOTT LESLIE

Back in 1915, Frank H. Young was the owner of a "two car" Negro minstrel show, under the moniker "Frank H. Young's New York Minstrels."

One car was a combination sleeper and diner, with a section in the rear for Frank's office and stateroom. The other car carried the big top, scenery, trucks, poles and all the paraphernalia used with the show.

Business was good and Frank was "sittin' on top of the world." Then came the entry of this country into the World War, and things began to happen for Frank. Some of his actors joined other troupes, spelled "troops." Others went in for the big wages offered in shipbuilding plants and other lines. To meet this competition Frank had to tilt salaries. The good old days when you could get the best of talent for "ten bucks and cakes" were passe. It was a "mighty sorry actor" who couldn't look you in the eye and say, "I gotta have five bucks a day and found; an' if I doubles in brass, I gotta have two bucks more."

Motorizes His Show

The old "overhead thing" was eating up the profits, and then some. To reduce expenses Frank decided to motorize his show. The two railroad cars were sold and two passenger busses and four baggage trucks were purchased. Things were breaking just so-so for Frank. One year might show a profit; the next might eat it up. Most states raised the traveling show licenses and that was another thorn in the side of the trouper, but Frank managed to keep the wheels turning.

Then along came the depression. Receipts dwindled until there was hardly enough gross to pay the expense, let alone show a profit, and Frank saw the writing on the wall. About a year ago Frank played his last stand. It happened to be Tampa. He closed his show; stored his stuff; paid off his actors and sent them back to their engagement points. Frank had little left but a reputation for honesty and showmanship.

Now in the Negro section of Tampa, which is known as "the scrub," there was an exclusive colored theatre known as the Central. This house had been a sure-fire money maker in the "good old days,"

New Sound Equipment

Frank had a "hunch" and stepped in with a proposition to take over the house. A deal was made and Frank paid over the first month's rent. He then "closed for repairs." He painted everything, inside and out. A new marquee was built. New sound equipment was installed. One of his big trucks was built into an elaborate ballyhoo. An electric light plant was installed on it, with lamps in many colors for the night parades. This plant also provided the current for the sound, and monster horns sent the music of jazz records through the air. When this ballyhoo went through the Negro section it brought the nickels and dimes from hiding, and the new Central opened with a bang.

Business carried on for awhile, but it failed to produce the amount needed to take care of the "nut," for Frank had stretched his credit to the limit, and the bills must be paid.

Adds Vaudeville, Musical Comedy

So he sent for some of his earlier performers. He added vaudeville and musical comedy to his picture program. Each Friday night he staged a "Midnight Ramble" where the colored boys and girls "got hot," and this did the trick, for colored folk just love to see the black actors on the stage. The old sock, coffee pot and vases were raided for the hidden wealth, and the line formed on the right every night at the rejuvenated Central.

To keep one company too long is a mistake, as Frank well knows, so he has sent advance men out through the state and arranged playing dates in other colored theatres, and as soon as he has a line of bookings arranged, he places the current show on the road and puts in a new one at the Central. This changing of attractions has kept the interest of his patrons and has put the Central in the black, and, what's more, is keeping it there.

Frank now has three shows working, one in his theatre and two on tour, using his two big motor busses to make their jumps.

So, Frank beat the depression. He has ditched the red ink—he hopes for good—and, as the jury says, "So say we all."

Progress Seen In Reorganization of General Theatres

A letter addressed this week to the holders of 10-year six per cent convertible gold debentures of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., due April 1, 1940, is seen as indicating definite progress toward reorganization of the company.

The letter, signed by a consolidated committee, discloses that the two committees formed some months ago for the debenture holders, have agreed upon the fundamental principles for the basis of a reorganization, and will act as one committee, with Arthur W. Loasby of New York as chairman. The committee includes: Edward C. Delafield of City Bank Farmers Trust Company, New York; Harry S. Durand of Mackaye & Co., New York; Lloyd S. Gilmour of Blyth & Co., Inc., New York; Arthur Peck of Harper & Turner, Philadelphia; Conrad H. Poppenhusen, of Poppenhusen, Johnston, Thompson & Cole, Chicago; Seton Porter of Sanderson & Porter, New York, and Ray W. Stephenson of Cassatt & Co., Philadelphia.

Under a plan with which the Chase National Bank has agreed in principle, among other things, the bank and other debenture holders who participate would receive, on a pro rata basis, in exchange for the obligations which they hold, preferred stock of a reorganized company.

Universal will hold three conventions this year, at San Francisco, Chicago and New York. The first will be held in San Francisco on May 1 at the St. Francis Hhotel. The Hotel Drake will be the scene of the Chicago meet, May 5 and 6; and the New York session will be at the Park Central Hotel, May 8 and 9.

All three will be conducted by George Schlaifer, general sales manager, with E. T. Gomersall assisting on the Coast. Carl Laemmle and Laemmle, Jr., plan to attend the three sessions. Schlaifer and Gomersall leave the home office this week for the Coast city.

CREATIVE POWER PRESSING NEED OF BRITISH INDUSTRY: MOORING

Taboo of Individual Ideas by Executive Interference and Petty Upsettings of Work Blamed for Inferior Product

By WM. H. MOORING, London

What is ostensibly a move to develop new directors from among the young British technicians aspiring to that status, has been started by John Maxwell of British International Pictures, Ltd. Maxwell has decided that his principal director, Alfred Hitchcock, shall, for the next year, direct no films of his own, but shall supervise the work of several newcomers.

This is following the lead of many of the Hollywood studios and of Ufa of Germany, which for some time worked Eric Pommer as a supervisor with complete control over a staff of directors. The Elstree experiment should work well if Hitchcock is afforded that degree of freedom that has so far been denied to directors working under the B. I. P. banner.

Unanimous opinion among the technicians of Elstree is that individual ideas are tabood by certain executive interference, and petty interferences are blamed for much of the disappointment occasioned by the bulk of recent B. I. P. product. Story selection has been weak, and story treatment in the main even weaker. For this state blame has been allocated, but it lies with the past.

Need for Creative Power

If British International can show British producers a way in which raw human material can be effectively developed, they will have performed a great service to British motion pictures, for one of the most pressing needs of the British film industry today is creative power. Not only native directors, but screen writers are at a heavy premium, as has been discovered by most of the American concerns who have so far started serious production on this side of the Atlantic. In nearly every case where any progress has been registered, there has had to be almost wholesale importation of American technicians and executives. Even the British production concerns have had to import talent from the continent, or have had to borrow technical inspiration from German and French directors. At the moment the process of importation is going on.

Warner Brothers and First National, who propose extensions to their British production unit at Teddington near London, are expecting over from Hollywood, Randall Sayre and W. Scott Darling, both British writers with lengthy American experience. Terrell Morse is also coming over to take over the editorship-in-chief of all the British output from Teddington. A. M. Salamon, for 17 years with Warner, is taking over studio management. Meanwhile, the shift-round at the B. I. P. studio has resulted in Mrs. Boyd, for some time past the right hand "man" to Walter Mycroft, scenario and production chief at the B. I. P. studios, leaving the concern to join Warner-First National, and Sam Simmons, chief cutter from Elstree, has also gone over to the same unit.

Local Censors Close Theatre

At Beckenham in Kent (near London) the local council recently initiated a censorship panel of nine persons. This unofficial body overruled the certifications of the British Board of Film Censors, and insisted upon ridiculous conditions relating to the exhibition of films in local theatres. Children were not allowed to see this and that and the local theatre owners were harassed to a point of suicide.

As a result local public resentment has sprung up, and patronage has been transferred to other cinemas in adjacent areas outside the jurisdiction of the Beckenham censors. One of the leading theatres in Beckenham—the Pavilion—has had to close down owing to reduced public support.

Meanwhile the tendency on the part of various local authorities to set up special censorship committees continues, and the C. E. A. is to consider the appointment of a full-time officer to conduct a propaganda campaign in counteraction of the many organized meddlers now working against the cinema as an institution.

Imperial Quota Asked

That the Imperial Conference at Ottawa should consider the question of an Imperial film quota is urged by Hubert T. Marsh, F. C. A., managing director of British and Dominions Film Corporation.

"The Canadian market," Mr. Marsh points out, "represents just over one per cent of the sales value of a British film." This, he says, is no doubt due partly to inadequate distribution arrangements, but that is not all, and particularly in this market producers should be able to claim a fair field.

"The virtual monopoly which exists nearly throughout the British Empire," said Marsh, "is almost as great a handicap as the American hold on the English market, before the introduction of the British quota, and actually weighs more heavily on those who are producing quality British films worthy to carry the message of England to the Empire. We cannot meet monopoly alone, Britain must have the beneficial help of the Imperial governments and an imperial quota is, without doubt, the most efficacious means of bringing about this desirable end.

"If English producers were assured of a fair opportunity throughout the Empire they could attempt film subjects of special Empire interest."

If the Imperial Conference tackles this situation seriously, it should insure an imperial quota sufficiently strong to preclude the possibility of English or empire films being used as second features during the dead hours of cinema attendance. I think the Imperial quota should start at 10 per cent and rise to 25 per cent, with special provisions to avoid the production of British and empire films of deliberately low quality designed merely to comply with legislation based on the principle of footage exhibition only.

SMPE Museum Opens on Coast

A collection of several thousand objects showing the evolution of the motion picture industry, has been established by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in the Los Angeles Museum, with Chairman E. Theisen of the SMPE museum committee in charge.

Among the exhibits represented are: Muybridge with his "Horse in Motion" experiments for Leland Stanford, various models of projectors including Edison, Edison Exhibition Model, Pathe, Amet, Edengraph, Motiograph, Kinema-Kolor. There is a collection of 3,000 stills, handbills, posters of the nickeldeon theatres, props used in pictures, miniatures, and photographs of prominent people.

One exhibit that represents about six years' work is a collection of 1,200 authentic specimens of film made by the pioneers. They vary from four millimeters to four inches in width. There are 200 different color attempts recorded, as well as sound, third dimension, processes, and outstanding pictures, and the first piece of film made on the celluloid supplied by George Eastman to Edison in 1889, and transparent paper used prior to the advent of celluloid.

Mrs. Alice Herbert, widow of Thomas H. Ince, has left a collection of ninety-four albums containing the complete collection of synopses of the pictures directed by Ince, with a complete set of stills.

Another interesting collection, made by David Horsley in 1920, contains hand-colored transparencies of famous stars of 1915 to 1920.

Houses in Mexico City Must Use Quota of Mexican Films

All motion picture theatres in Mexico City must in the future show at least one film of two reels each week, which has been produced in Mexico, or incur the full penalty of heavy fines provided under new legislation.

The measure, designed to protect the Mexican film industry, is seen in some quarters as placing the theatres thus restricted in a definitely precarious position, if it does not actually result in numerous closings. A leading theatre has already declared it impossible to comply with the law, due to the scarcity of Mexican-produced films.

Agfa Ansco Shows Net Loss Of $1,085,873 During 1931

Agfa Ansco Corporation reports a loss of $314,313 before interest and depreciation, for the year 1931. Net loss for the year amounted to $1,085,873, as compared with net profit of $47,380 in 1930.

Horace W. Davis, president, informed stockholders a note for $4,000,000, due April 6, had been extended to June 6, and that a plan for recapitalization is being considered.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

MIRACLE MAN

Paramount 85 minutes

THIS powerful screen attraction offers good showmen many ways to keep on the profitable side of the ledger and at the same time gives their patrons a perfect evening's entertainment by reason of a story well told, splendidly acted and intelligently directed. There may be portions where your audience may giggle a bit, though it was never intended they should, but they'll forget those portions by the time the picture is finished.

The title is one that can be tied into a hundred fine selling angles of the kind that direct attention to your theatre and reflect such attention in box office figures. Strong names (we hope for most towns) include Sylvia Sydney, Chester Morris, Robert Coogan (marvelous), Hobart Bosworth and every other member of this competent cast.

"Audience value" is as close to a hundred per cent as anything you've run this season. Why it should not prove highly satisfying to almost every theatre in the country would be beyond us to fathom, but this much we are convinced of: ballyhooed and sold as one of the really great pictures of the year, "Miracle Man" is going to pay you big dividends. Those who make the terrible mistake of letting it shift for itself will find, as many did with "street Scene," that it will not produce at the b. o.

The crook slant may make this questionable for the smaller towns, but the quality of its entertainment factors should make it highly acceptable most anywhere.

One could write reams about a picture like "Miracle Man." We recommend this one for an extra run and only insist that you back it up with a selling and advertising campaign as strong as the picture itself. With such backing we cannot concede anything but record attendance.

Once again we urge you to get behind this picture. Regardless of advance comment from the larger first runs, sell it as if you thought your patronage never heard of it before. A checkup after the picture has concluded its run will reveal that it only disappointed where the showman in the theatre lay down on the job and the picture.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN HOLLYWOOD

Universal 75 minutes

SMART guys, dump guys, know-it-alls and others, including those coming under the heading of highbrows, may turn up their noses at this sort of screen hokum, but deep down in their hearts they know durned well that "The Cohens and Kellys" are going to make money at the box office. With each succeeding picture of this series we've heard the same tripe about hokum, cheap stuff, etc., but with each succeeding one we've seen them packing them in at the theatres. If that's cheap hokum serve us a couple of extra large portions.

The title is OK. The very mention should be enough to bring them to your box office any time. Added to that title is the fact that Universal has kept the same combination in the title roles. Then you can use your imagination to give them plenty of hints about what they'll see when this inimitable team hits the film capital. If your imagination refuses to work for you then fall back on a good press book that will help your tired brain function.

Audience reaction may not be a wow. But I laughed plenty. So did the patrons at the Mayfair theatre in New York. And so will your patrons on Main Street and the side streets.

Forget about whether it's the greatest picture. It isn't, but it is a money maker because it is what most fans want these days; something that will help them to happiness without overtaxing their mental capacities and something they can forget about ten minutes after they've seen it. And so can you after you've chalked up some nice profits for your theatre.

WET PARADE

M-G-M 118 minutes

ANYTHING with a prohibition theme ought to be considered pretty good box office nowadays because of the agitation about the Volstead amendment. This one is made even more so by reason of the fine picture M-G-M turned out and the fact that it will hold the interest despite its much too much length. But at the same time you must be extremely careful how you handle the selling of this picture in your community because of the opposing factions on this national controversy. To deliberately take sides may bring down upon your head and theatre the wrath of one side or the other, or both. Be a hundred per cent neutral and you won't have to lose sleep worrying.

Title? Ought to be box office anywhere and everywhere. You can serve it on a platter so tempting surrounded with unusually good merchandising garnishes and appetizers that they won't want to miss seeing it. With the title can be lined up, for a still more savory offering, the cast, which holds some good marquee names, such as Lewis Stone, Walter Huston, Dorothy Jordan, Neil Hamilton, Robert Young and seven others, and last, but far from the least, Jimmy (Schnozzola) Durante. Believe it or not, Schnozzola actually goes dramatic towards the finish but the audience at the Rialto in New York refused to take him seriously. So you have a strong b. o. title, and strong marquee names, and all you need add to those two are some smart selling lines to attract their attention and you should be all set for some profitable business.

Audience strength is far above par. The theme is handled carefully and diplomatically and should not offend unless you make it appear that it is a preachment for or against. Let the picture speak for itself and you avoid such complications.

It should be played away from kid days and spotted for your longest run elsewhere. And what an education it gives on how cheap, poisonous bootleg booze is made They'll talk about that slant for days.

We see dough in this picture and you will, too, if you give more than passing thought to the way you are going to advertise it in your own town. Keep away from the issue as part of your campaign; rather sell the title, the stars and some showmanship strictly along neutral lines. It ought to stir up some splendid worth-of-mouth advertising. Keep the length; it runs about two hours, so if you do any kind of SRO business you must watch for your breaks to get the most out of your turnover.

THE SKY BRIDE

Paramount 78 minutes

ANOTHER air picture and one almost devoid of love interest or romance, yet it is real entertainment from beginning to end and crammed full of some highly satisfying belly-laffs of the kind that we've been told this country needs more of.

The title conveys nothing at all, or else gives one a wrong idea of what the picture is all about. But you can make the title just the means towards an end if you settle yourself in your deep "thinking" chair and plan out your campaign so as to make them want to see a picture like this.

Play around with whatever catchline you can figure out of your own head or the press book. Plug it along with Richard Arlen, Jack Oakie, Robert Coogan and whichever others you think will help the b. o. pull. Then jam it down their throats in a real circus fashion. That's what it is, anyway, an air circus consisting of three flyers who are out barnstorming for a living. Jack Oakie and Richard Arlen certainly team up as a swell box office team. Had they added to those two names a better known feminine lead it would have been lots better.

An audience picture, is my verdict. Whatever it may lack in box office strength is just about overcome by its audience strength. So you can quickly judge what you have to do to make money with it. You must provide the box office appeal in the way you sell it, which shouldn't be so hard when you stop to review the many slants available for selling it.

There's nothing we can see to make it unsuitable for the kids or Sundays, so play it where you like and see if you can't sell your customers the idea that this is a good picture. They won't register any kicks after they see it.

It rests with each individual showman to make this one either below par or above par by reason of good merchandising.

AMATEUR DADDY

Fox 71 minutes

HOKUM-HOKUM and more hokum; but this is the kind that the customers will eat plenty of and then ask for more. There is nothing like the good old fairy tale and Cinderella stuff to send the natives home happy these days. So why dish them sophisticated pictures?

The title has a wealth of fine selling angles that ought to register with sweet returns for the box office. And besides, you can tie it to Warner Baxter's role in "Daddy Long Legs." Other names include Marion Nixon and Frankie Darrow and the "Smith" kiddies; altogether they hand you a grand performance despite the creaks and squeaks of an ancient plot.

Big cities ought to find this a good audience picture; and the smaller towns and cities will find it right to their tastes. We won't attempt to go into any lengthy description of the plot because you can get that from the HERALD's informative review and Fox's merchandising campaign book, which is unusually good. Read them both through for all the information you should require to start off your selling campaign in a big way.

Everything about this one is O.K. for both kids and Sundays. That's advantage number one. You can spot it where it will do you the most good financially. Number two, you can make a lot of noise and exploit it to your heart's content because they won't take exception to your promise of a really good show. It's far from an epic, it's weak in plot and, as mentioned before, there's a large dose of hokum, but it's a business getter just the same and one that you will remember every time you look at your bank deposits for this engagement.

—CHICK LEWIS.

Air Drama

Paramount turns to the barnstorming stunt fliers, with their risk and daring at the country fairs of the nation, and their contribution to the science of aviation, for its glorification of the flier, in this film.

The story is in a measure melodramatic, in a measure thrilling and all-in-all, appeared to entertain an audience at the New York Paramount. During a few of the many air sequences the patrons seemed caught in the thrill of the stunting planes.

Richard Arlen, Tom Douglas and Harold Goodwin are three such barnstorming fliers, playing the country fairs, doing their "stuff" with a punch and vigor which moved the film at a fast pace. Jack Oakie is manager and ballyhoo man for the outfit. A sharp but friendly rivalry persists between Arlen and Douglas, and on one of their stunt flights Arlen comes too close, hits Douglas' plane and the latter is killed. Arlen is completely "licked" and disappears. Goodwin goes East and Oakie sets out to find Arlen.

When he does, Arlen is employed as a mechanic at a large airport, being watched with more than a friendly eye by Virginia Bruce, who met him accidentally on the road and procured him the job. Arlen, we understand, has lost his nerve and is afraid to go up. Oakie tries to restore the lost nerve, with little success, until he is accidentally aided by the jeering laugh of Charles Starrett, ace flier of the field. With all the pilots gone from the port, Oakie and Arlen plan a flight. Immediately before the take-off, however, Arlen suddenly discovers that the owner of the boarding house, where they are stopping, is the mother of Douglas, killed in the crash with Arlen. The nerve is gone again, until it is discovered that Robert Coogan, little nephew of Louise Closser Hale, Douglas' mother, is hanging to the airplane in which Starrett has just left. Arlen goes after them and rescues the child with a daring stunt. The expected reconciliation with Douglas' mother and Miss Bruce concludes the film.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Stephen Roberts. Screen play by Joseph L. Mankiewicz, Agnes Brand Leahy and Grover Jones. Photoplay by David Abel and Charles Marshall. Release date, April 29, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

The Wet Parade

(MGM)

Dry vs. Wet

MGM here offers both sides of the Prohibition controversy, making a bold effort to picture, dramatically, conditions as they existed before the Volsteadian era, and as they are presumed to exist today. It cannot be said that the film, an adaptation of the Upton Sinclair story, definitely takes a firm position on either side, but it rather appears to lean toward the pre-Prohibition status, almost as the lesser of two evils.

The film is unusually lengthy, running just over two hours, and is definitely divided into three parts, the first, the early days on a Southern estate; second, the same period in a Northern city, and third, the present day, with the transition from "pre" to present indicated by scenes depicting the reaction of the city's populace to the enactment of the amendment. The screen adaptation follows the Sinclair original with decided fidelity, with the single exception of the conclusion, which strikes the "happy ending" vein, hardly present in the book.

The cast, a long one, includes in the first phase the meritorious performances, it was agreed, of Lewis Stone as the Southern gentleman who drinks himself into suicide and the grave, surrounded by too congenial companions; his daughter, Dorothy Jordon, who is thus shown the evil of drink; Neil Hamilton, her brother, budding playwright, who is going the way of his father; Emma Dunn, Stone's wife. Miss Jordon, Hamilton carry over into the second phase, in the North of approximately 1916 and on to date.

Therein, Walter Huston offers what was conceded to be the finest performance of the film, that of a broken down politician, reduced to sponging on his wife and son, Clara Blandick and Robert Young, respectively, who operate a boarding house. Hamilton comes North to stay with his friend, Wallace Ford, at the house. Prohibition comes in with fanfare and trumpets, effectively pictured, Huston is reduced to buying raw alcohol, drinking it in the cellar. There his wife finds him, and in a fit of drunken anger, he beats her to death, is imprisoned for life.

Miss Jordon comes North to try to "cure" her brother, is unsuccessful, and she and Young, both ardent prohibitionists, are married. Young becomes a federal agent, traveling with Jimmy Durante, who supplies what little comedy there is in the film. Bootlegger agents threaten to put Young out of the way when he refuses their bribes. Hamilton, in a prolonged drunk, imbibes bootleg, pictured in the making, becomes blind. Miss Jordon is about to have a child when Young is "taken for a ride." Durante opportunely saves his life, is himself killed, but warns Young to "get out of the racket," implying that enforcement is impossible. There the film ends, with Young, it is intimated, thinking of wife and child, letting prohibition run its own course.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Victor Fleming. Story by Upton Sinclair. Adaptation by John L. Mahin. Photography by George Barnes. Film editor, Anne Bauchens. Musical score by Dr. William Axt. Release date, April 16, 1932. Running time, 122 minutes.

The Miracle Man

A Re-Adaptation

Paramount here offers, in a talking film version, a new picturization of the film which, in silent, was a rather vastly important contribution to the art of the motion picture in an earlier day of its development.

Tall, striking, shaggy, white-haired Hobart Bosworth enacts the role before taken by the late, famed Tyrone Power, as the Patriarch, Miracle Man who cures by faith, and who wrecks a reformation in the lives of four city crooks, played by Chester Morris, Sylvia Sidney, John Wray, Ned A. Sparks.

Working a racket, playing on "suckers" in the city, the four are doing well in the duping under the leadership of Morris. Sparks is a pickpocket, Wray a contortionist who drags himself about, twisted horribly, Miss Sidney a pickpocket and foil for Morris in the game. Boris Karloff, in whose Chinatown tavern the game is played, pays undue attention to Miss Sidney, Morris throws him down several flights of steps, and makes good a getaway—to Meadville, small, unassuming town, with great faith in its faithhealer, Bosworth. Only Irving Pichel disbelieves in God, and whose small son, Robert Coogan, wears a brace, walks on crutches.

Morris is struck with an idea, Bosworth will be popularized, by "curing" Wray, the wealthy will be drawn to him, Miss Sidney will play his grand-niece, whom Bosworth has never seen, and who will take the checks for a "chapel," which will never be built. The idea operates, until Miss Sidney falls under the spell of the old man's goodness, Wray does likewise and a reformation is worked in Sparks through the daughter of the hotel proprietor, played respectively by Florine McKinney and Frank Darien. When Wray is "cured" before a crowd, little Bobby Coogan drops his crutches, Virginia Bruce, who has come with her wealthy brother, Lloyd Hughes, to be cured, is likewise able to walk.

Morris hears that Miss Sidney has been out all night with Hughes in his yacht, does not know they were caught in a storm, and becomes insanely jealous. Seeking Hughes to kill him, he is confronted with a check and the fact that Miss Sidney had refused his offer of marriage the night before. Morris goes to the cottage on the hill by the sea, there finds the gang grouped about the dying Patriarch. The reformation is complete, with Morris promising to build the chapel, becoming reconciled to Miss Sidney.

A New York audience at the Rivoli gave close attention to the film, obviously impressed with the imposing figure of Bosworth's strong, sincere portrayal. The cast was considered to have performed its work ably, the seascape settings were found effective.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by McLeod. Adapted by Waldemar Young, from the story by Frank L. Packard and Robert H. Davis, and the play by George M. Cohan. Dialogue by Waldemar Young and Samuel Hoffenstein. Cameraman, David Abel. Release date, April 1, 1932. Running time, 87 minutes.

The Famous Ferguson Case

(First National)

Newspaper Drama

This is a controversy involving the ethics of journalism rather than a murder mystery story. The ethical wins over the scandal-raking type, at the expense of one life and a good deal of trouble. A preceding screen announcement informs the audience of the film's purpose and points out the difference between the right and the wrong of the newspaper business.

Tom Brown, young city editor in a small town, where he works with his sweetheart, Adrienne Dore, bemoans the fact that there is no news, when Purnell Pratt, wealthy banker, is murdered in his country house, with evidence pointing to his wife, Vivienne Osborne, and to Leon Waycoff, bank teller. The assorted reporters arrive from the big city, including the ethical, led by Grant Mitchell, and the other type, led by Kenneth Thomson and Leslie Fenton.

The latter group bulldozes the local prosecutor, Clarence Wilson, into trying Miss Osborne for the murder, and drags in the name of Waycoff, forcing his arrest. Brown, aided by Mitchell, sets a police search going to substantiate Miss Osborne's story of robbery and murder by burglars. With the reporters comes Joan Blondell, who heads the cast, as a "sob-sister" from the big town sheets.

Thomson makes a play for Miss Dore, and she is decidedly attracted to him, to the extent of compromising herself. She refuses to heed the warning Miss Blondell gives her, and determines to leave with Thomson. When the reporters of the scandal sheets believe they have the conviction of Miss Osborne all set, Brown's paper comes through with a late extra, indicating that the murderer has been caught in another city. Then follows news that the wife of Waycoff, played by Merriam Segar, had died in childbirth as a result of the arrest of her husband.

Track Melodrama

There is little in this independent production to bear out the title, outside of a few early sequences, but in any case the melodramatic story of the race track, and the lad who makes good with both horse and girl, was found fast-moving and entertaining after the manner of its kind.

William Collier, Jr., plays the lead as an ex-jockey who has been so far reduced as to handle dishes instead of horses, and plates instead of saddles, as a waiter. Marion Shilling is the cigarette girl at the track restaurant, and daughter of Hobart Bosworth, Kentucky gentleman whose luck reaches no such heights as his good breeding. As a result, he is more or less in a state of want. Bosworth, however, has developed a four-year-old which has more than a little promise, if few performances to its credit. The horse is a thoroughbred and Bosworth has ambitions for it.

Ralph Ince is leader of a group of gamblers who try every trick they know to prevent the horse from entering the big race. Their machinations fail in the end and the horse runs, with young Collier in the saddle. It comes home, as expected, in front, which places Collier way out in front with Miss Shilling and recoups a good deal of Bosworth's lost pride and position.

There is a plentitude of rapid moving action in the film, with a race track thrill or two which should please the action-loving picture patrons. A sprinkling of comedy does its bit in relieving the drama with a few laughs.

Produced and distributed by Monogram. Directed by Louis King. Supervised by Trem Carr. Photographed by Archie Stout. Story by Roy Fitzroy. Sound, Balsley and Phillips. Release date, April 1, Screen play and dialogue by Harvey Harris Gates. 1932. Running time, 71 minutes.

Drama

Warner Baxter again as guardian and father to a brood of youngsters, and again falling in love with the eldest of the children, after saving them from the machinations of the villainous neighbor. Marion Nixon is the eldest sister, and the most appealing youngsters are Frankie Darro, John Breslaw and Gail Kornfeld. The film is an adaptation of the Mildred Cram novel, "Scotch Valley."

The story, one of simplicity, and built, it must be said, along rather elderly lines, concerns Baxter, engineer, leaving his bridges and career to find and father the youngsters of his assistant, killed on the job. It appears that Baxter, however, found the wrong Smith family, but the right one. Miss Nixon is mothering the three, the mother is dead and the father, we learn later, a jail bird. David Landau, neighbor, is doing everything in his power to drive the group from the dilapidated ranch, which contains oil, when Baxter steps into the picture.

With the aid of a friendly lawyer, played by Clarence Wilson, he seeks legal guardianship of the children, which is opposed by Landau, inciting various members of the community to his assistance. In court the efforts of Landau and his wife, Rita LaRoy, are defeated by Wilson, and Baxter is named guardian.

The missing father, out of jail, returns and meets Landau on the way to his ranch. Landau frames a sale of the property for cash, promising to come to the ranch with the money. Arriving ahead, the jail bird reveals his identity and Miss Nixon admits she knew Baxter had the wrong family, but begs him to stay. Baxter goes for necessary papers and in his absence Landau puts in an appearance. An argument results in Landau killing the ex-convict and wounding Baxter, who had walked in on the battle.

Landau is led off to jail, Baxter is led off to bed, and Miss Nixon stands by, permanently, it is to be inferred.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by John Blystone. Based on the novel, "Scotch Valley," by Mildred Cram. Screen play by Doris Malloy and Frank Dolan. Dialogue by William Conselman. Photographed by James Wong Howe. Release date, April 10, 1932. Running time, 71 minutes.

Torchy Raises the Auntie

(Educational)

Amusing

Ray Cooke, Torchy of the Educational comedy series of that name, is amusing enough as the ingenious office boy who helps boss Edmund Breese to extract some thousands from two old maid aunts, for business reasons. The aunts, with Torchy and Dorothy Dix, the boss's daughter, go to a night club, where accidentally imbibed laughing gas produces laughable results.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Goopy Geer

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

An amusing cartoon number with the various and sundry animated animals having a high time at a night club party. The assorted furniture does its assorted jigging in a manner often done before, but the short is entertaining enough in animated fashion.—Running time, 6 minutes.

A Night in the Jungle

(Featurettes)

Enlightening

A new company, Featurettes, Inc., offers a series of shorts taken from films of a recent expedition of Commander Dyott, well known explorer. This, the first of the group, which is titled "The Magic Vault," is primarily concerned with the life and livlihood of tropical insects of various types. Enlightening pictures, and interesting.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Milady's Escapade

A New Departure

The first of a new series, produced by the Kendall-De Vally Operalogue Company, being condensed versions of various famed operas, with the chief roles sung, and the most popular arias recorded. This number, suggested by "Martha," recounts the story of the two girls of noble family who masquerade as servants at the fair, are purchased in service by two men and who escape therefrom. One of the men follows, is arrested on the King's hunting ground, and is saved by the intervention of his friend, who identifies him as an earl. The voices are splendid, the music is well recorded, the scenic effects good. The concept of the shorts is an excellent one, since it presents to the uninitiated a knowledge of the themes, melodies, manner of sundry important operas. —Running time, 21 minutes.

Abyssinia

(Columbia)

Garnished Travel

John P. Medbury garnishes his travelogue efforts with a stream of often amusing chatter. This time he is on a Nile River boat at the opening. From there he continues via safari across the desert, seeing en route natives dancing, and otherwise keeping active, war maneuvers and the military equipment thereof. A charge of Abyssinian horsemen across a wide stretch of desert is effective. The short concludes with Medbury again on the river boat.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Beautiful and Dumb

(Radio)

Liberty Short Story

One of the adaptations of Liberty Magazine short stories, with a creditable amount of suspense making it an acceptable short subject. Lew Cody enters the home of Mary Nolan through a window and she mistakes him for an invited guest. He attempts to steal a necklace but it disappears inside the wearer's dress, which complicates the situation. He makes an effort at an early morning escape, all going well until he reaches the station with Miss Nolan.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Hollywood Lights

Fair

More than a little slapstick in this comedic effort, centering about the three girls who are vigorously in search of extra work in Hollywood to make the price of train fare home. Injected is a bit of satire on the western star of the screen, who is waited upon like a king in the studio, but who faints at the sight of an untoward incident. The girls fail to get the job, but are promised a certain sum for a window jumping act. They fail to collect but get a rickety horse, upon which they ride out of the picture. Only a fair effort.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Let's Eat

(Universal)

Fair Cartoon

Oswald the Rabbit and his dog are marooned in a cabin and are starving. They catch a small fish through the ice, a seal eats the fish and the seal is caught. A bear eats the seal and follows them. They cook the bear, but a herd of deer steels the meal, and that's that. Moderately clever—a few laughs.—Running time, 7 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 178 theatres in 30 cities for the calendar week ended April 23, 1932, reached $2,118,522, a decrease of $24,392 from the preceding calendar week, ended April 16, when a total of $2,142,914 was indicated. The latter week also represented the receipts of 178 theatres in 30 cities. Seven new low individual theatre records were established during the seven-day period ended April 23, and no new high individual records. This compares with six new "lows" and no new "highs" during the previous week.

What is the RECONSTRUCTION Finance Corporation Doing?

It is acting as a great discount bank, and is loaning over $7,000,000 a day

THESE loans are made to every part of the United States through commercial banks, savings banks, trust companies, joint stock land banks, Federal intermediate credit banks, agricultural credit corporations, live stock credit corporations, and to the railroads, building and loan associations, mortgage loan companies, and insurance companies.

The applications come in through the 33 branches and are carefully inspected locally as well as in Washington. But action is rapid, and one day's operations will take in many of the above avenues of distribution in most sections of the country.

The amounts loaned vary from a few thousand dollars to several millions, and due consideration is given the necessity of each case.

WHAT ARE THE CHANGES IN THE ECONOMIC PICTURE?

THROUGH the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the enlarged powers of the Federal Reserve System, the campaign against hoarding, and the United Action for Employment, great fundamental changes have developed.

Beginning in the summer of 1931 with the financial crisis in Germany, followed by the suspension of gold payments in England, a tremor of fear went through the entire world. The shock manifested itself in America by enormous gold withdrawals on the part of foreign central banks which had been leaving their money on deposit with us for years. Bank failures increased rapidly in this country as a result of the financial excitement, which encouraged the hoarding of currency and the sale of securities.

This picture is now changed. Money is being returned to circulation. The resources of banks that failed in March are about equalled by the resources of the banks that reopened. People are becoming impatient with anything which is obstructing the return to normal trade and normal living. The dollar is able to buy more in merchandise, services and securities than it has for many years. The active dollar is the only dollar that is valuable, and it is now putting its more slothful neighbor to shame.

THE NATIONAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION

"As the most nearly self-contained nation, we have within our own boundaries the elemental factors for recovery."

A TEST OF SHOWMANSHIP!

WITH summer even closer around the corner than Mr. Hoover's prosperity, the coming warm weather is going to put many so-called showmen to the acid test. And by virtue of the same expression it is going to bring to light many a man who has never attracted much attention before.

The economies practiced up to this time by various circuits and theatre operators are nothing compared to what they will attempt to save this summer. But whether they are going to cut their nose to spite their face, is still another question.

The more optimistic men in the industry are inclined to believe that after this summer the turning point will be reached and next season will see show-business hitting its previous profitable stride. We won't join that group of optimists, neither will we become pessimists.

Having always believed that it was good business to go out after business we cannot concede any other method in show-selling. Theatres which cut down their budgets to the point where everything is "out," except the skeleton crew to run the theatre, will, in all probability, find business going still further to the dogs.

On the other hand, those showmen who will be permitted to fight to keep their houses out of the red should come through with flying colors. We don't make such a statement because we are expected to be the industry's little ray of sunshine. We've got a couple of shooting galleries of our own to worry about and therefore know, or should know, something about it.

But we have had the opportunity all through this present economic condition now prevalent to observe how some theatres and circuits have fallen into ruts and their receipts fall to almost nothing as compared to a few years ago. And we've also seen, at first hand, how other houses kept right on spending money to sell their shows and run their theatres. Of the two the latter are the more cheerful. They are doing less complaining because their business has been hurt far less than the super-efficient group which started to cut salaries and budgets until there was nothing left to advertise their shows.

Theatre owners are going to encounter two entirely different types of showmen this summer. First: the kind who know the value of the dollar and have acquired that necessary ability to watch every penny. Second: the type of showmen who never know when to stop spending money and must be watched every moment for fear that their ideas will run away with the theatre's pocketbook.

While there must be a curtailment of spending there must be no slowing down in the activities of the merchandising. Promote, promote and then promote some more. Pep up your local merchants. Stage every conceivable type of a tie-up that will bring you publicity, free advertising and some additional business, but do so sensibly and consistently with the type of theatre you are operating.

THEATRES outside of the larger key cities are well aware of the fact that on newspaper advertising must fall the biggest share of the theatre's show-selling activities. For this reason we have worked up the newspaper advertising material on the Club pages so as to present a wide and varied assortment of such material.

Direct comment from thousands of our members and readers have more than convinced us that this type of stuff is badly needed and so we continue to reproduce ads and groups of ads so that you may gather from one or more some ideas to improve your own newspaper ads and at the same time accomplish it through cutting down on the space used.

Single column ads have been gaining in favor more as an economy move than anything else, but it has proven to many showmen unfamiliar with this style of ads the great possibilities of making small space count for big results. If you have never spent much time investigating the different kinds of ads you can run on a single column then you ought to watch the Club pages carefully and note how others are doing so. It is bound to solve your budget problem and still keep your theatre and attractions before your community.

CONTAINED in this issue are many items from our members about the Short Features. Although they were submitted for use in last week's issue lack of space made it necessary to hold them over for this week.

Additional items on this same subject are still arriving and will be presented in subsequent issues. What difference does it make when you read about it so long as the matter is always timely? Too much cannot be said about the tremendous value of the Short Feature. Keep yourself well posted on how others are treating this important matter.

TWO STUNTS HELPED FREDERICK PUT OVER RECENT ATTRACTIONS

Two stunts recently used by C. Frederick, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., helped him sell "Hell Divers" and "Rue Morgue."

For the former he effected the loan of a good sized airship which he planted on top of the marquee, with long banner carrying title only from top of upright sign to airship. A loud speaker concealed on roof was operated from time to time with airplane effect record.

On the latter picture he distributed in advance 200 small vials of smelling salts, bearing label and instructions to bring the vial along when seeing "Murders in Rue Morgue."

Both of the above stunts were put over at very small cost, entire outlay on the latter amounting to only $2, and were decidedly effective in publicizing the pictures.

WE ARE REMINDED BY BARNEY GURNETTE OF SERVICE FOR DOCTORS

We are reminded by Barney Gurnette, manager of the California Theatre, Santa Rosa, of the fact that theatres can gain a certain amount of publicity and also render a service by circularizing all members of the medical profession with a "call service" card.

These cards are generally worded as follows: "Dr. Blank—Dear Sir: It is our pleasure to call your attention to our Doctor's Call Service—If you are expecting an emergency call just give the usher your name and we will be glad to call you—Or if you should forget to do this we will gladly flash your name on the screen." (Signed) The management. At the foot of the card we have at hand appears, "Just another expression of California Service." This card was enclosed in a white envelope of good paper stock and printed in old English style.

WILSON'S CAMPAIGN ON SHANGHAI PICTURE EFFECTIVE AT LOW COST

An effective and economical campaign on "Shanghai Express" was put over a short time ago by A. Eugene Wilson, manager of the Casino Theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Recalling that most everybody is fond of candy, he tied up with the Life Savers concern for a thousand samples of the confection and inserted it in small, attractive envelopes bearing copy on the picture. Naturally the candy eater was forced to read the message before reaching for his or her sweet.

He also made up a very attractive 7 x 3 easel with the background covered with front page headlines on the Sino-Jap fracas. An insert on the picture was placed in the center of the tear sheets and surrounded with stills. Streamer heads were strung around the stills and insert, tacked down with large headed thumb tacks to give a bullet-like effect. The number of people attracted to the easel bore testimony to its efficiency as an attention-getter.

Newsreels were full of shots of the Shanghai battle at the time he played this picture and it was a comparatively easy matter to place his advance trailer right at the back of the newsreel, thus considerably adding to the effect of the trailer.

He produced a "Chinese effect" for the front of the house by hanging small pennants in the form of burgees on the top of the marquee, both in front and on sides. A large banner on the picture was stretched in the center of the marquee.

This is the first word we've had from Round Tabler Wilson in some little time, but he's been hard at work putting over his shows and we're forced to admit that it takes much time and work these days to make a creditable showing. However, he's back on the active list again and, as he states, will try to repay the rest of the gang for their tips by sending in some of his own.

Plainfield Battle Continues

Arthur Major, "manager for the day" at the Paramount, Oxford and Strand Theatres, Plainfield, N. J., was arrested last Sunday for violation of the state vice and immorality act in connection with holding Sunday shows.

Major is the eleventh manager to run contrary to the town authorities and will be held with the other ten men for the May grand jury. As the matter stands now it appears to be a nip and tuck affair between advocates of the Jersey Blue Laws and the theatre circuit. As fast as one man is arrested another is brought in to bear the brunt of attack the following Sunday, a second offense assuming serious proportions.

FRONT CREATED SENSATION, SAYS LOU HART

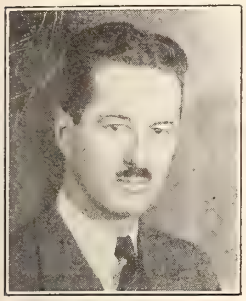
It's a question whether the above reproduction will do justice to what is described by Lou S. Hart, publicity expert at the Academy of Music, New York City, as a front that literally made passers-by "gasp for breath" (the words are Lou's). Note the part of the display carrying the title word "Menace," which appears on the bodies of dragons at either side of entrance. The tails of the dragons extended down to the sidewalk and were decorated with stills from the picture. Lou tells us it made pedestrians cross the street.

PROPER SELECTION OF SHORTS HIGHLY IMPORTANT—BRYAN

Motion picture theatres are catering to cosmopolitan types and tastes. Some come to the theatre to be transported away from their humdrum daily surroundings to foreign lands; others attend in search of laughs to ease their own aches and worries, while still more are seeking diversified entertainment and relaxation.



Bunny Bryan

The proper selection of short subjects will insure the maximum amount of patron requirements being included in the program, as the short subject field with its newsreels, scenics, cartoons, and comedies is variety in itself.

Let's talk specific cases concerning the value of the short subject. I know positively that certain scenic and travelogue shorts sold hundreds of tickets to the Staten Island Paramount. Ask Sedge Coppock. He will tell you about the requests made for this type entertainment by his patrons.

I could cite a dozen instances of the real draw and entertainment value of shorts like the Laurel and Hardys, the Charley Chases and Burns and Allens. They SELL TICKETS and bolster up what oftentimes would be a weak show otherwise.

Newsreels give the high spots of world events in a concise, brief and entertaining manner.

And what about the Mickey Mouses and the animateds? They have their followers by the millions.

Movie Memories with their turning back the pages of yesterday were popular even when used as a sponsored short. And so we might continue almost indefinitely.

Double features make short subjects with the exception of a newsreel and a now and then short almost impossible, but our patrons are asking for short subjects just the same. Time after time I have a regular patron say, "Why don't you give us some of those short pictures?"

It seems to me that any disregarding of the value of short subjects is one cause of empty seats in theatres where their inclusion in the program is possible. We are catering to diversified tastes and short subjects make the greatest diversification and diversion possible.

ATTRACTIVE PAPER NOW AVAILABLE ON MANY SHORT REELS

There may have been an excuse several years ago for exhibitors to squawk about scarcity and quality of paper issued by some of the short subject exchanges, but according to sample one-sheets we have at hand there's no occasion for kicks these days.

These in mind right at this writing were issued by Vitaphone and covered a variety of subjects put out by that company. To just state that the posters are attractive is not doing them full justice and there can be no doubt that this type of sheet will materially aid in the sale of your shorts if used to advantage.

DICK WRIGHT USED MANY SALES ANGLES ON WASHINGTON FILM

Exploitation angle on "Washington, the Man and Capitol" were not overlooked by Dick Wright, manager of the Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

Schools and libraries were canvassed and permission obtained for the posting of one sheets in the High School and in the main and branch public libraries throughout the city. 10,000 bookmarks were distributed in the latter one week prior to the opening of this short.

A tie-up was also made with one of the local newspapers to offer a theatre party to the grade school or class submitting the best colored set of George Washington photographs illustrating the important events of his career. The Women's Federation Club of Akron and Daughters of the American Revolution, in addition to posting appropriate announcements on club room bulletin boards, also made mention of picture and play dates at the regular monthly meeting prior to opening. The Akron Dramatic Club likewise cooperated.

Last summer when Wright was located at the RKO Rivoli Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, he played a series of the Johnny Farrell Golf Lessons and tied up with the golf departments of two leading stores for the distribution of heralds with each sale. The stores also loaned clubs and wearing apparel for a display arranged on the theatre's mezzanine. Another stunt was put over through a tie-up made with a local golf club manufacturer, who donated five complete sets of clubs to be given away for best estimates on how many golf balls were contained in a glass bowl placed on a stand in the mezzanine.

Many exhibitors will undoubtedly play some picture dealing with the career of Washington during celebration of the Bi-Centennial, and Wright's tips should prove interesting. Also, the golf season is here again and there will probably be another crop of golf shorts to exploit. Both offer unusual opportunities for showmen to plug angles other than the week in and out feature picture and, consequently, a chance to bring in additional revenue.

ALONG BROADWAY!

Even the Winter Garden believes in the value of advertising the shorts on its program, both in newspaper copy and on the huge sign board across the front. Note by the accompanying photo that Husing's "Sport Slants," "Sea Legs" and "Merrie Melodies" are all given a generous slice of the lights.

WE OFTEN WONDER

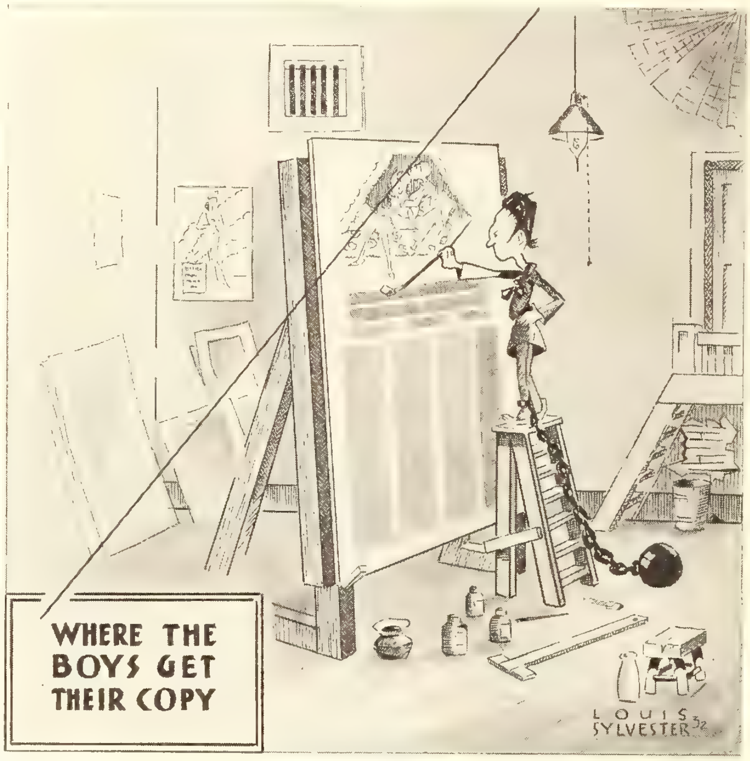
By LOUIS SYLVESTER



WHERE THE BOYS GET THEIR COPY
LOUIS SYLVESTER '32

—And Lou Sylvester is not the only one who is wondering about the same thing. There must be some secret source for some of the stuff we've seen lately.

EVANS DAVIS STILL CARRYING ON AT THE STRAND, DOLGEVILLE

We haven't heard from Evans B. Davis, manager of the Strand Theatre, Dolgeville, N. Y., for some time and while unable at this writing to record any of his recent exploitation activities we can at least report that he's still up and doing and show you a small photo of his theatre front and lobby.

The Strand is housed in one of the largest buildings in the town, with club rooms, a ballroom and American Legion headquarters in the upper stories. Readers may judge for themselves as to the advantage of having these sort of neighbors.

The other portion of the photo shows a view of the lobby looking toward the box office and entrance to the theatre proper. The stairway leads to the club rooms and ballroom, making it impossible for passersby to miss any theatre advertising in the lobby.

The house also has an exceptionally large stage, which is 45 feet deep by 60 feet wide, with a proscenium opening of about 42 feet.

Davis has been making some inquiries concerning the use of fan photos as giveaways and we can report that several samples along this line have found their way into this office on various occasions. Some theatre men have purchased the photos outright at a small cost and others have tied up with local merchants for an ad on the back to cover the entire cost. He would be glad to know how other Club members have panned out through use of them.

THAT WAS SOME BIG NEWSPAPER CAMPAIGN P. MAGAZZU PROMOTED

Although slightly belated as to up-to-date picture exploitation suggestions, it would be gross negligence on our part not to mention that corking newspaper advertising campaign put over on "The Champ" by P. A. Magazzu, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Hazleton, Pa.

What a collection of ads, regular and co-ops, we came across when we went through a half-dozen or more issues of a local newspaper. If the town didn't know that "Champ" was coming to town, and that every one should by all means see the picture, then it wasn't Magazzu's fault. All in all, there must have been several thousand inches ot free space, to saying nothing of regular advertising. Radio, furniture and other merchants tied up with the idea of offering "champ articles for sale. The campaign continued for over a week, according to dates on the newspapers.

We really owe P. A. an apology for not shooting this along at an earlier date, but several campaigns and special issues have literally swamped this department with material for the past several weeks and we're just catching up with some of the back work. Beyond a doubt Magazzu covered himself with glory as a promoter of special co-op ads on the above-mentioned occasion and it simply goes to show what kind of results may be obtained when a hustling showman puts his shoulder to the wheel. More power to this Round Tabler and we hope that he'll come through with more material.

JAKE ROSENTHAL IS RIGHT UP FRONT AS TO TREND OF TIMES

We might have known that Jake Rosenthal ("The Great Jake Rosenthal") well known showman and manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, would be keeping right up with the trend of the times, at least, as far as financial gags are concerned.

Not that Jake is in the habit of giving out rubber checks, but unless our eyes deceive us he issued some of these bouncers as a gag to publicize his theatre. The account was with the "Yukant Trust Company" for the amount of $10,000 and the check's number was 7-11, dated April 1. On the stub it was stated that "We Don't Like Rubber Checks—They Bounce Back So—But You'll Like Shows At—Jake Rosenthal's Iowa Theatre—and You'll Bounce Back for More."

From rubber checks Jake turned to stock certificates and issued a lot of those that entitled "Mr. Movie Fan to 1,000 laughs in the Capitol Stock of the Mirth Corporation known as "Fireman, Save My Child." The certificate also carried other pertinent copy about theatre and picture.

EACH ATTRACTION CALLS FOR NEW MERCHANDISING METHODS!

This Showman Attracted Added Business to the Box Office by Tackling Each Picture Along Entirely New Slants!

Duplication of Selling Slants a Sure Sign That Your Mind Has Gone Stale; There Are Plenty of Ideas Available!

WE'VE had plenty of opportunities of watching Morris Rosenthal run theatres and merchandise his attractions; perhaps that is why we consider him amply qualified to discuss the advisability of variety in showmanship.

In this short article, Rosenthal endeavors to point out some of the methods he uses to keep the community's attention directed towards the theatre at all times. His paramount thought is that if you shut down on your exploitation or advertising you give the patrons a chance to forget the theatre.

Recent visits to a dozen or more houses located within a radius of some seventy-five miles of New York City revealed that where show-selling has been cut to the bone the business has been hardest hit. But where advertising, exploitation or other business getting ideas are still the vogue the theatres are managing to keep out of the red.

We cannot emphasize too strongly our own feelings regarding any curtailment of merchandising at a time when we should be fighting for every ticket we can sell. To lie down now may mean one of the worse summers your theatre has ever had.

"CHICK"

I WONDER how many managers think they have done a great day's work by going out and getting a couple of window tie-ups and perhaps a display ad on the classified page for 50 passes. And doing this sort of exploitation work week after week and feeling satisfied.

There are so many angles that are used by only a few managers in creating good will that it seems strange that the men in the smaller cities do not take full advantage of them. Can a manager depend on a few exploitation ideas to sell his shows week in and week out? Will that sort of exploitation convince the public that you have a great show? In recent weeks we have played two attractions that have been flops in the general run of theatres and in both instances have put them over to good receipts by adapting the type of advertising these types of pictures call for.

An Average City!

Perhaps a brief resume of the activities in this city may better illustrate the points and drive home a lesson. Auburn is no different than many other cities of its size. When coming to this town two months ago I was faced with the fact that we had only one newspaper in town and they maintained a rigid rule of no theatre publicity. They have what I believe to be the most conservative newspaper in the country. The family owning the paper are wealthy and don't need the business. So much so that they turned down a co-operative page of advertising brought in to them unless the merchants paid full theatre rates of $1.25 per inch. That was my first big problem.

In addition to that the theatre had just discontinued playing vaudeville and the local theatre-goers were as sore as a double portion of boils over the loss of flesh in this town. With this theatre getting 15 cents more admission price than its competitors, it was a problem how to win back the good will of the public in the shortest space of time.

Merchants Association!

We have a local merchants association called the State Street Merchants (on which street the theatre is situated) and one of the first moves was to get in with the organization and win them over. I attended their meetings, canvassed them personally, gave them suggestions and pointers, had a street banner made for them to string across the street (at cost) and now we are all working together (40 merchants) to put across a Mammoth Treasure Chest Hunt for next month with every merchant participating and winding up with a mammoth sale, similar to $1 day sales. That organization is now a booster for the Jefferson Theatre.

I have attended dinners of various organizations and have talked to some of them. My last subject was Advertising and I wrapped most of the thoughts around the idea that the newspaper gave the most value for money than any other medium. As the managing editor was present at this talk I planted the germ of some future good will.

The local prison is an institution and whenever occasion permits I bring in a show to the ladies at the prison. This is always good for a story and also for good will in this town.

Local Co-operation!

On "Fireman, Save My Child," I secured the good will of the firemen and local citizens by getting the fire boys to sponsor special matinees for the orphans and institutions. I secured the approval of the City Manager in the use of their apparatus upon strict promise of not commercializing, and I lived up to every promise with the result that I can feel free to return for a favor and feel assured that I will be able to get it.

For "The Man Who Played God," we tied up every worthwhile organization in the city including Churches, Schools, Parent Teachers Association, Nurses, Women's Clubs, Service Clubs, Ministerial Association and contacted the editors and publishers of the newspaper with the result that we secured a strong editorial on this picture and a personal letter from the publisher. I laid the success of the engagement of this picture directly into the laps of these organizations by telling them straight from the shoulder that the success of the future picture of this type and a clean type of pictures depends upon whether these local organizations supported this type of picture. The reaction to this appeal was wonderful. They went out of their way to inform their friends about the showing and despite Lent, and this being a strong Catholic town, the engagement was a success. I received letters from ministers, and local prominent people complimenting me for bringing this picture to Auburn and thanking me for calling it to their attention. And here is a picture that has not been clicking in other spots. The editor of the paper informed every member of his organization about the attraction and even went so far as to let his private secretary off for a few hours to see it.

We followed the same appeal with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and it worked.

Local Follies, Big!

Last week I staged a local Follies with a dancing school and more than doubled the usual receipts. With some 60 people in the cast and all their relatives and friends talking about it, it was certain to create good will and attendance. The entire show staged at a very nominal expense and all our effects were made cheaply but gave us a great flash. We have a night club that is unusual in any part of the country inasmuch as the building is all glass and dancing is under moonlight. I have booked that band in for next week, duplicating their setting and augmenting it with a presentation. As the band has a large local following we cannot help but do big business. Then there is the usual style shows to be staged and for summer a combination style show and bathing show.

I have arranged with a tent and awning manufacturer to build me a beautiful stage setting and in return I give him a card on the stage. To build this setting would cost me around $75.00. Of course I use the local radio broadcasting station, but do it intelligently. I write a special column for it similar to the big city columnist's style but keep the material around pictures and stars. It's something different.

Theatre's Show Window!

We change the dress of our lobby every two weeks and notice the favorable comments of the patrons. We don't bore our patrons with running 10 minutes of trailers on the screen. We give them a fast moving show and build up every unit and blend it so that it increases with entertainment value right up to the feature.

For "Tarzan, The Ape Man," I have secured every empty store window downtown and huge banners the full size of the windows are being put to make the biggest flash this city has ever seen. It's a store window tie up to be sure, but it's different and anything that is different is sure to create talk in small towns and cities where they have nothing else to do but talk.

I feel with this background laid down that business the next few months is bound to be good. Old Man Depression has no place in our lobby or theatre. And don't get the impression that because business is good we have no competition. Syracuse is only 25 miles away with a Loew and Keith house both playing vaudeville and the glitter and glare of their modern shops draw countless numbers of our citizens. But we keep hammering away that they will see the pictures here at less money and we watch our bookings to see that we don't play too late after Syracuse.

Morris Rosenthal, until he joined the Skouras Circuit, was one of the "ace" managers for Publix handling de luxe houses in Duluth, Minn., and Wilkes Barre, Pa. Previous to the Publix assignment he handled important spots for the Poli and Century Circuits in the east.

SYRACUSE FRONT!

HOTEL CONTINENTAL
PEGGY SHANNON

Here's how the manager of the RKO Keith's Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., dressed the front of his house for "Hotel Continental." In spite of the narrow entrance it appears that he made every inch of space count. The original photo did not carry this manager's name so we are at loss to give him credit for an attractive piece of work.

O'BRIEN PROMOTED SPECIAL NEWSPAPER IN HONOR OF EVENT

When George D. O'Brien, manager of the Hub Theatre, Rochelle, Ill., promoted his "Big Week of Shows" for Alger Theatres, he got out a special four-page newspaper size section of theatre display ads and merchant advertising.

The first page was entirely given over to theatre and attractions and was headed in large type "Alger's Own Ballyhoo—for the Hub theatre—Celebrating Greater Rochelle Week." Below in a box headed "A Week of Deluxe Attractions at Old Nickelodeon Prices" was a cut of an old-time buggy, accompanied by another showing grandma in the leg-o-mutton sleeve dress. To an extent, copy imitated the trend in some of the new weekly cartoon magazines which have been receiving considerable attention of late. The inside spread and back page was filled with local merchant advertising.

MORRIS WAGED A HEAVY CAMPAIGN IN SANDUSKY; HE'S NOW IN CHARLOTTE

Shortly before leaving for Charlotte, N. C., to take over management of another house, Walter Morris put over a campaign on "Hatchet Man" for the State Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio.

Robinson's name was played up heavily and his former hits capitalized upon. Gruesome angles were not mentioned at all and both copy and art work were fashioned to capture feminine interest. A definite Oriental slant was used to tease curiosity and romance was implied by placing girls' heads in all display.

Exploitation included distribution of 3,000 doorknob hangers house to house; 1,000 envelopes containing teaser copy distributed by grocery stores; invitation to Sandusky's lone Chinese inhabitant played up by newspaper; cards on all street cars; front page flash in 2,500 Movie News; one-sheet flash in leading soda-fountain; 50 window cards (15 in neighboring towns); shadow box display two weeks in advance; routine accessories; regular art display of two one-sheet shadow boxes and transom shadow box; six-foot cutout one week in advance; a talking trailer over public address, and regular local display ads in newspapers.

Now that Morris is located in Charlotte it won't be long before we'll be submitting a sample of what he's doing for show-business down in that town. Till then we'll sign off and wish him lots of luck with his new assignment.

Maurice Barr Promoted

Maurice F. Barr, connected with Publix-Saenger theatre interests for many years and lately acting as district manager with headquarters in New Orleans, has been promoted to the post of director of the Southwest division of Paramount-Publix. Mr. Barr will make his headquarters at Dallas. Robert Blair, manager of the Saenger Theatre, New Orleans, succeeds to the district job.

McCURDY PUT OVER A NOVEL STREET CAR STUNT IN CLEVELAND

Right on the job to tie in with any kind of a new wrinkle in town, J. L. McCurdy, manager of the RKO Hippodrome Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, recently put over a stunt in connection with a new Cohen and Kelly picture that had the curious-minded citizenry on their toes.

PRIVATE HOME COHENS & KELLYS

Note in the accompanying photos that one of the city's big street cars is bannered with copy stating that the Cohens and Kellys are aboard the car for a six-day non-stop ride en route to the RKO Theatre. Also note the bay window end of the car and the interior shot showing a fenced-off portion in which three men are playing cards. The end is furnished with a table. Two "breakdown" cots, dresser. Draw curtains separate the end compartment from the main, for use when the occupants want to hit the hay.

This stunt was made possible because of a $1.25 ticket recently issued by the street car company which entitles holders to ride as many times as they wish to over the period of one week. McCurdy did some fast thinking and this stunt was the result. In addition to a vast amount of publicity on the street car, a local paper picked up the stunt for a three-column story and photo of the compartment's interior.

FRANK HILL TIED IN WITH SINO-JAP TILT FOR SHANGHAI FILM

It isn't often that wars are made to order for theatre men, but the fact remains that there was plenty going on over in Shanghai, China, when Frank B. Hill, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., was getting set for the showing of "Shanghai Express."

With news from the Sino-Japanese fronts featured on front pages of all newspapers at that time, Hill issued an "extra" which screamed in red imprint that "Shanghai Express" was "hurtling Toward Rebels"; that "Shanghai Lily Was in Danger," etc. The imprint occupied five-column space in the upper portion of the page, flanked on either side by the lead stories of the day.

As Hill states, the idea is an old one, but it was good enough to bring people out on the streets when his "boys" began crying "Shanghai Extra." When a gag produces that result it doesn't make much difference how old it is. Righto?

Our cash customers are not confining their foolish questions to feature pictures these days. Apparently they are getting "short-conscious." Incidentally, don't overlook the costume which the manager is wearing. Must be a de luxe dump.

LAMM GIVES SHORT REELS GOOD BREAK IN HIS PROGRAMS

Cleveland newspapers as a whole have adopted a hard boiled attitude regarding mention of short subjects on the amusement page and for that reason Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre, there, sees that worthy short features receive a break in his programs.

The small reproduction of one page of the inside spread of one of his programs will give you an idea of what we're shooting at. In this case he was plugging "Washington, The Man and The Capitol," to the extent of devoting one-half the space for the Sunday-Monday-Tuesday show to the Vitaphone subject. Other programs at hand bear testimony that he never loses an opportunity to give mention to a "name" short, as in the case of Crosby's "I Surrender Dear," which he featured on the front page.

Added Attraction

"Washington, the Man and the Capitol"

An unusual Vitaphone picture, in which the leading events in the life of GEORGE WASHINGTON are vividly depicted for the first time on the talking screen. Live the scenes at Valley Forge, the Spirit of '76, the inauguration of our First President and other great events and take a trip to WASHINGTON'S the CAPITOL in this remarkable picture.

200th ANNIVERSARY

You May Come as Late as 9 P. M. and Our 1st Run Sunday Feature

The newspapers came through at least on one occasion, proving that even hardboiled editors can be moved at times. This instance called attention to the fact that the Variety and Lake Theatres, both Warner houses, have first call on the many interesting Vitaphone short subjects and particularly mentioned the Newman travalogues, which, when completed, would take the beholder all around the world.

On another occasion, when getting out a herald, he featured "Adventures in Africa" for the Kiddies. Over one-half of the herald was devoted to the serial and an attached ticket stated that it and 10c. would admit two kiddies to the Saturday show if presented before 2 P. M. (Incidentally, we judge that a small streamer ad at the foot of the page offering Free Ice Cream at a nearby candy shop, paid for distribution of the herald.

Club members have often heard about Lamm's work through this department and we're glad to include him among the contributors of ideas for short subject exploitation. We will look forward to hearing more from him in the future.

EXAMINE ALL REELS FOR SELLING ANGLES, SAYS MICKEY GROSS

Short subjects are worth many an extra dollar to the box office if properly sold and exploited, believes Mickey Gross, manager of the Fox-State Theatre, Racine, Wis., hence he never fails to carefully examine all reels for some angle that can be tied in with local patronage.

At least once each week Gross finds that he is able to contact either the sports editor or city editor on a story pertaining to some shot in the newsreel. He also combs through his newsreels and other shorts and invariably finds an opportunity to send out cards calling attention to some particular subject. These mailing cards are sent to people directly interested, as for instance, football subjects to football players; German items to German societies, etc., and so on down the line. We wonder how many of our members follow out Gross' method of hunting through shorts for exploitation angles. Doubtless there are many, but for those who may have neglected this slant, his suggestion will serve as a reminder that there's many an opportunity to gain publicity and consequent revenue through a little application in this direction.

LARSCHEN ALWAYS SAVES SPOT IN AD FOR SHORT SUBJECT

Sidney Larschen, renowned Biblicist and manager of the Meserole Theatre, Greenpoint, Brooklyn, N. Y., always saves a spot in his newspaper display ads for a box on his shorts, space varying according to worth of name, but finds that a city-wide policy of showing double features leaves little room on his programs for the playing up of short features.

Larschen's case is representative in the Metropolitan district, where practically every neighborhood theatre, excepting the larger key houses, has adopted a policy of showing two features for the price of one. Good or bad, the policy exists and it's only too true that time will not allow much more than a newsreel or cartoon to be run off in most instances. In Larschen's ads we note, however, that a Laurel & Hardy comedy received conspicuous mention and likewise, in another ad, Bing Crosby's "I Surrender Dear" was played up in a good sized box.

HILL BELIEVES IN LISTING FULL SHOW IN NEWSPAPER ADS

A number of newspaper ads recently inserted by Frank B. Hill, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., bear out that showman's policy of listing the entire program on opening day.

The ad reproduced here will show you the break given Andy Clyde in "The Cannon Ball" and also the listing of a George Dewey Washington number, a "Talkartoon" and the Liberty Movietone News. At least a third of the space in this large ad was devoted to shorts.

The balance of Hill's ads, which, by the way, are always outstanding as to layout and copy, all contain reference to the shorts that surround his programs and the accompanying one was merely singled out as representative of his work and as an indication that he does not overlook the value of shorts as added attractions. Other examples of Hill's newspaper ads will be presented in the near future.

FAWNS PUT THROUGH A TIE-UP USED FOR ALL CIRCUIT HOUSES

While serving as relief manager at the Stanley Theatre, Newark, N. J., James Fawns made a successful circuit tie-up with the Norwich Pharmacal Company for a cartoon display on "Fireman, Save My Child," which included a collection of old fire relics from the local Exemp Firemen's Association. The Pyrene Mfg. Co. also furnished a complete display of product and an animated fire scene. The deal was put through for 47 theatres.

We are not quite sure where Fawns is at this writing, but we hope he will keep in touch with the Club as he makes his rounds. He is in a position to gather much interesting information and we want to hear from him regularly. That tie-up he put over for the circuit was a corker.

SMITH INVITED ALL THE EMMAS IN TOWN TO SEE A FREE SHOW

All the "Emmas" in town were invited to be guests at a showing of the picture by that name by W. Clyde Smith, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Jackson, Tenn. This notice was published several days in advance and the management played host at the first showing.

Smith also had a man dressed like "Emma" appears in the picture who went about carrying a suitcase and the old-time corset. The suitcase carried appropriate copy relating to picture, theatre and playdates. The corset gag was tied-in with a Lost and Found ad which stated that an antique but intimate article of feminine wearing apparel had been lost and which, if returned to theatre, would be exchanged for a guest ticket to the picture. Many excellent readers were obtained in the paper.

NATIONAL MUSIC WEEK

(May 7th to 14th)

This annual event offers tremendous possibilities for live-wire showmen who are quick to grasp at every opportunity to capitalize on anything to stimulate interest in the theatre and its box office.

Tie-ups with various musical organizations, choral unions, community singing groups, local orchestra, school orchestra, etc., etc. Give over one night a week to furthering the local interest in music, but avoid anything in the popular music field.

Appropriate short subjects should be booked and advertised. All special stage events used in connection with this special week should also be well publicized. You'll find that it will go great with most of the folks in the town and especially the real music lovers.

HILGENDORF IS STILL BUILDING PATRONAGE FOR MILWAUKEE HOUSE

A glance through a recent communication from Ted Hilgendorf, manager of the Ritz Theatre, North Milwaukee, Wis., discloses that this enterprising Round Tabler has been following his usual active occupation of building patronage in his neighborhood.

The THRILL picture of the year!

Hilgendorf is another advocate of the mimeographed program and we are showing you herewith an example of the kind of work he's turning out. This is a reproduction of a flyer he used on "Frankenstein" and the drawings were traced from the press sheets. He makes the stencils himself and has one of the ushers run off the copies. Note that a small box calls attention to the "two-for-one" gag; this box, however, was only inserted on the bills taken into the country, as an inducement to rural patronage.

His programs are likewise attractive as to general appearance and the ads on the back cover more than offset overhead. One of the pages carried an advertisement for "Pantry Nite," which is another kind of a "Nite" and quite appropriate in these days of want. It actually means "food for your pantry," as the ad states, and copy goes on to explain that every lady attending the Ritz on that Saturday and succeeding Saturdays will receive free some article of food. The first offering was a half-pound package of a locally known brand of butter. Coffee, sugar, cookies, bread, cheese and even beer were listed as future articles to be given away.

Hilgendorf has also organized a Sunday afternoon singing class for the kiddies, which is proving an excellent drawing card. Incidentally, Ted plays the organ. To make the gag more interesting, the audience (80 per cent kids) selects leaders for the following Sunday, one for the boys and one for the girls. This is done by letting not more than 10 of each sex on the stage, to be subsequently "clapped down," as in a spelling-bee. The chosen leaders are admitted free on the day they lead.

The song chosen for the boys to sing is sung only by the leader on the first chorus, the rest of the boys joining in on the second chorus. The girls' number is given similar treatment. As to leaders, usually the smallest boy and girl on the stage are selected. Ted states that if they have any voice at all they generally "slay 'em," but that there are others whose voice will not carry beyond the first row. A small membership card is handed out to all members.

It's gratifying to hear from this Club member again and to know that he's so busily and happily engaged with the task of building patronage for his house. Next time you hear from him he'll have some news about how the "pantry nite" materialized, and maybe a few more practical tips on showbusiness. Till then, we'll sign off on North Milwaukee.

ADMIRAL WAUGH FIRES A BROADSIDE!

Big guns and armor plate were used to carry out the idea of a smashing two-feature show by Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn. The "guns" extended well across the sidewalk, under the marquee, and the color scheme was battleship gray. Another Chick Bullock master lobby for the "old Colonel from Dixie." A recent report has it that the Warner will become the ace picture house of the city on a weekly change basis.

San Francisco Changes

Included among changes recently made in the Fox-West Coast ranks in the San Francisco zone are: Eddie Sullivan, from the Hippodrome, Sacramento, to the California, San Jose; C. J. Hayward, transferred to the Mission, San Jose; R. Lucas, as assistant manager at the Warfield, San Francisco, and the appointment of Frank Vesley as manager of the California, Oak Park.

IF THEY'RE WORTH SEEING THEY SHOULD BE SOLD, SAYS BAIR

HERE truly is a timely topic, right in the midst of price cutting and double feature debates throughout the entire scheme of the picture business. Quite naturally the subject might arise WHEN IS A SHORT SUBJECT?

An ill sounding question, but properly diagnosed and analyzed a logical one. We have all seen short subjects that were genuine FEATURES and worth billing on any man's program ahead of a lot of features. My idea of WHEN IS A SHORT SUBJECT is when that short subject is simply a FILLER, a filler can also be termed that bulky packing stuff used in packing fragile articles for shipment. Just film—just filler—that's all.

Back of the production of every short subject we might say, there has been painstaking effort—an effort on the part of the producer to make something worth seeing. NOW the thought occurs that if these short FEATURES are worth seeing and worth showing they are certainly WORTH ADVERTISING.

Notice the high class restaurant menu—that man of the eating emporium tells you what kind of pie, lamb chops, duck, and cranberries he has. He has short subjects and he tells you about it. That's part of the show business, all an art of selling and service.

The makers of quality short subjects have been harping, and justly so, to ADVERTISE worth while SHORT FEATURES. It's good business and a service to the patron. Failure to tell about these supplementary subjects is really not unlikened to . . . the ILL bird . . . ?

Every comedy nowadays is by no means a knockout, all newsreels don't have scoops but they're worth while adjuncts to any bill when properly selected and properly spotted on a program.

If the car has a chromium bumpers—tell 'em. If it's just a short—don't.

Them's my sentiments.

E. E. Bair,
East Liverpool, Ohio.

JOHN HAMRICK SOLD ON IDEA OF PLAYING UP THE ENTIRE SHOW

Unlike many exhibitors in his section of the Northwest, John Hamrick, operator of several theatres in Seattle, Wash., and in Oregon cities, is devoting considerable space in newspaper ads to short subjects, instead of sticking to the usual plan of giving all credit to the feature. It is said his reaction to this plan has resulted in a policy to advertise the whole show, every unit being given display space.

New Development

Comic situations, based upon news of the day, are being developed by the Paramount Newsreel staff.

When the picture shooting crew arrives on the scene—perhaps it is a sale of unclaimed articles at the Post office, etc.—comedy types will be picked out from passersby and asked if they would like to try a hand at acting. Gag lines, etc., will be introduced. Some of the stuff will be terrible; others will be "wows."

PALACE

Did B. B. Hamilton of the Palace, Norwich, Conn., give his serial a grand send-off? Look at this circus flyer which was handed out all over town and in several of the surrounding communities, too.

What a whale of a bill this gave the adults as well as the kiddies. "Tarzan" plus a Rin-Tin-Tin serial. We'd like to get a glimpse of "B. B.'s" b. o. receipts for those three days.

The moral of this story (if a moral is at all needed), is, if it's worth playing it's worth shouting about. All those in favor will kindly use this same idea for their next short or serial plug.

There seems to be little doubt that the management of this Loew house values the drawing power of their short subject surrounding programs. Here is the way they list their attractions in their weekly house organ, which is circulated throughout the entire community.

SILVERWATCH PLUGS SHORTS IN SPITE OF TWO-PICTURE POLICY

The double feature bugaboo over in New England limits Max Silverwatch, manager of the Strand Theatre, Amesbury, Mass., in his efforts to make short subjects produce revenue, but despite this handicap he manages to plug them whenever a worthwhile occasion develops.

At one time, when Amateur Nights were being used in place of an extra feature, a considerable number of shorts were used. Heralds were issued and the night was billed as "Three Big Features," consisting of the feature, "Try-out" Night and a listing of the shorts. Newspaper ads played up the occasion in the same way.

He also secured good results on "Washington, The Man and Capitol," by sending a mimeographed letter to all school teachers in his town. This was a costless effort and the means of getting his message to the home via the kiddies.

Max is one of our very busy Club members and is constantly on the job of selling shows, as many of his fellow have had occasion to note through these columns. We'll give you further dope on his show-selling methods in forthcoming issues.

But before we sign off on Amesbury, let us pass along a little gag that Max thinks could be used to advantage on any kind of a picture featuring animals. Not long ago, when playing "East of Borneo," he reported to the newspaper that two alligators he had ordered for exploitation purposes had been lost enroute. The gag was good for a good sized story in the news section, to effect that until the reptiles were found, a stuffed alligation would be substituted by the theatre management.

New York Changes!

Recent transfers on the Loew New York Circuit include Fred Owen, formerly assistant to Geo. Kann, Loew's Willard, to management of Loew's Lexington; E. H. Crawford, former manager of the Lexington, to Loew's 175th Street; W. Ackerman, former manager of the 175th Street, to the Orpheum; A. Robertson, from the Orpheum to the Valencia at Jamaica, and D. Raymond, of the Valencia, to the city of Rochester, N. Y.

Skouras Coast Setup

The new Skouras-Fox-West Coast set up will be headed by Charles Skouras, in charge of the circuit, with four district managers working out of Los Angeles. They are: Edward Smith, Bob Smith, George Bowser and Hal Neides. Arch Bowles has been placed in charge of the San Francisco division and will have as his district men, Ellis Arkusk, Dick Spiers, and Nick Turner. Robert Frint and Bill Stege stay in the Seattle and Montana divisions.

Globe Trotter Campaign

Large display advertisements in approximately 32 key city newspapers and radio station tie-ups are part of a nation-wide campaign launched by Hearst-Metrotone Newsreel to build increased prestige for "The Globe Trotter," news personality of the Hearst-Metro combination. With the theatre as the third link this short feature becomes a powerful factor in the newsreel world.

THEY'RE LITTLE BUT OH, MY! SAYS RICHARD MOSS; GET BEHIND 'EM

THE general cry in Wall Street has been to "sell short"—in our business it should be "SELL SHORTS." Millions are invested yearly in the making of one and two reelers; well known players receive high salaries; and short producers spend plenty on advertising. But, what does the average exhibitor do? At the last moment he realizes that he needs an extra 10 minutes in his program; calls the exchange and tells them to fill in the extra time. Is there any showmanship to that? Is there any sense in ignoring the medium that made famous Chaplin, Lloyd, Swanson, Mack Sennett, Hal Roach, Laurel and Hardy, Mickey Mouse and many others too numerous to mention. How did these people become famous? They become well-known because the public was interested in their work; and demanded them. Is there any logic in relegating such an important factor in the business to the "also" class?

Book Carefully!

How many managers spend much time in the booking of their shorts? Not a great percentage, I am sure. Here is the method I use—and I think it would be helpful to every manager. I read all the reviews of the shorts—file them away—and use them for reference when booking. I always try to either get a personality or some degree of novelty. This gives me an opportunity to play that angle up in my advertising and is always good for a story in the papers. I believe some time ago in an article I wrote for the Club's pages, I pointed out how I had pulled out of the "red" one week by showing a short featuring Donald Novis (who was a favorite in my town, Pasadena). I also told of making a big week with a mediocre feature by exploiting a Laurel and Hardy comedy and calling it Hilarity Week. At another time, I was pulled out of a hole by showing and exploiting a subject dealing with life in the South Pole. In fact, every time I find myself with a weak feature, I scour the town trying to find a short subject with some drawing power, and they have invariably helped me.

Boosts Them Along!

At the present time I am utilizing the Paramount Screen Souvenirs to good advantage. They have a wealth of material for publicity and we always manage to get a newspaper story on them. Recently, I secured a Paramount Pictorial with clips of several old talking pictures and some famous stars. Medbury's Travelogues are used to good advantage because of the radio and newspaper popularity of Medbury. Recently, I ran one of them and had Medbury down for a personal appearance—an attraction that over-shadowed the feature. I could go on like this for pages, but I think I have said enough to show my enthusiam for the short subject.

The showman who neglects telling the public about any item on his program, cannot be classified as a showman. Tell your patrons about everything in your show—and don't forget the shorts. They're little—but, OH MY!

SELLING 'EM ALL!

J. Fred Miller, manager of the State Theatre in Oakland, California, certainly made every subject on his program count for more than just time killers. Lacking, in his opinion, a strong enough feature attraction to stand on its own legs, he augmented his show with several really outstanding short features and then backed up his booking with a strong newspaper and exploitation campaign.

Result, as we learn, one of the best engagements at the box office that his house enjoyed in many a month. Proving beyond all argument that such tactics are both showmanlike and sensible. And the way he worked out his newspaper ads proves that what we said above was one hundred per cent on the level.

Look over this ad of Miller's. See how he flanked his feature between the Bing Crosby and Jack Dempsey subjects. The general effect is that of a genuine big-time show and one that ought to command the attention of every reader of the newspaper interested in good entertainment.

Try giving your short features a break and it's a hundred to one that the short features will return your investment plus a good slice of profits besides. If it didn't pay, other showmen would not be wasting time and effort, plus newspaper space, to sell them so strong.

BIG TIE-UP MADE BY McKENNA WITH CREMO WHEN SELLING CROSBY

Excellent results were secured through a very effective tie-up made with the Cremo Cigar Company by George McKenna, manager of the New Lafayette Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., in connection with exploitation of Bing Crosby's "I Surrender, Dear."

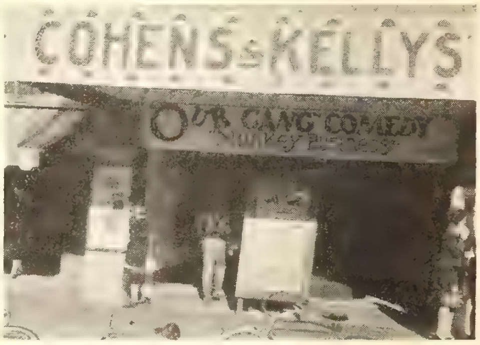
The deal included advertising banners on 10 Cremo trucks; 1,000 half-sheets in cigar store windows throughout the city; 280 special full window displays placed by Cremo Company, tying up Crosby; the mailing of 3,000 slips advertising Crosby's appearance to company customers and stating that the "Cremo Cigar Singer" would be at the Lafayette Theatre in the above mentioned picture.

Considerable resistance would have been encountered with this tie-up had not McKenna already broken some of it down through the give-away of a popular priced car some time ago. The car was won by a Buffalo man on the Cremo hour and McKenna allowed the company to place the car in the theatre lobby. Similar tie-ups can undoubtedly be worked with Cremo branches in other cities, hence we're passing this tip along.

CREAMER A PIONEER IN LISTING ENTIRE PROGRAM IN HIS AD

Just to prove his faith in the value of shorts, John Creamer, manager of the Fox-Palace Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa, calls our attention to the fact that seven years ago he featured certain shorts over regular pictures when he was publicity man for the Burford Theatre, Arkansas City, Kas., and samples of his old ads at hand are proof of his claim.

Some of his larger ads of several years ago also gave a break to the shorts, as, for instance, a four column display ad that featured a "5 Unit Show." The feature was allotted about one-third of the space as Unit No. 1 and the balance devoted to comedy and newsreel units. Another four column ad shows generous space given a box on several short features. Also, note the photo which shows that on one occasion he gave an "Our Gang" comedy a banner almost as large as the one used on the feature.

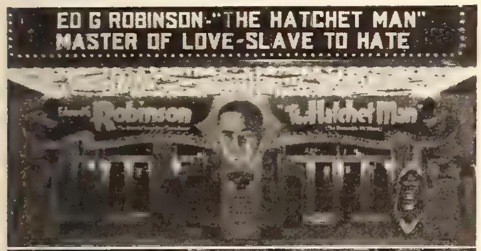


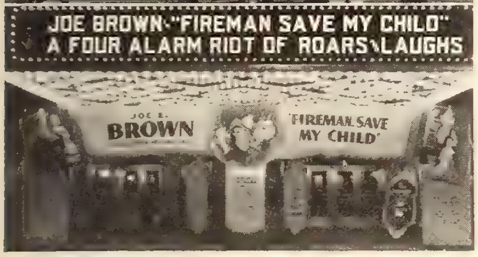
What was good several years ago appears to be still a means used by many showmen these days to instill a new note in advertising, for we've noted within the past year that "unit shows" were used to good advantage. Thanks to Creamer for reminding his brother members of this gag. We'll tell you more about his work in a future issue.

BEN KATZ AND GANG TURNING OUT GOOD WORK IN MILWAUKEE

It's been several weeks since we've been able to get a line on the activities of Ben R. Katz, advertising manager of the Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., but some data at hand is ample proof that this enterprising showman and his capable associates have been up and doing.

Among the trio of photographs on this page note the display on "Hatchet Man," in which the color motif was carried out in lacquer black, orange and yellow, with the dragons on each side of Robinson's head done in bright Oriental colors, green predominating. This was executed by the men in the Warner sign shop under direction of Henry Herr and Sherburn Youngbeck and it made a great flash.





JOE BROWN-"FIREMAN SAVE MY CHILD"
A FOUR ALARM RIOT OF ROARS\LAUGHS
JOE E. BROWN
FIREMAN SAVE MY CHILD

On the Joe E. Brown front the centre panel was animated by having the horse lick the face of the Brown caricature. The color scheme on this one was fiery red and bright yellow. In the other portion of the photo note that the old hose wagon used as a ballyhoo for "Fireman" is one of the oldtimers, promoted from the local department after considerable string-pulling. It made a good novelty for reason that the public hadn't seen one for years.

Another little gag that happened along about the same time was made possible through a tie-up made with a department store featuring the "Max Factor Make-Up." The cards were made-up so as to classify complexion, eyes, hair and skin, and were furnished the theatre for distribution among women patrons. The store also had a woman demonstrator in the theatre who lectured on the art of make-up and gave free facials to women, with whom the idea went over in great style.

The Warner also held a special screening on "Man Who Played God" and "Washington, Man and Capitol" and took occasion to thank those attending the performance by means of a special card of thanks that called attention to the high calibre of the attractions and further stated that arrangements for special parties at reduced rates could be made with Earle H. Payne, manager of the theatre.

Getting back to "Hatchet Man," we also not that the Sino-Japanese situation was taken advantage of by getting out a little folder entitled "Official Bulletin—The Key to the Chinese Situation." Copy inside related to the picture.

It's gratifying to hear from Katz again and now that the Spring season is in full swing we hope that we'll be able to present further news of his activities. Warners have a live group of showmen out in Milwaukee and their work is always interesting to their brother showmen in this Club.

FRESH AIR NEEDED!

It won't be long before fresh air and good ventilation will be of paramount (no advt.) importance to your theatre and patrons. But what are you doing about it now?

No sense waiting until the last minute to find that attention and repairs are needed. Once your patrons are compelled to sit through a show in a stuffy, smelly and uncomfortable atmosphere, blooey goes your chances of ever convincing them that you can actually make your house cool and comfortable.

Then again, noise and squeaky grunts interfere with sound reproduction and make the customers rather sore. Ditto for house using wall fans and forgetting to keep them extremely quiet even if they must be run at slow speed just to agitate the air.

Then again, lubrication, next to the electric energy itself, is the most important requisite for operating any kind of equipment. Better look to this slant yourself and DON'T leave it to others. Burned out bearings are not only expensive but doggoned aggravating, too.

We think it would be a swell idea to try a couple of tests and be certain that everything is according to Hoyle.

No F. & M. at Fox, Seattle

Transportation difficulties were given as reason for discontinuation of Fanchon-Marco shows at the Fox Theatre, Spokane, Wash., and Butte, Mont., by the Skouras Brothers, Charlie and Spyros, during a recent visit paid Spokane by those two executives and a party of film officials. Hereafter, the presentations will be routed directly from Vancouver to Denver, via Portland, Ore.

Included in the party besides the Brothers Skouras and Robert Frost, Division manager, was Floyd Maxwell, local Fox manager; Oscar Oldknow, executive vice president; Ned Alperson, of New York, buyer; J. J. Sullivan, Los Angeles buyer, and Frank Newman and A. Hansen, of the Los Angeles office.

The above ad will show you how E. E. Bair, manager of the State Theatre, East Liverpool, Ohio, goes about making an appeal to feminine patrons of his theatre. Not much copy, to be sure, but right to the point, don't you think?

It's just another example of Bair's distinctive brand of advertising. We've presented others on many occasions and hope to have the opportunity of showing more of them to his fellow Club members.

DISPLAYS TO CATCH THE PATRONS' EYE!

Here are just a few of the series of beautiful and impressive displays being built for the Warner Theatres in Atlantic City, N. J., by Jack Greiner, artist and ad man.

Under the guidance and inspiration of Walter Boyd, manager of the Warner Theatre, Greiner has tried to make each new display better than the preceding one and from the group of photos which we were able to look at we are rather inclined to believe that he succeeded.

We shall publish, at frequent intervals, other photos of his fine displays and we feel sure that other artists and display men will find them mighty valuable and possessing dozens of new slants by which they can materially improve their own work.

Incidentally, the Poster art series will be resumed within another week or two, so if you have contributed several posters you will soon see them incorporated into this popular series.

NOW'S THE TIME TO SIGN UP!!

HARRY H. OLSEN has the job of assisting the enterprising Johnnie Scanlon, manager of the Warner Theatre, Torrington, Conn., and we are glad to add his name to the many assistants who are on their way toward becoming full fledged members of this ever-increasing organization. With Scanlon as a tutor Olsen certainly ought to be able to find out about all there is to know about show business, so we guess it will not be long before he, too, will be stepping out for himself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE J. BRADY is the assistant manager of the Grand Theatre, Massillon, Ohio, a house formerly in charge of Howard Mercer, according to our records. We cannot decipher the present manager's name on Brady's application for membership but we can tell you his first name is Alden. Maybe he'll let us know next time. Incidentally, we would be glad to know what's become of Mercer. All of which reminds us that we're sort of getting off the subject of Brady. However, we want him to know that we'll be watching his rise to the post of managing a house of his own.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. EDWIN MILSTEIN is in charge of the Central Theatre, Newark, N. J., and at this writing he, too, becomes a new member of this organization. He has been with Warner Brothers houses for three years and got his start as an usher at the Mosque Theatre in Newark. Promotions came along and here he is, on his own at the Central. That's a live bunch of showmen over his way and we can promise his fellow managers that it will not be long before Milstein will be shooting along some good show tips.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE DAVIS' name was unintentionally left out of the Randforce new member page that appeared in this department two weeks ago but we want you all to know that he is one of Frisch & Rinzler's supervisors and that he makes his headquarters at the Stadium Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. He is another one of the many seasoned showmen among the Randforce staff and we are certainly glad to include his name on the Club roster. We also hope he will overlook the fact that his application became misplaced when the Randforce page was made-up.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALBERT F. BADEAU is the assistant manager of the RKO Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I., a house managed by Round Tabler Jack Hobby. We are mighty glad to introduce Badeau to the many showmen in this Club and feel sure that with all this representation at the Victory this department will not be short on news from that point. As you all know Hobby is a seasoned showman and with his able coaching it surely won't be long before Badeau will become entitled to a manager's certificate.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. H. CRAWFORD manages the Gem Theatre over in Washington, D. C., and a hearty greeting is extended this new member from the Capitol City. Step up and meet the rest of the gang, Crawford, and now that you're one of us do your best to contribute your share of suggestions for boosting trade at the box office. Many a live idea has come from showmen located in your town and we're going to count upon you to hold up that reputation. Let's hear about that last stunt you put over to the tune of S.R.O.

SHERIDAN ASHTON hails from Martinsburg, West Va., where he has the job of assisting Charles Oswald with the management of the Apollo Theatre. He has been at that house for several years and was promoted from the post of doorman to his present position. Welcome to the Round Table Club, Ashton, and let us hope that both you and Oswald will keep your brother showmen informed on what's going on in show business down your way. Just as soon as you get your feet on that next rung of the ladder let us know and we'll see that you get your certificate.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NED GERBER is the director of advertising and publicity for the 79th Street Theatre, Second Avenue, New York City, and we're mighty glad to acknowledge his application for Round Table membership. He has had a wealth of experience as a showman, having acted as a director of advertising and publicity for Fox and as a divisional director of publicity and exploitation for Columbia. Prior to taking his present post he made a trip through the middle West and South as publicity and exploitation representative for Universal. He should have many valuable suggestions to offer through the medium of this department and we sincerely hope he will take advantage of the opportunity.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARL HUGHES is the manager of the Vondera Theatre, Crawfordsville, Ind., and his name is proposed for membership in the Club by Arthur B. Clark, of the Vonderschmitt Amusement Enterprises, Bloomington, Ind. Clark tells us that Hughes has only been in show business for a few months but that he's a real go-getter and certainly making up for lost time. Thanks to Clark for sponsoring this new member and we want him to know that we're mighty glad to add his name to the roster. We'll depend upon him to keep this department informed on what's going on at the Vondera.

FRANK SCHELLINGER is located down in Galveston, Texas, where he assists L. O. Daniel with the management of the Queen Theatre. Schellinger is 24 years old and has been with Publix for the past six years, which would indicate that he was just out of high school when he entered this game. His last post was as manager of the Tremont Theatre, also in Galveston, and when that house was closed he was transferred to the Queen to help Daniel. We are glad to have him with us and hope he'll soon regain a house for himself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HOMER R. HISEY not only manages the State Theatre in Nashville, Tenn., but also owns the house, which, to our way of thinking, is a real manager's job these days. They cannot fire this Round Tabler, neither can "they" rout him out of bed some night and transfer him to another point on the map. Okay, Hisey, we're glad to have you with us and hope that you'll do your share to keep this department filled with interesting tips on show business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

REID L. CROW hails from Little Rock, Ark., where he house-manages the Royal Theatre for the Arkansas Amusement Corp., and he's another new Round Table member in line for introduction to his fellow showmen. Welcome to the gang, Crow, and let's hope that you'll find time to keep in touch with Club headquarters. The rest of the boys want to know how you are putting over your shows and you can tell them through the medium of this department. Shoot along some ideas.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. WILCOX is another showman from Washington, D. C. to join this Club and he manages the Jesse Theatre. We are glad to add his name to the organization roster and hope that he will also do his share to uphold the Club tradition. All he will have to do to keep his fellow members in a club-by state of mind is to send along from time to time some good tip that stood him in good stead at the box office. We'll pass it along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MIKE WESHNER is now holding forth as skipper of the U. S. Theatre, Hoboken, N. J. The last time we had a line on Mike we believe he was manager of a house up in Nyack, N. Y., just a short time prior to receipt of his application for membership in this outfit. This department hasn't had any news concerning the U. S. since Manager Caruso was in charge of that house, but now that Weshner is there, it's a safe bet that he'll keep the old ball rolling along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NATALICIO BRUSKI is now a representative of the Round Table Club in the city of Buenos Aires, Republic of Argentina, S. A., where he manages the Coliseo Theatre. It will certainly be interesting to hear how pictures are sold down in Argentina and now that Bruski is a member of this organization we trust that he will supply this department with the desired information. We will await his next communication and hope that it will contain some new and novel slants on showbusiness.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK X. McSHANE is the manager of the Strand Theatre, Uphams Corner, in the city of Dorchester, Mass., and he's still another Publix man to join the ever-growing ranks of this organization of showmen. We are mighty glad to extend the Club welcome to this new Round Tabler and sincerely hope he'll follow the good example set by his many brother managers on the circuit and keep Club headquarters duly informed on what's going on at his theatre.

Feminine Critics Ones Who Rave

Feminine critics of New York newspapers are rather more apt to indulge in extravagant phraseology than are their masculine colleagues, it is indicated in a compilation of critical extracts prepared by Warner from reviews of the current James Cagney film, "The Crowd Roars."

The comparison in tone of opinion is indicated in the following:

Feminine

"A Knockout"—Bland Johaneson—The Mirror.
"Ace Thriller"—Julia Shawell—The Graphic.
"Snatches Breath"—Rose Pelswick—Evening Journal.
"Thrilled and thrilled!"—Irene Thirer—Daily News.

Warner To Continue To Make Trailers, Announcement Says

Warner has announced emphatically that under no conditions will the company give up the trailer business, being handled by Vitaphone under the sales managership of Norman Moray.

Major Albert Warner, in making the announcement, said that often outside sources produced trailers which did not conform to the advertising keynote planned by the producer of the picture.

Lodge in New York to Close Di Angelis Philadelphia Deal

Dave Lodge arrived in New York the other day to negotiate a deal with Phil DiAngelis, of the DiAngelis Outdoor Advertising Company, whereby Lodge will represent the DiAngelis concern throughout the Philadelphia territory, beginning immediately and effective with a Pennsylvania campaign to be staged by Metro in connection with "Grand Hotel."

Fairbanks Returning After Filming South Sea Picture

Douglas Fairbanks left Tahiti this week to return to Hollywood, following the completion of his latest film, "Robinson Crusoe of the South Seas." He is expected to arrive in California on May 6.

His production crew left the islands with him. Joseph M. Schenck's yacht, Invader, has arrived on the Coast with the greater part of the finished film.

Reissue African Series

Warner Brothers is reissuing the Vitaphone "Adventures in Africa" series of shorts. This follows the re-release of the Bobby Jones "How I Play Golf" short series. There are 12 two-reel numbers in the first group.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

We have found another remedy for neuritis, but it's only temporary.

If you've got neuritis you should go and see "Freaks," and while you are viewing the picture it will take your mind off your neuritis and everything else on earth. "Freaks" is a collection of sideshow monstrosities surrounded by more squalor and filth than "Sparrows," if that could be possible. The only things we can think of that they left out, to make the picture complete, is a jazz orchestra and a radio crooner.

To hear the Republican orators tell it, the Democrats are a bunch of hungry politicians who are trying to get their noses in the public feed-trough and haven't sense enough to run the Government. To hear the Democratic orators tell it, the Republicans are responsible for the depression and are running the whole country into a mudhole without any chains on. And to hear us tell it, they are both right.

Among other things in his column, Arthur Brisbane has this to say:

"The public learns from Mr. Whitney, head of New York's stock exchange, that the poor innocent bears have nothing to do with our troubles. The public itself is responsible. It should not have gambled wildly. That recalls the saloon keeper's remark pointing to the fallen drunkard, 'He drank it, I didn't, why blame me?'

"Mr. Whitney says also that Mr. Coolidge is to blame for talking so much about prosperity, thus building up the great bull market of 1929. And Mr. Hoover is to blame for promising, in his campaign, that poverty was about to be abolished forever. President Hoover said nothing of the kind. He said that poverty could be abolished. So it could, if the nation had brains enough to distribute its plenty for all, and if men that rob the people of their savings with worthless stock issues were jailed for life instead of being merely questioned."

Boy, we guess that's shooting both barrels at 'em. Somehow we have come to believe that, on most important subjects, Art knows his parsnips.

President Hoover tells us we should not hoard our money in our socks and tin cans, but should put it into the banks so the banks could put it into circulation. That's good advice, no doubt, but it comes too late to be of service to this community, as they had already put it into the banks and the banks had put it into circulation, and it is still in circulation. A lot of it is circulating in foreign countries in lieu of their worthless bonds which were recommended and sold to country banks by eastern bankers who are said to have made from four to five million dollars in commissions. One of our busted banks held $59,000 of these securities, said to be worth from five cents on the dollar to nothing minus.

It seems that when Wall Street gets loaded up with securities that have become mouldy and moth-eaten and have worm holes in 'em, they unload 'em on Mr. and Mrs. John Sucker and family, and the Sucker family is a very prolific family; they even outnumber the Smith and Olson families by several million. When we were in Hollywood two years ago last fall during that Wall Street debacle, it seemed that Mr. and Mrs. John Sucker and their whole family had moved out there, but we later learned that some of the Sucker boys stayed here and put the money of this community into circulation, and now Mr. and Mrs. Public propose to circulate their money themselves, and we'd do the same thing if we had any to circulate. There comes that neuritis again.

Two Days Later

As we read the decision of the Federal court on zoning and protection as reported in the Balaban and Katz case it seems to specify particularly that it applies to Chicago territory, but it being a federal decision, it would seem that it would apply as well to Grindstone, South Dakota, Pipestone, Minnesota, and Tombstone, Arizona, not to mention Whetstone, Vermont, since these points are still a part of the federal government.

Our knowledge of law is so limited that it is negligible, but this decision upholds a pet theory we have had for some considerable time, and our convictions on the matter of "justice" are pronounced as anybody's. And, since the circuit operators have operated on the theory of "the survival of the fittest," if we were operating a theatre we'd put a horseshoe in our glove and we'd say to the circuit operator, "Now Bill, you just step right out here in the ring and we'll see who is the 'fittest.' "

The court also lays down another proposition that we heartily agree with, that is that the exhibitor who holds over a film for an additional day's run without the knowledge and consent of the distributor is in violation of the copyright law. This decision didn't go quite far enough to suit us. It should have held that the film salesman who promises the exhibitor that he can hold the film for an extra day's run is in collusion with the exhibitor and therefore equally liable, for they are both crooked.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small." And now that they have started to grind, let's hope that justice will lead the procession out of the slough of constant litigation and onto the higher plane of "equality before the law."

Maybe it's our neuritis that makes us feel that way, for we've still got it and got it bad, and only for our desire to keep this motion picture industry on its feet and its head above water is this colyum written, but there is still hope for us, our wife has found a new remedy: she's going to try Sapolio on us next.

When neuritis comes and grabs your arm
And they stuff you with all kinds of dope,
You will get so you won't give a darn
Whether they give you castor oil or soap.
 But we'd sooner take Sapolio
 Than hear crooners on the radio.

The HERALD Man.

THE JUNIOR SHOW

by

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE testimony from theatre men who are operating Junior Shows is the best evidence of their practicability or inadequacy. The letters we have received provide a guide to other forward looking theatre managers who are interested in the development of this method of audience building.

The New Piedmont theatre, Oakland, California, sends the following announcement to the parents and children of the Piedmont District:

"We, the management of the New Piedmont theatre, take this opportunity of welcoming the Kiddies of this community into our S.O.S. safety club. We ask the parents to sign the enrollment coupon at the bottom of this page so that their kiddies will be entitled to all the privileges of this club.

"Here are some Safety Rules—Courtesy of Grant D. Miller.

"1. Look before you step off the curb to cross the street.

"2. Never cross the street in the middle of the block.

"3. When you get to the middle of the street stand still if you see a machine coming in the opposite direction.

"4. Never run across the street, always walk.

"5. Remove your skates before crossing the street.

"6. Do not play any games in the street.

"7. Do not beg rides.

"8. Remember—it's better to be a minute late than not to arrive there at all.

"Parents: Have the children memorize the above rules.

"Do you know!! That the New Piedmont Theatre is the only theatre in Oakland that gives an exclusive children's show every Saturday afternoon? Especially picked subjects such as Mickey Mouse, Comedies, Adventure Pictures, Outdoor Scenics, etc., make up the program for an afternoon of pleasant entertainment. These matinees have the endorsement of the P.T.A. Mothers' and Dads' Clubs."

The coupon for membership in the S.O.S. Safety Club, carries the child's name, address, age, date of birth, school and principal's name.

Fox Rialto and Fox Wilma, Missoula, Mont.

The Parent-Teachers Association, with Mrs. P. W. Barthel as active chairman, has won a lively cooperation from E. K. Taylor, manager of the two leading theatres in Missoula. Using "School and Screen" and the endorsed lists of pictures as a basis for selection, a new activity has sprung into being in Missoula, which has won the interest of the local organized club groups as well as of the press. The leading local paper, commenting on the venture, said:

"Two hundred and twenty-two children attended the 'Western' matinee at the Fox-Wilma theatre Saturday morning. Most of them used the coupons clipped from The Missoulian and Sentinel, which were used as part of the admission price. A number of adults also attended the show. The feature picture, 'The Montana Kid,' starring Bill Cody and Andy Shufford, was a decided hit.

"E. K. Taylor, manager of the theatre, plans to schedule similar pictures of the old West on Saturday mornings, for the benefit of children and adults who prefer them."

Eau Claire, Wisconsin

The Wisconsin Federation of Women's Clubs, interested in the development of the "School and Screen" project of Motion Picture Herald, reports the following practical results:

"The following article, carried in our leading local paper, will interest you and prove to you how very helpful we are finding 'School and Screen':

" 'A contest designed to give high school pupils the same discrimination in motion pictures they receive in art, music and literature, is being sponsored by the motion picture committees of the Eau Claire Women's Club, with Mrs. A. L. Murray, tenth district president, as chairman, in cooperation with the English department of which Miss Ruth Waters is head.

" 'Mimeographed sheets prepared from the study guides issued by Mrs. Thomas Winter, former General Federation president, now motion picture critic at Hollywood, and 'School and Screen,' edited by Mrs. Rita McGoldrick, are distributed to pupils to use as directions for criticisms.

" 'When a picture is approved by the sponsors, announcement is made that pupils may write on that picture if they wish. Little time is given in school for discussion of the pictures and no one is required to write, as the project is in addition to the regular work with no extra credit given.

" 'As an inducement to the pupils to go to see the approved pictures and to write criticisms of them, Mr. Dick Bradley and Mr. Len Fried, managers of the State and Wisconsin theatres, offer each month two free admissions for the best criticism, and one admission for the second best.

" 'The pictures chosen for February were 'The Champ,' 'Emma,' and 'Hell Divers,' and for March, 'The Man I Killed' and 'The Man Who Played God'.

" 'Members of the sponsoring committee are: Mrs. J. D. R. Steven, Mrs. Ludwig Iverson, Mrs. James Wickham, Mrs. H. L. Culver, Mrs. W. E. Steinberg, Mrs. H. L. Fish, Mrs. Arthur Linton, Mrs. J. B. Fleming, Miss Laura Olsen and Mrs. A. L. Murray'."

Wometco Theatres, Miami

The Wometco Theatres of Miami are the Capitol, Biltmore, Tower, Ritz, Lyric, Biscayne Beach theatre and the Grand. The manager of the Biltmore, Mr. Sonny Shepherd, writes us his slant on the juvenile problem:

"We have a theatre of six hundred seats. And we have an enrollment of three thousand children in the neighborhood club, which we call the Mickey Mouse Club, and which I believe is one of the best organized in the country as far as results, talent and attendance are concerned. We have a regular radio program for children and a complete entertainment group, including a twelve piece orchestra.

"Personally, we have avoided the club contacts, thinking that the children get enough lecturing and that sort of thing in school. The clubs have not approached us in any way and we believe that is because they have found our plan constructive and helpful and above criticism. We are interested, however, in your whole 'School and Screen' project and want to know more of this work and your opinion of our attitude in this matter. Send us your suggestions for we have lots to learn."

Wilmette (Ill.) Organizes

Through the departments of "School and Screen" and "Junior Show" the Better Films group of Wilmette has organized and are receiving strong cooperation by the two local theatre managers and the leading paper of the city, the editor of which has volunteered to give publicity to all constructive criticism on current pictures. Mr. S. C. Meyers of the Teatro del Lago and Mr. Peter Kalleres of the Wilmette theatre and the Grand, are planning for Saturday matinees and following carefully the suggestions made by the club groups. "School and Screen" is used as the basis of selection for pictures for children and for discussion at club meetings. It is publicized through churches, schools and local publications, stimulating interest among the parents for the pictures that children should see.

Mrs. Marion Halliwell, motion picture chairman of the Stolp-Laurel PTA, and the Women's Club of Wilmette, sends the following newspaper announcement carried in a prominent position in The Wilmette Life:

"The Better Films group of Wilmette, organized about two months ago, held its third meeting Monday night at the home of Mrs. Robert G. Halliwell, 1133 Lake avenue. Represensatives and officers of various local organizations were present, as were the representatives of two motion picture theatres, each of whom gave an interesting talk.

" 'The purpose of the organization', the group announces, 'is to fill the gap between those attending movies and those who run the theatres.' The Better Films group is to meet the last Monday of every month at Mrs. Halliwell's home to discuss pictures for the coming month and to give them publicity through various channels.

"Those at the meeting last Monday evening were Mrs. George H. Beaudin, moving picture chairman of the Tenth district, Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Ray Warren, child and home department chairman, Women's Club of Wilmette; Mrs. John J. Mills, representing the Women's Catholic Club of Wilmette; Mrs. William Edmonds, president of the Northridge Women's Club; Mrs. Carl Renneckar, representing the St. Joseph's Mothers Club and the Peter J. Huerter Post, American Legion; Mrs. D. W. Ormsbee, representing the Girl Scouts; Benjamin N. Cox, the Boy Scouts; Mrs. John J. Tracy, president of the St. Francis PTA; Mrs. William J. Fitz-Patrick, motion picture chairman, St. Francis PTA; Mrs. Frank J. Dowd, representing the Howard PTA and the Wilmette Post 46, American Legion; Mrs. Lowell Snorf, Stolp PTA; Mrs. B. N. Cox, Stolp PAO, Motion picture committee; Mrs. Halliwell, representing the Stolp PTA and the motion picture committee of the Child and Home department of the Women's Club of Wilmette."

De Luxe Screen Service exchanges will in the future handle national distribution of Meyer-Reiger trailers, to be produced by De Luxe Trailers, Inc. The deal was closed this week

MUSIC AND TALENT

Broadcasters and Composers Confer

An amicable agreement has been reached between the National Association of Broadcasters and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to negotiate the question of fees to be paid by the broadcasters for copyright American music. The agreement was reached after the society announced that broadcasters would have to increase annual payments of approximately $1,000,000 by $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 a year, starting June 1.

Negotiations will be started immediately between committees of the two organizations, with an effort to be made toward reaching an agreement before September 1. The society, accordingly, has suspended its demands until that date. The decision to negotiate followed notification by the broadcasters that the industry is entirely unable to meet such total payments as had been suggested. The impasse expected on June 1 has been at least temporarily postponed.

Foreign Broadcasts Up 175% Over Last Year, NBC Reports

The National Broadcasting Company reports that broadcasts to the American people from foreign countries increased 175 per cent during the first quarter of 1932 over the similar period in 1931. During January, February and March this year 74 broadcasts reached this country from 19 cities in 14 foreign nations.

Speakers were featured for the most part, but native music was heard from Berlin, Stockholm, Caracas, Munich, Honolulu, among other cities. Numerous internationally important personages were among the speakers. Additional foreign programs are planned for the near future.

Kodak Radio Hour Resumes Broadcasting on April 29

The Kodak Week-end radio hour, a pioneer program, returns to the air on April 29, over a Columbia Broadcasting System network. It will be continued on subsequent Friday evenings, with the orchestra under the direction of Nathanial Shilkret.

A series of guest stars will appear from week to week on the program, which will also feature a male quartet, and Thelma Kessler, soprano. A separate broadcast will be offered on the same evenings to West Coast listeners.

F. & M. Drops Two Cities

Spokane, Washington and Butte, Montana, have been eliminated from the route list of the Fanchon and Marco stage units, according to Robert Frost, Fox West Coast division manager. The units will go from Seattle to Vancouver, B. C., and then to Denver before their cross country trip.

G. HOWARD SCOTT

This is a good likeness of the popular radio organist who broadcasts from the municipal auditorium in the city of Asbury Park, N. J. "Scottie," as he is affectionately known to his many friends, has been the featured attraction at the Convention Hall and over the city's radio station, WCAP, for the past two years. His broadcasts and his fine music have been responsible in attracting many thousands of people to this ideal and beautiful resort.

Three Radio Headliners At New York Paramount

Three of radio's greatest headline attractions, supposed to comprise the costliest array of talent ever on one stage, are being featured in the new Boris Petroff production currently playing the New York Paramount. The performers are Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians, hailed as radio's finest band; George N. Burns and Gracie Allen, who have become an overnight sensation with their inimitable comedy patter, and the Mills Brothers, who startled the country a few months ago with their voice imitations of an entire orchestra.

Madame Matzenauer Sings At the New York Roxy

Margaret Matzenauer, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company for nearly 20 years, is making her picture house debut in the current Clark Robinson Roxy show. Madame Matzenauer was the leading contralto at the Metropolitan from 1911 until 1931, when she resigned in order to enjoy an extended vacation in California.

Her engagement at the Roxy is the most important one to be made since the theatre became an independent operating unit.

STAGE SHOWS

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ending April 15

Among all Philadelphia theatres this week the Mastbaum holds the greatest drawing card in the person of Conrad Nagel and a crowded house testifies to his popularity.

Stars who appear in person no longer consider it sufficient to grant an admiring public the privilege of looking upon them but actually do something to justify their appearance. With the assistance of Miss Marsh, Conrad Nagel gave a "Test Scene," which he explained is an ordeal through which aspirants to the screen in Hollywood have to pass. It was more or less of a warning to pretty girls who expect to blossom into fame by traveling to Hollywood. Conrad in a naval uniform with plenty of gold braid was most satisfying to the fans. He then gave the brother's plea in the "Trial of Mary Dugan," with great dramatic force.

The stage show, "Star Revels," started in an unusual way with the orchestra behind a semi-transparent screen and the leader silhouetted on it forming shadow pictures. The selections of the orchestra were illustrated in a clever and comic fashion with silhouettes representing the numbers. When the curtain rose the conductor in white and the men in blue were grouped against a dark blue background with classic white pillars. The conductor recited a poem telling how orchestral music is produced and as each instrument was mentioned a sample of that music was played. The ensemble then entered and demonstrated "How They Learn to Dance," in costumes of dark blue and white with red hair ribbons.

Sammy Cohen of "What Price Glory" fame put over a comedy act with the assistance of Doris Roche. He gave an impersonation of Al Jolson singing "Mammy," a humorous imitation of a snake charmer and a wrestler. Miss Roche and Sammy Cohen also sang a number of songs.

The ensemble deserve great credit for their clever number "The Wooden Soldier and the China Doll." Half the members were dressed in natty red and white soldier uniforms with black patent leather hats while the other half were dressed as dolls in satin dresses, bonnets and puff sleeves. "The Wooden Soldier and the China Doll" was sung by two members of the ensemble specially costumed. After various drills and dances in which the toys all moved in a stiff mechanical way, the bride and groom walked to the back of the stage to stand before a large white bell which rose to disclose a minister who raised his hands in blessing as the curtain descended upon a very satisfactory program.

Detroit Fox

Week ending April 14

Fanchon and Marco's "Slavique" Idea gave the stage here the gala appearance of a Central European carnival. The show opened with a gay Slavic costume dance by the Sunkist ensemble. One young lady in this group, in brilliant shawls and pantaloons, performed a rhythmic tap that never saw Central Europe. Following this colorful start came Pallenberg's Bears, rolling about the stage in somersaults, on bicycles, velocipides, hobby-horses and roller skates. These two beasts seemed docile enough, but the tight leather muzzles they wore suggested that at times they might forget their manners.

Block and Thompson, comic dancers, won an ovation with a skit about starting a broken down old car. One of the pair became the front end of the car while the other was the driver who went through the pantomime of starting. The balky motion of the engine was an eccentric tap. Audience found this highly amusing.

A set of scrim drops and borders under pale blue floods accentuated the effectiveness of 17th century costumes and wigs worn by the Sunkist ensemble in their second appearance. At the finish of this number Sam Hearn, hick comedian, was introduced as an American guest. Hearn opened his act with a monologue that called forth scattered laughs. His white sombrero, white goatee, white uniform, medals, cigar and Yankee nasal twang enable him to create a distinctive impression. He does a duet and a trio on one violin in a manner that goes over strong. A drama on the same violin is another good piece.

The Arconis, expert tumblers, do a brand of teater board work that is little short of sensational. They whirl through the air and land on everything—stage, shoulders, heads and props.

Laurell and Ted, ballet adagio dancers, evidently had something worthwhile to offer, but their bit was cut so short as to be beyond reviewing. The ensemble that served them for background spun about the stage in a dance that seemed part pantomime and part ritual. It was an awesome sort of thing to which the audience responded more or less with hushed appreciation.

Denver Orpheum

Week ending April 20

Four Casting Stars open the show with a standard circus act, working with two uprights and a net, throwing two of the four from one to another with flip flops and twists between the throw and catch. The closing act is new here; one man throws the other over the upright and catches him as he comes down on the other side.

Charlie Melson headlines the vaudeville and opens with a background of Mississippi river scenery with a steamboat moving up the stream. His "Screen Test" is a novelty; he is seen on the screen taking the test and receiving instructions and a bawling out from Melson on the stage.

Teck Murdock and company of five present 'Movie Mad,' in which Teck is selling subscriptions to a fan magazine but the offer is mistaken as a contract for pictures. He thinks he is doing real business until he finds he is inside an insane asylum.

Lee, Lee, Lee & Lee are a quartet of dancers, one of whom doubles at the piano.

A fairly well balanced program.

To Broadcast From Berlin

A trans-Atlantic broadcast is scheduled for May 1, when a program will be radioed from the Tobis studio in Berlin over a National Broadcasting Company-WEAF network here. Players engaged in the production of an English version of "Mona Lisa," now being shown here in German, will participate in the program.

M. C. Given Testimonial

Civic and social bodies of Pittsburgh tendered a testimonial banquet on April 22 to Dick Powell, master of ceremonies at the Stanley theatre, before his departure for Hollywood for a role in Warner's "The Crooner."

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending April 14

The opening episode of Fanchon and Marco's "Chains" Idea finds the chorus performing as slaves in a dungeon setting. Frank Stever, baritone, personifies the slave driver, and the scene is augmented by the acrobatic dancing of Karels & Kay and Georgene & Henry. The two dancing couples are quite adept and offer some splendid bits.

The Five Lelands tumble about in a thrilling fashion. Members of the troupe tumble with and without spring boards and twist and twirl about in a lively fashion. For its next number the chorus is attired in red costumes and carry links. They offer some interesting formations while the four dancers entertain with some excellent ballroom dancing. In concluding the episode, the chorus is furnished with colored wheels with a single axle, which they roll along the stage.

Golde & Raye, tap dancers, instill comedy into their offering by imitating amateur dancers. Some of their foolishness is well taken, while a bit of it might well be omitted. For the finale the chorus is attired in white trunks and braziers, while Frank Stever introduces four or five of the chorus in costumes representing the sapphire, ruby, emerald, amethyst and other jewels. He sings "This Is My Love Song," while the dancers do their stuff and a tableaux in the background features the male members of Karels & Kay and Georgene & Henry holding one of their number on their shoulders in pyramid fashion.

Salt Lake RKO Orpheum

Week ending April 15

Anatole Friedland's newest production, "Show Boat" is being presented as a headliner on the Salt Lake City RKO Orpheum stage here this week. Marty May, clever comedian, heads the cast of "Show Boat," together with Jean Carroll, dancer. The supporting cast is made up of "Anatole's Beautiful Sailorettes," a number of specialty artists who offer their own individual numbers as well as several ensembles. Marty May, as the skipper of the "Show Boat," keeps everyone stepping and provides a maximum of fun.

Marty May, spokesman of the "Show Boat" revue, also offers an act in which he is "annoyed" by the comely Jean Carroll. Hope Vernon, a prima donna known as the "Singer of Romance," is the vocal high mark of the bill this week. The Italian clowns, Fortunello and Cirillino, complete the stage show.

HELLO EVERYBODY

Bernie Cowham, the adopted son of Flushing (a community section of New York City) is still the favorite son, even though he has been taken off the roster of the house.... I have heard, often, of patrons of theatres going to bat for their favorites, but never in a community so metropolitan as this one....and never as enthusiastically as in this case....Not only have most of the clubs been getting up petitions but every school has been sending out its pupils to have their fellow citizens sign up, too. . . . The North Shore Daily Journal, the leading newspaper on Long Island, has also taken up the cudgels and is inserting editorials that some officials should read.... We all grant that there is a strong reason for curtailing expenses in all theatres, but surely there should be a little judgment mixed up in it somewhere....After reading some of the editorials on this particular matter and some of the strong letters of protest they have published, it is certainly most reasonable to assume that a man as popular as this one should be back on the job....This one case serves as an example, but I know for a fact that much the same thing is happening throughout the country and the main offices of these large corporations would be looking to their own best interests if they "got a little closer to the facts" before doing their drastic cutting....

B. A. Rolfe has fooled the wise-acres who said he wouldn't come back....Rolfe has punctured the adage that middle-age must bow to youth....At 52 he is going stronger than ever and appears ready to outlast the best of the youngsters as director of his new NBC orchestra, which is broadcasting twice a week over the NBC-WJZ networks. . . .

Emil Velazco, well known throughout the country as a theatre and radio organist, has forsaken the theatre part of the business and has become head of the operations of the Metropolitan Studios of the Powers corporation, over on the Island. . . .

Harold Kemp, head of the Warner Bros. Artists Bureau, has booked Russ Colombo into the Philadelphia Mastbaum and from all reports Russ is a sensation....The Three Gibson Girls, formerly of vaudeville fame, will be heard on the air real soon.... The girls, in the past few years had broken up but now two of the originals, Dorothy Dale and Florence Shewell met again and decided to reorganize their harmony team....The new member of the trio is Molly Klinger....They harmonize well and it can't be long now until we hear their voices over the air....John Hammond, popular organist at Warner's Strand, in Brooklyn, is the composer of "Song of the Block-Aiders," and it is being used throughout this city in the campaign to help unemployment....Last week I mentioned an appropriate song for Mother's Day....well here is another that will fit in very nicely also....It is called "Ma and Pa," and Leo Feist are the publishers of it....I might mention a lot more but there's no more space....S'long....

Keese at Palace in Dallas

Alexander Keese, who resigned from Publix in 1931, after 11 years with the organization, has returned to the Dallas Palace pending the naming of a successor to Harold Ramsay, who was at the house for four weeks, as music conductor.

ORGAN SOLOS

WILD OSCAR (New York 175th) continues to entertain the patrons of the house with his original novelty called, "Oscar's School of Broadcasting." Oscar's presentation is a burlesque on radio broadcasting and this reviewer has yet to catch one of his solos that is not chockfull of smart and subtle wisecracks and clever dialogue. His solos are regular community song-fests but touched-up with a sophistication not used by any other organist. Another thing that Oscar does that is a bit different and that is he whistles on many of the numbers as the audience sing.

He has a good baritone voice with which he leads them in singing some of the tunes. Numbers offered this week and which the small audience sang very lustily were: "Dream Sweetheart," "Meet Me To-night in Dreamland," another chorus of "Dream Sweetheart," and a final chorus of "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." This organist is extremely popular and gets great applause.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) offers as his organ presentation "Spring Is Here Again." Selections include "Was That the Human Thing To Do," "Paradise," "Keeping Out of Mischief Now," and "Snuggled on Your Shoulder." Somewhat of an innovation is offered, when while playing a medley of spring songs, a burlesque of a cop and bum in a park is enacted on the stage. Jack works with a microphone from the organ.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio RKO-Majestic) presented another most entertaining and pleasing songfest last week when he rendered the "Sing-Song of Contract Bridge." Abel started his solo with a clever parody on "Now's the Time to Fall in Love," then rendered the popular waltz, "Two Hearts in Three-Quarter Time," "River, Stay 'Way From My Door" and "Starlight." He played a special arrangement to the tune of "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" and "Snuggled on Your Shoulder" had them all singing. As his closing number, this master organist did another rearrangement on "When Day Is Done." The patrons rewarded him with a mighty hand when the solo was over. Earl and his wee daughter, Jane Lorraine Abel, were featured in songs and music at a recent cooking demonstration, which served as a good plug for the theatre as well as the organist.

VERNON GEYER (San Antonio Greater Palace) offered another of his pleasing organ solos and presented "Starlight" as an opening number and closed with a vocal refrain on the selection, "You Call It Madness and I Call It Love." Vernon Geyer played only two songs, but drew a nice big hand. Patrons here seem to enjoy these brief organlogues better than the long-drawn out ones.

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood) apparently puts considerable cerebration into keeping the work of his golden voiced organ pleasantly varied. His semi-classical miniature recital two weeks ago was an example of such effort. More popular with this audience was his general exposition this week of console accessories. After a clever slide text explained, to the tune of "Yankee Doodle," that his organ replaced a number of musicians, Clarke went on to demonstrate with such pieces as "St. Louis Blues" and "Carolina Moon" on piano, clarinet, violin, trombone, jazz cornet, traps and saxophone. The slides argued for an increase of the organist's salary. All this was a long though not uninteresting, preamble to the single community sing number, "River Stay 'Way From My Door."

HILDA STONE (San Antonio Aztec) last Saturday morning was back again at the console of the grand organ for the weekly meeting of the "Aztec's Big Brother Club." Her selections were as follows: "Spend an Evening in Caroline," "Who's Your Little Whozis?" "When It's Sleepy Time Down South," "Was That the Human Thing?" "Call Me Darling," "Now's the Time," "Cant We Talk It Over," "Where the Blue of the Night," "Lazy River," "River, Stay 'Way," "The Eyes of Texas Are Upon You," and closed her organ solo with "Hail, Hail the Gang's All Here." The kids cheered her to the echo.

OVERTURES

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and his orchestra of more than 30 offered "Evolution of the Dance" in which music from early days to the present was featured. The offering commenced with the barbaric music of the tom-toms and worked its way through the minuet, waltz, country jigs and jazz to the dance music of today. There were strains of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" for oldtimers, "Alexander's Ragtime Band" to remind listeners of the music of 30 years ago, and the "Peanut Vender's Song" to represent the present. Joaquin Garay offered "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" as his vocal selection.

---

GABRIEL HINES (Philadelphia Fox) conducted the orchestra in a medley of popular river songs entitled "Romantic Rivers." Among those included in the production were "Deep River," "Beautiful Ohio," "By the Waters of Minnetonka," "By the River St. Marie," "Roll on Mississippi," and "Old Man River." Scenes typical of the songs were thrown on the screen as the various selections were being played.

TOMMY SANDVALL (Spokane Fox) and his Fox Melody Boys gave their final concert, including the well known and popular melodies from the "Prince of Pilsen," and other well known comic operas, finishing with "Old Heidelberg," a brass quintet of the boys scoring heavily. The popular Fox Melody Boys will disband and many of them return to the Coast.

SOL KLEIN (New York Academy) presented an overture of outstanding quality this week. The overture was entitled "Indian Melodies" and was compiled and arranged by this energetic and versatile director. Opening with Victor Herbert's "Natome," and working in very nicely to a rhythmic arrangement of "Waters of the Minnetonka," a clarinet solo (using the P. A. system) of "Indian Love Call," with a softly played accompaniment by the rest of the orchestra, was next featured. "Rose Marie," beautifully played by the entire orchestra, brought this fine overture to a close. Mr. Klein is to be complimented on giving these patrons a better class of music than any other house in the vicinity.

THE ELECTRIC ARC

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 125.—(A) Describe a simple bell or buzzer circuit. (B) What kind of battery is best for use on theatre bell or buzzer circuits? (C) What kind of wires should be used on theatre bell or buzzer circuits? (D) What precautions would you take if a bell or buzzer circuit must pass through a damp or wet place? (E) How should double wires (two wires in one insulation) be attached to their support?

In the "Bluebook School" we have been asking questions concerning the electric arc, in the course of which some very interesting points have been raised. In Bluebook School questions Nos. 114 and 115, certain points have been raised which, it seemed to me, were very well covered by answers submitted by projectionists. I nevertheless thought it well to get the reaction of the National Carbon Company's arc department and therefore invited that department, through its manager, Dr. E. I. Geib, to set forth its views, which it has done as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Referring to your correspondence, requesting us to express an opinion on Blue Book School Question 114, I shall attempt to give you our viewpoint.

"Question.—Just why does a crater form only one carbon tip with a d-c. arc, and on both sides of an a-c. arc? Answer.—A crater is formed on a carbon by the volatilization of the carbon, which results from the high temperature (approximately 3,525° C.) formed by the arc. In the case of the d-c. arc, the temperature is much higher at the tip of the positive carbon than at the tip of the negative. For this reason, with direct current—that is, current flowing only in one direction—a distinct crater is formed on the positive carbon, but a similar formation does not occur on the negative. The flow of the electrons in the arc stream is from negative to positive (just the reverse from the conventional conception of current flow). The bombardment of the tip of the positive carbon by this stream of electrons traveling at enormous velocity, is the cause of the high temperature developed at that point. The negative carbon, not being subject to this intense bombardment, is not raised to a corresponding temperature. On alternating current, the direction of current flow reverses many times a second (120 times on a 60-cycle circuit). This means that each carbon is alternately positive and negative, and that the effect of the electronic bombardment is the same on both carbons, and in neither case as great as that occurring at the tip of the positive carbon on d-c.

Question.—Just why are the craters smaller with an a-c. arc than with a d-c. arc? Answer.—For the reason just explained, the crater on the a-c. arc will be less distinct than that formed on the positive carbon of a d-c. arc.

"Question.—Electric current will not travel through the air except in flashes at very high voltages. So far as has to do with a projection arc, it will not leap from one carbon tip to the other, even across an air gap of one sixty-fourth of an inch, yet when the carbons actually contact and are again separated, current will flow, even though the separation be increased to as much as one-fourth of an inch or more. Explain this matter fully. Answer.—Theories vary as to exactly what happens when an electric current passes through a path of ionized gases, and form the basis for a great deal of controversy. We know that, as question 114 (C) points out, current will not flow through an air gap of appreciable length at ordinary voltage. On the other hand, current will flow at ordinary voltage through a path of ionized gases. The breakdown of electrical resistance which occurs when a very high potential is established across an air gap is, itself, probably a result of the ionization produced by the high voltage. When the tips of two carbons forming the positive and negative terminals of a source of electrical potential are brought together, an electrical current is established. As the carbons start to separate, the minute air gap ionizes the atoms of intervening gases, thus giving appreciable electrical conductivity to a space which in a neutral condition would possess high dielectric property. The heat released volatilizes some of the carbon, adding ionized carbon atoms to the space between the carbon tips. The greatly increased conductivity of the gaseous path thus formed, permits the carbons to be separated a considerable distance, dependent on the voltage at the arc, so long as the current flow is continuous. As soon as the current is interrupted, however, neutralization of the intervening gases at once takes place, and the carbons must again be brought into contact before current will flow.

"On Page 85, of the March 5 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, under 'Answer to Question No. 114,' you request that we give our explanation of why a saucer-shaped crater is formed. Answer.—The saucer-shaped crater is perhaps formed because of the fact that the temperature at the center of the crater is somewhat higher than at the edges, and consequently perhaps a little more carbon is violatilized in a given time from the center than from the rim, and the depth of the crater shape is practically always greater in the case of a crater formed on a cored carbon than if it is formed on a solid carbon, as a result of the greater ease with which the cored material is volatilized."

Seattle Inventor Has Close Approach to Third Dimension

Donovan Foster, Seattle illuminating engineer, has demonstrated for film executives in that city an invention which is said to be the closest approach to the third dimension effect yet perfected for motion picture projection. Foster plans further demonstrations in Hollywood.

The method involves a beam of light that passes through the aperture of a motion picture projection machine onto the plane of the film. The invention is also said to relieve eye strain and remove distortion when a picture is seen from either side.

IATSE Annual Convention Will Be Held in Columbus

Fred J. Dempsey, secretary-treasurer of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators of the United States and Canada, has opened an office in Columbus, Ohio, in preparation for the annual convention of the organization there this year.

Charles E. Pratt, Majestic theatre, Columbus, is general chairman of the convention committee. Larry Buck, Loew's Broad theatre, is advisory chairman. Local headquarters have been opened in the Neil House, convention headquarters.

Columbia Has 21 Writers

Writers at the Columbia Coast plant now number 21, as compared to the five previously at the studio. All but two were signed during the past month. Paramount has signed Anthony Veiller, and MGM has signed Melville Baker, Leonard Ide, Willard Keefe and Milton Raison.

Color Company Moves

The Color-Tone Corporation, manufacturer of natural color motion picture and photographic equipment, has moved from Chicago to Milwaukee. The company claims to have developed a new method of producing natural color films.

Monogram Signs Rex Bell; Deal Made With PDC, London

Rex Bell has been signed by Monogram to star in a series of eight Westerns for 1932-33.

Monogram also announced the signing of a three-year franchise for Great Britain whereby PDC Ltd. of London will handle exclusively the Monogram output.

"This contract is another evidence of the stability of the independent market which in the last few years has gone forward by leaps and bounds," said W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram. "It would have been impossible a few years back for any independent organization to secure such a long term franchise."

"The County Fair," added to the Monogram program, is in addition to the twelve melodramas already scheduled for the 1931-32 season.

Bud Pollard Directing for Producer of Negro Pictures

Bud Pollard is directing for the recently formed Southland Pictures Corporation, of which Donald Haywood, writer, is president. Work is going on at Fort Lee where two pictures, "The Black King" and "Bondage" are in course of production. Eight pictures, with all colored casts, will be produced.

Haywood said he went into production of all colored plays on the request of nearly 1,200 exhibitors who cater to colored audiences. "I intend that the plays shall have a universal interest, and not appeal only to colored folk. That there is a place for such productions is proved by the success on the stage and screen of recent plays featuring negro psychology."

First Division To Handle All Chesterfield Features

Harry H. Thomas, president of First Division Exchanges, Inc., has acquired distribution rights to the 12 features which will be released by Chesterfield during the 1932-33 season.

Six of the productions will be made by Chesterfield and six by Invincible Pictures Corporation, new producing company of Maury M. Cohen. Richard Thorpe will direct and George R. Batcheller will supervise.

Roadshows Italian Film

George S. Scott, booker for an Oklahoma circuit, has begun a roadshow tour of the state with "Maciste in Hell," Italian film, by arrangement with Sack Amusement Enterprises of San Antonio, holder of territorial rights.

Paramount Signs W. C. Fields

W. C. Fields, stage comedian, has been signed by Paramount for a role in the Olympic Games comedy feature to be produced with Jack Oakie in the lead.

Vitaphone Program Near End

Vitaphone has completed its current season short program, with the exception of three of the Robert Ripley "Believe It Or Not" series. Fifteen shorts are now being cut and edited.

Tobis Forenfilms Sending Camera Crew to Caribbean

Tobis Forenfilms, Inc., is sponsoring a camera expedition which sails from New York on Saturday for the Caribbean, there to photograph the man-eating crab and other natural phenomena.

In the party will be Morris A. Helprin, writer; Saul Schary, New York artist; Edward Hyland, cameraman. It is planned to charter a sloop at Martinique for the journey, expected to require some three months. The films will be in the form of a series of six one-reel travel subjects. The series title will be "Other Worlds Close By."

Warner Asks Studio Economy

Warner studio heads at Hollywood met Jack L. Warner, production chief, on Monday, to hear an appeal for economy in studio operation. Warner promised the studio workers there will not be salary cuts and that the studio will remain open 52 weeks per year.

Trans-Lux Net $277,505

Trans-Lux Daylight Screen Corporation reports profit of $277,505 after charges but before federal taxes, for the year ended December 26, 1931. The figure compares with $475,606 for the year 1930.

Ufa Films Moves Office

Ufa Films, Inc., will move its New York office from 1540 Broadway to 130 West 46th Street, on May 1.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it...lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

POSITIVELY MINIMUM

THE editor of Motion Picture Herald and Mr. H. E. Jameyson, of the Kansas City division of West Coast Theatres, are enjoying a considerable correspondence on certain aspects of the art and industry of the motion picture and more particularly those elements which tell at the box office, including "the curse of the word" which has fallen across the cinema.

So, apropos of recent editorial comment on the subject, Mr. Jameyson gleefully writes:

> Between Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas, there is a long viaduct known as the Inter-City viaduct. It was built many years ago before automobile transportation became a problem. It is narrow and does not adequately handle present day traffic. Recently, the authorities of both sides of the line, decided they would improve things so they erected large signs which were strung at intervals along this trafficway. These signs read: "Minimum speed 35-miles—no passing." These signs did not seem to have the desired effect. Slow moving vehicles continued to clog the traffic artery so the city fathers put their heads together and put some investigators on the job making the astonishing discovery that about 50% of the people who travel along the viaduct do not know the meaning of the word "minimum." So the signs now read—"You must travel 35-miles and no passing."
> Seems to me there should be a moral in this.

There is indeed a moral, as Mr. Jameyson hopes. It is: "Sing something simple," and jolly well make it simple, too.

BOLOGNA DE MONTAGE

SOME years ago there exuded from the vaporings of a group of acutely esoteric young intellectuals of the Quartier Latin a new vernacular and vocabulary of film discussion, coincident with the rise of a painfully highbrow appreciation of the beginnings of a pattern of art form in picture structure. Very little survives of that altitudinous piffleology from Paris, but most recently there has been a recrudescence of the term montage—meaning, of course, just that, or "how effects are put together."

Montage is by way of being quite a word in Hollywood just now. The application of a consciousness of the principles of montage is all very well for Hollywood, but it is a word that ought not to be let out of doors where it can bite the customers.

Motion picture criticism and other forms of publicity will do well indeed to avoid the esoteric, lest the public get alarmed and flee from the menacing shadows of intellectuality. There are a great many words like that. Just suppose the consumers of the sound pictures got tangled up with decibels of the speakers and the gamma of the sound track! The customers do not care how and why, what they want is "what" and "how good."

UNTAXED COMPETITION

WHILE our statesmen-economists are looking about for sources of revenue, they might be diverted from their acute focus on the motion picture and the theatre by a reminder that the publication and purveying of fiction with type on paper is definitely an amusement enterprise, certainly of no greater basic necessity than the wares of the screen and stage. The great flood of detective and crime novels, the endless river of newspaper comics and the monthly cascades of frothy all-entertainment magazines are definitely amusement enterprises and competitors for the money and idle time of the spenders. The only important difference is that the printed word is hallowed with respectable associations of long standing, while the amusement purveyed through box offices is still damned by the concept which in ancient English law classified actors along with "mountebanks, wastrels and bear baiters." No logic can support a point of view which says, for example, that such a product as "Grand Hotel" on the printed page is entitled to any special privilege over "Grand Hotel" on the stage or screen. It is the same story purveyed to the same persons for the same purpose.

FINGER SNIFFERS

IMPORTANT observations concerning audiences are recorded in "Quicker Than the Eye," a new book by the able Mr. John Mulholland, famous magician. He remarks upon the basic importance of being able to make the spectators look somewhere else while the prestidigitator does his real work, and comments that therefore intelligent adults make the most desirable audience. He points out that a man will look in the direction a finger points, that a child will first look at the finger, and that a dog will come over and sniff the finger. That would make it a problem to fool a dog with a vanishing steak. Motion picture audiences are like that, too—the dumber they are the more they demand the actual goods, the simon pure 100 proof emotionalism, and no arty inferences or indirections.

IF all the announced and alleged millions of savings and economies in the industry now being effected were laid end to end they would pay dividends. No one can save more money than there is. Once the motion picture bragged of what it spent. Now it brags of what it saves.

THE action of the New York State Court of Appeals clearing John C. Flinn and Henry F. Lally of manslaughter charges growing out of the Pathe studio fire was legally based on the technicality of the constitutional safeguard against double jeopardy. It is further to the point in fact, rather than in law, that it was technicality and politics which got them into it in the first place. It was not their fire.

'HE SHOULD BE WRAPPED IN COTTON'

—WALTHAM (MASS.) NEWS-TRIBUNE

DEVILTRY

Any adult whose moral fabric would be weakened by a motion picture should be "wrapped in cotton," says the NEWS-TRIBUNE of WALTHAM in MASSACHUSETTS, thus:

Without defending those moving pictures which unduly glorify crime or sex, the tendency to blame the movies for every sin of society is carried to ridiculous extremes. Critics of the moving pictures seem to think that every film should be toned down—or up—to the level of the young person, the boy or girl of from six to fifteen years of age. This same type of critic also directs its shafts from time to time at newspaper headlines, magazines and books, failing to discriminate between the "literature" which specializes in pornography and the idealizing of crime and those which, in the depicting of life, make crime and vice merely incidental to a complete picture. . . .

As a matter of fact, we believe the influence of the movies either for good or for evil has been greatly exaggerated. . . . All the deviltry in which young people indulged used to be attributed to the "dime novel," now attaining a dignity it did not possess till it became a rarity. . . .

The adult whose moral character would be weakened by anything he sees in the films should be wrapped in cotton and carefully secluded from contact with the world. . . . Those who accept what they see as a complete picture would be convinced that all women are beautiful because he met one pretty girl on the street. If films do not meet with the approval of parents they should keep their children away from this type. . . .

. . . There will always be pictures as there will always be plays which make appeal to the lower instincts, until such time as society has educated itself to an appreciation only of what is fine and soul-inspiring. But as long as there is an apparently earnest effort toward improvement, there is no real reason for indiscriminate criticism.

IMPROVING

The propensity of the motion picture to "rid the provincial of his feeling of inferiority" is emphasized by Mrs. Walter Ferguson, writer on women's topics for the NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSOCIATION:

. . . I have small patience, however, with those who are always crying down the movies. Because while this may be our newest and crudest industry, it is improving all the time.

. . . Those critics . . . can have no adequate conception of what it means to the country man to be able to see the best showing pictures at the very same time they are shown in metropolitan centers. I know of nothing that has so helped to rid the provincial of his feeling of inferiority and ignorance as the radio and the moving pictures.

AN IDEA

An editorial writer of the TRIBUNE at CHANUTE in KANSAS, in a moment of whimsy, proposes the following as a solution of the taxation problem:

The movie industry is vastly disturbed by the proposed federal tax on admissions. We propose a compromise. If the movie is a genuinely entertaining one, the Government won't ask a cent. If it's just fair to middling, a 10 per cent levy will be demanded. If the picture is rotten, the Government will get half of the gate receipts. Should any question arise as to the merits of any film in particular, a vote of the audience would decide the matter.

HARPING

"Freedom" within the industry should lead it into new fields and higher standards, in the opinion of the NEWS of CHICAGO, as expressed in the following editorial:

. . . The millions of persons who depend largely on motion pictures for their education and amusement are interested less in legal issues than in the probable practical and artistic effects of the decree. Those certainly should be beneficial. Wholesome competition is essential if the film industry is to minister to important elements of the population notoriously dissatisfied with the general run of pictures and their continuous harping on the sex theme. Monopoly leads to coercion as well as to extreme standardization. Freedom should lead to greater variety, bolder experimentation, courage in exploring new subjects and new fields.

The small picture theatres, too, have had to accept such films as the powerful producing corporations chose to give them. . . .

The standards of the film industry grievously need to be elevated. Abolition of the monopoly should lead to notable improvement.

FREE ART

There is much to be said for "free trade in art," an editorial writer in the STAR at KANSAS CITY points out in a discussion of the Dickstein bill:

It is a little hard to follow the argument for the Dickstein bill, which would serve greatly to restrict the appearance of foreign actors and actresses in this country. Apparently, the principal reason why the United States should bar members of their profession is that foreign countries exclude American actors and actresses. At least, retaliation seems to have played a considerable part in the debate on the bill which has just been passed by the house. But it may be that the foreign governments are wrong in their policy and unless some bargaining advantage is to be gained by similar restrictions, there is no virtue in following a bad example.

As a matter of fact, there is a good deal to be said for free trade in art. It is a question, for example, whether a virtual embargo on the importation of foreign actors and actresses would be in the best interest of the American theatre. The high level of acting in this country today is probably due, at least in part, to competition from the foreign members of the profession, and the motion picture audience, as well as that of the legitimate theatre, would be penalized by their exclusion.

ENTIRE PROBLEM OF PROTECTION BOUND UP IN YOUNGCLAUS SUIT

Decision Due in June in Case Testing Validity of Zoning Agreements Between Distributors and Circuits in Nebraska

By IRVING PERLMETER

(Special Correspondent at Lincoln, Neb.)

Decision in the now famous Nebraska suit of William N. Youngclaus versus distributors and circuits, on the issue of protection, is due late in June. Protection between towns, the moot point battled out in United States district court at Lincoln, Neb., with the taking of testimony in the week of April 18-23, is a problem of only three years standing as far as the Omaha exchange territory is concerned. The Youngclaus suit, called the nation's first test of protection agreements between distributors and circuits focused attention principally upon two groups: Publix Theatres and Allied States Association.

It is probable that any other producer-owned theatre circuit would have fought for protection in 1929 after the supreme court declared illegal the arbitration clause of the standard exhibition contract. But it was in that year that Publix acquired its outstate houses in Nebraska and the propagation of the protection cause fell to its lot. Today Publix has about 35 theatres in the Omaha territory, RKO two and Fox three, and so the problem is all Publix's.

The Role of Publix

Before discussing in detail the history of the Youngclaus suit, it is necessary to say that, for the most part, the role of Publix in this area's protection fight is not denied. Arthur Mullen, of Omaha, and Bruce Bromley and George Shea, of New York, who acted as attorneys for Publix and all distributors which were co-defending the Youngclaus suit, based practically their entire defense on the proposition that the Omaha protection plan of July 22, 1930, was a necessary and reasonable step to curb the exorbitant protection demands of Publix.

Several things happened at Omaha in 1929. Publix went outstate by buying a circuit of small town theatres from Universal. At about the same time, Publix, RKO and Fox joined the MPTO of this territory. The MPTO had at that time a history of 10 years behind it and was recognized as an independent organization. It had had as many as 200 or more members, and Charles E. Williams of Omaha was its president. Williams testified at the Youngclaus trial that the affiliated theatres came into his organization "largely" at his personal request. But he also told the court that in the year 1930, the critical one in the protection fight, the affiliated theatres paid $4,000 of the total of $5,800 dues received by his group. He himself received a salary of $2,200 "for settling minor disputes among members" and distributing words of comfort and wisdom.

But in 1930, MPTO membership fell off to a little more than 100 and the following year dropped still more. For 1932, Williams refused to estimate his membership.

That sets the stage for the other party to the current fray—Allied States Association. Allied was born out of looming protection battles in Iowa late in the summer of 1929, and a few months later in Nebraska for the same reason. Lester F. Martin of Nevada, Iowa, became the active agent of both, and the two states merged their Allied organizations in January, 1932.

The testimony in the Youngclaus case proved that there was no uniform protection between towns prior to the agreement of July 22, 1930. Publix demanded and obtained protection on many pictures; in fact, got more time and area in its protection on individual films than under the agreement. But energetic independents obtained enough first-runs to be happy and comparatively prosperous. A letter from the New York Publix office, that was introduced in evidence by the defense, complains of this fact.

The files of the Omaha Film Board of Trade show that in January, 1930, Suburban Theatres, Inc., running two second-run houses in Omaha, brought up the subject of protection officially for the first time. It had been charged that this was a "blind" for later Publix moves. At about that time the New York Publix office sent to Omaha for a schedule of desired protection. The letter came from Max Friedman to Herbert W. Wengel, Publix booker for the Nebraska territory, and Wengel passed the call down the line. All data were relayed to New York, where a zoning plan to cover all Publix theatres in this territory was drafted. Copies of it were provided to all branch managers by Wengel. One other person had a copy of it—Williams, of the MPTO.

Independents Walk Out

Then came April and an annual meeting of the MPTO. About 50 independents were present, but when talk got to protection and the members were given a general idea of the Publix demands, most of them walked out. At the end of the second day of the convention, close to midnight, with about a dozen present, a resolution was presented and passed authorizing Williams to appoint himself and two others as a committee to draft a protection plan "in opposition to the Publix" plan. At no time during these meetings was the actual copy of the Publix plan shown. Williams says that he had received it "in confidence."

Zoning Committee Formed

What followed next appears difficult to understand. Wengel testified in court that all the branch managers had said "Okay" when he gave them the Publix demand, which, for protection between towns, amounted to 30 days and between 25 and 50 miles.

The Omaha Film Board of Trade formed a zoning and protection committee and Palfreyman came out from the New York office of the MPPDA. Meetings were held late in June and again in July, and on July 22 the group agreed on a virtual copy of the Los Angeles plan, which Williams says was his idea. This plan gave the Publix house at Norfolk, Neb., 10 days and 15 miles instead of 30 days and 20 miles as asked. Max Friedman and Wengel were the only ones to oppose the plan, but Friedman agreed to submit it to New York, where it seems to have been approved without argument.

Allied Arrayed Against Publix Principally; Questions of Compulsory Arbitration and Coercive Zoning Also Factors

The Youngclaus suit makes an important argument on the question of whether the independents had any say in this plan. Youngclaus himself was not a member of the MPTO. At the protection meetings there were three so-called independents: Williams, W. A. Bowker of Dunlap, Iowa, and H. G. Day of Tekamah, Neb., were the MPTO committee. Later there were appointed to the permanent committee W. H. Creal of Neola, Iowa, and H. E. Brookings of Weeping Water, Neb. All the others were branch managers, Publix men, or suburban theatre owners of Omaha.

It is in the evidence of the Youngclaus suit that the July 22, 1930, protection plan freed Bowker of the protection that Publix demanded over him from Missouri Valley, that the plan put one of Day's chief rivals under the protection of another Publix house, that amendments adopted soon afterward performed similar favors for Creal and Brookings.

Plan Placed in Effect

The plan was submitted to New York home offices, approved and placed in effect about Sept. 1, 1930. The result, says Allied, was a plan to crush the independents, and, say the distributors, to deliver the independents from Publix domination.

The distributors, one after another, took the stand in the Youngclaus case and testified under oath that the sole purpose of the plan was to limit Publix. It only set maximums and not compulsory protection periods, they said.

From a legal viewpoint this is an important issue. Whether Federal Judge T. C. Munger of Lincoln will say that the agreement violated the anti-trust laws will depend a great deal on whether the protection periods were mere maximums or rigid mandates.

In the foregoing we have noted the sworn statements of the parties who drafted the agreement that the periods were only maximums. But the minutes of the Omaha Film Board of Trade during June were shown in court and they disclose that the first draft of the protection plan carried a whole paragraph defining the periods as mere maximums. Those same minutes show that by the formal process of a motion and a vote, that paragraph was stricken out. Not a single man of the defense witnesses showed an instance in which less than the so-called maximum protection was granted. Some of the branch managers told the writer that hundreds of such cases can be cited, but they weren't shown in court and Youngclaus' attorney openly challenged the defense to do so.

Involved in the question of maximum versus exact periods is the all-important issue of coercion—the stumbling block upon which the arbitration clause was killed by the supreme court in the Paramount case. The danger of this was not at all overlooked by the Omaha Film Board of Trade in the first round of the Youngclaus battle.

In November, 1930, immediately after Youngclaus told the zoning and protection committee of the Film Board that he would not submit to protection, Regina Molseed, secretary of the board, wrote to Gabriel Hess, in which she asked this question, "Are we justified in forcing protection on Youngclaus against his will?"

Hess wrote back in a hurry, suggesting an amendment to the protection plan to get away from such a possibility. "We are forcing no one," he declared.

Miss Molseed proceeded to send out a bulletin to the parties to the protection plan, telling them that the periods were mere maximums. An important decision for the court to make will be whether there was valid interpretation or amendment of the protection agreement at this point. Miss Molseed said on the witness stand that the change was not authorized by any meeting or committee, but was undertaken largely on her own responsibility.

Youngclaus a Showman

That is the background of the Youngclaus case, most of which was developed in open court, and cannot be disputed. Now as to the man whose name the suit bears.

William N. Youngclaus, 37 years old, has been in the motion picture business since he was 12 years old. He has worked in and owned theatres in half a dozen states, and is recognized as a first class showman. He bought a house in Madison, Neb., 16 or 17 road miles from Publix in Norfolk, in January, 1930. On April 4 he opened a completely remodeled theatre which he named the Capitol. The house that he bought was still running silent pictures, but Youngclaus spent a considerable amount of money, considering the size of the enterprise, to install sound and to improve acoustics. The town was slightly larger than 1,000 but drew well from a farm radius of about 10 miles. His theatre had about 500 seats compared to 1,100 in the Granada theatre of Publix in the larger city of Norfolk.

He showed in court, and the defense helped him prove, that up until the summer of 1931 he showed dozens of pictures before his Publix rival in Norfolk, and vice versa.

He said that the first time he ever heard of the protection plan was in November, 1930. On November 17 he was summoned before the zoning and protection committee of the Omaha Film Board of Trade to answer the complaint of Publix that he was within the Norfolk zone and ought to be yielding protection. Youngclaus appeared with an attorney from his home town and challenged the authority of the committee. Youngclaus says that R. S. Mendenhall, Paramount Publix manager, who was chairman, told him that the only way he could get pictures was to submit to the protection plan. Mendenhall and all the others present deny that Mendenhall or anyone else told Youngclaus this or anything like it.

ANDORRA SEES ITS FIRST FILM

Tiny Andorra, oldest and smallest republic in the world, located somewhere in the Pyrenees Mountains, separating France and Spain, went to a motion picture theatre for the first time in its life on Tuesday. The theatre was only a converted cowshed, according to the United Press, but fully half of the country's 5,000 population made an effort to get in. The cowshed capacity is 500 humans. Several acts of alleged vaudeville accompanied the home-made Spanish films, one a comedy of love and intrigue.

He Gets the Pictures

Youngclaus went home and the distributors provided him with pictures as they had in the past, so that he continued to show many films ahead of Norfolk. Defense Counsel Mullen makes quite a point of this, as showing that the protection plan was not mandatory. Youngclaus' attorneys answer that the distributors were merely afraid of violating contracts, most of which called for about one picture a week, from each of several companies, and because of Hess' warning.

Time came for the signing of 1931-32 contracts and the war began. Youngclaus wrote into each of his new contracts a clause saying, "Madison has no protection over any other city and no other city has protection over Madison." The branch managers forwarded these offers to New York where they were unanimously refused. Youngclaus says the salesmen told him that the refusals were based on the protection plan and the branch managers testified that the offers were turned down because they contradicted contracts already negotiated in New York with Publix, guaranteeing protection. The difference is a legal point, but the situation is the same.

Conciliation Fails

Youngclaus was a member of Allied and went to Paul F. Good, Allied attorney. Good recommended a 30-day attempt at conciliation, and when that time elapsed he filed the suit in Lincoln in the federal court. At the present time Youngclaus is receiving pictures under a special agreement reached between Good and George Shea, which effects a sort of moratorium on the protection fight until the lawsuit can be settled by the courts.

Of course, Youngclaus is merely the "front" in the suit, although he was the originator. The title of the case is "William N. Youngclaus, on behalf of himself and others similarly situated, vs. Omaha Film Board of Trade, et al."

In January, 1932, at the joint meeting of Nebraska and Iowa Allied, it was voted to raise $15,000 to fight the case. Twelve thousand dollars of that has already been pledged, according to Lester Martin. The Nebraska and Iowa Allied will see the case through the lower federal court and the circuit court of appeals, it is said. If it goes on from there, it probably will be handled by the national Allied. Abram F. Myers, general counsel of national Allied, has kept in close communication with Good since the inception of the suit, and had planned to be in Lincoln for the trial, until other business detained him in Washington.

The distributors also are planning to take the case up the line of appellate courts. Mullen did most of the courtroom work for the defense, but Bruce Bromley and George Shea of the New York firm of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine and Wood, are preparing the briefs that will be filed about June 1.

Brookhart Asked Report

In the meantime, it is known at Omaha that the department of Justice, at the insistence of Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, who seeks a Federal investigation of alleged abuses in the industry, has asked for an informal report on the Youngclaus case. That such a report is being made is also known.

Judge Munger's decision is to be expected late in June. Munger is a small, keen-witted and sharply analytical magistrate. He will be 71 years old in July, but bears the appearance of being at least 15 years younger and can shoot 18 holes of golf in about 80. He has been on the federal bench for a quarter of a century, and is highly considered nationally. Circuit Judge W. S. Kenyon, former prominent United States senator, in a personal letter to the writer said that Munger would have been a "great addition" to the United States supreme court and should have been promoted there long ago. Munger, it is said, has failed of promotion because of his history of "standpat Republicanism" while insurgent George W. Norris was in the senate from Nebraska. Norris does not oppose Munger, but is not in a position to ask a regular Republican president for patronage. A decade ago even the late Chief Justice William Howard Taft took up the cause of Munger's promotion, but politics decreed otherwise.

The Omaha counsel on both sides are Democrats. Arthur Mullen has been Democratic national committeeman from Nebraska for ages, and Good was the winner just a few weeks ago of the Democratic nomination for attorney general of Nebraska. Good is a mild, middle-aged scholar. He not only attended the University of Nebraska, but won a Rhodes scholarship and went to Oxford over the seas.

The sole remaining angle of the Youngclaus case is likely to hang fire for some time. Youngclaus asked the attorney general of Nebraska to investigate the protection problem, with a view to action under the state's unfair practices act. Attorney General C. A. Sorensen naturally announced that he would withhold action pending Judge Munger's decision. With Sorensen and Good campaigning against each other this summer, it is not likely that either will press the state investigation this year. Allied, for instance, is reluctant to do anything about the state matter for fear of becoming involved in politics.

HUGHES THREATENS SHOWDOWN ON "SCARFACE" WITH STATE CENSORS

Boards in Five States Withhold Action on Production; Ohio Alone Has Sanctioned Showing of the Gangster Picture

Interest in the "Scarface" situation involving Howard Hughes began to spurt this week as the producer of the picture started to concentrate efforts to force a "showdown" with censor boards.

With five of the country's six state boards withholding action on "Scarface," Hughes threatens legal action against the various boards with the declaration that "he will make no compromise with censors over deletions," but will ask court authority to order the release of the picture without cuts.

Ohio's is the only state board which has passed the picture to date; no eliminations were made. The state censors of New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kansas and Maryland still have "Scarface" under consideration.

Wingate Answers Suit Threat

Dr. James B. Wingate, head of the New York board, said that he would attend a second screening of "Scarface" in New York this week, but added that it was unlikely any decision on releasing the picture would be made immediately thereafter. Dr. Wingate did not intimate whether or not the New York release of the picture would depend upon Hughes' willingness to make deletions. He said that the authority of the New York censor board in passing on pictures was clearly defined, and that Hughes' threat to take legal action against the board in the event it did not authorize exhibition of the picture, was not particularly impressive.

"I frequently recommend that procedure to producers who are dissatisfied with the board's decisions," said Dr. Wingate. "If the owner of the picture feels that our judgments are in error, he has the right to appeal to the Commissioner of Education at Albany, and if the producer is dissatisfied with the decision of the Commissioner of Education he may then ask for a review of the subject by the appellate division."

Dr. Wingate denied that the New York board delay in passing upon "Scarface" was due to any public antipathy to gangster pictures or to any order to the censors from state officials, including officials of the Department of Education, to "unofficially ban the exhibition of gangster pictures."

"Department heads and other state officials have never communicated their viewpoints on gangster pictures to me," said Dr. Wingate.

Cermak Reactions Awaited

The Chicago censor board, likewise, has not passed upon the picture as yet, and a decision there is believed to hinge upon the personal reactions of Mayor Anton Cermak, who has consented to attend a private preview of "Scarface," to be given in Chicago in the near future. There is no state censor board in Illinois, but the jurisdiction of the Chicago board extends over the most important exhibition territory in the state.

Mae Clausen, chairman of the Kansas state censor board, has said that that body will "have an announcement to make" in connection with "Scarface" within the next few days. The state board already has banned the picture on the grounds that it tends "to debase public morals," but representatives of Hughes have been urging the board to reconsider. The picture is scheduled to open at Loew's Midland theatre, at Kansas City, Mo., some time this month. It was passed by the Missouri city's censor board without deletions, but with the alternative ending which shows the gang leader shot by police, instead of being hanged, as depicted in the original version.

The Public's Verdict

In localities not under the jurisdiction of censor boards, where "Scarface" is now playing, or has already played, the picture is reported to have recorded unusually good grosses. It is said to have set an all-time house record in its premiere engagement at New Orleans, and comparable performances followed in subsequent engagements elsewhere, in the New Orleans territory.

At St. Louis, where the picture is now current, capacity business is reported. A three-year box office record at the Paramount, Los Angeles, a 3,600-seat house, was broken by "Scarface," it is claimed, and comparable performances were reported at Dallas and San Francisco. Newspapers in towns where the film has been shown, on the whole, have classified it as "unusually strong drama, ably acted and produced," according to a current check-up.

Although the Los Angeles showings were advertised as "the original version, being shown in defiance of all authority," reliable investigators report that the advertising is misrepresentative and that a deleted version is actually being exhibited. The uncensored version, in which the central character is hanged, is being shown at the Dallas (Texas) Melba theatre with a stage epilogue in which an actor representing a minister appears on the stage and intones the prayer of mercy which accompanies hangings, as the doomed gangster is being led to the scaffold in the picture.

Distributor Not in Dispute

United Artists, distributor of "Scarface," is not acting officially in behalf of the picture where it has come to grief with local censor boards. The distribution company has not identified itself with any protests to censors and has evidenced little interest in Hughes' threats to bring legal action against boards which refuse the picture a clean bill of health.

"Scarface" has had a stormy history ever since the story was originally accepted for production by Hughes. Objections were voiced to much of the original story and even to the title. Hughes, at one time, agreed to the release of the picture under the title of "The Scar" in certain localities where strenuous objections to the original title were likely to be raised.

During production, Hughes and his assistants were called into frequent conferences with the Studio Relations Committee, presided over by Col. Jason Joy, of the Hays organization. Suggestions to the producer were made on several occasions by this committee, guiding itself by the provisions of the producers' code of ethics.

When the finished production emerged from the studio it was screened for the Studio Relations Committee, which refused to approve it. It was later screened before a group of production executives representing various studios, and an alternative ending, depicting the shooting rather than the hanging of the central character, was evolved shortly afterwards. Thereafter, Howard Hawks, who directed the picture, supervised a cutting of the version resulting, and this version was later cut out again by Lewis Milestone. General release of the picture followed with submission to censor boards and the present impasse resulting with five out of the six state boards, and replicas of these situations before numerous smaller, local boards.

Lord's Day Alliance Agent Is Arrested for Extortion

Cornelius D. McNerny, who claims to be a representative of the Lord's Day Alliance, national organization, was arrested last week at the office of Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, who complained that McNerny attempted to extort money as protection for overlooking offenses against the Sunday closing law for theatres.

Police, notified of McNerny's intention of calling upon O'Reilly, set a trap in the form of a well-placed dictaphone and five marked $20 bills. McNerny's proposed deal with O'Reilly was noted by a police stenographer and the bills were part of an initial payment, arranged by the police and O'Reilly. Reverend H. L. Bowlby, general secretary of the Alliance, said McNerny, as chief enforcement agent, had the "moral support" of the organization. The New York state branch of the Alliance has broken from the national organization.

Gigli, Opera Star, Reported Offered Contract by Publix

Beniamino Gigli, whose refusal to accept a salary cut as a Metropolitan Opera star has brought a definite rebuke from his fellow-artists, is reported about to sign for a series of appearances in Publix theatres. The deal is said to call for 20 weeks at a reported salary of $7,000 per week. He received $100,000 a year at the Metropolitan.

The William Morris Agency is said to have handled the offer, though the National Broadcasting Company Artists Service is Gigli's official manager. William Morris is said to have admitted that negotiations are in progress.

Six Plays Are Commented Upon by Critic and Essayist in Seventh Article on Film Values

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

TAKE MY TIP

"Take My Tip," by Nat. N. Dorfman, has a full-sized and persistent picture-click in it.

It is the first of the Depression plays. There is a chance here to put into it—in the filming—the whole ghastly picture of that fatal Thursday in October, 1929, when billions of stocks and securities went to the cellar and you and I began to buy our apples to sell outside of the banks where we once had deposits.

Here is Henry Merrill, a well-to-do-soap manufacturer of Essex, Conn., who is being roped in by a slicker in the great Triplex Oil Company "boo."

Henry (played by Donald Meek, who always looks and acts like a harried Bunny) digs into the securities of his mother and daughter. In fact, he swipes right and left to make his family and his friends rich. Good old Herb had said in the previous March, "Poverty is over in the United States." Oh, yeah! said the gods.

Well, Henry is receiving the back-slapping of his friends (and a 24-karat Cartier) and all is going as pretty with Triplex as a bootleggers' divvy party when the 'phone rings.

And here is the big scene in this picture-to-be. The 'phone rings. That tinkle is the Great Collapse, not only of Triplex and Mr. Merrill, his family and friends, but of the prosperity of what is called the greatest country in the world.

There are many humorous angles in this play, mainly supplied by the snappy disbelief in Stock Exchange gambling of Henry's mother, the old and cynically wise Mrs. Merrill. It was played to a finish by Helen Lowell.

There is sex-stuff, too. The daughter of Merrill has eloped with a young sap. When they return to get the parental boot or blessing they find that Black Thursday has busted over their honeymoon.

I hear Nat is already steaming Westward Ho! to crochet the scenario.

ANGELINE MOVES IN

"Angeline Moves In" contains some riotous picture possibilities. It might be said to be the theme of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" set to bootleg dialogue.

Angeline (played by Suzanne Caubaye) is a wild French Canadian who arrives in Burlington, Vt., from an establishment in Montreal that is not strictly morally kosher. She gets a job as maid in one of the First Families of this somewhat snappy Vermont city.

Now, Angeline, because of her black-and-gold previous life, has a heart that seeks to burn the very pants off of Hypocrisy. She exposes fraud. She makes two truths grow where before there was a perfect meadow of bull-bull.

Surprise: A rich Montreal lover of Angeline is engaged to the Burlington's First Family's daughter. The latter is herself lallygagging with a Burlington bootlegger.

From this point on whiskey flows like water at a duck's saengerfest. Of course, all winds up well. Certainly, I did not expect another "Hamlet" of Mr. Hale Francisco, the author.

The distinctive acting goes to Suzanne Caubay and Mrs. Jaques Martin as a gossipy New Englander.

This is a farce—and I think Marie Dressler as Angeline could make that camera sit up some.

LAUGHTON GOES PICTURES

A good piece of news from Hollywood is that Charles Laughton has been signed by Paramount.

He is going to do "The Island of Doctor Moreau," by H. G. Wells. This will again test the extraordinary versatility of this amusing actor. Then he is to do a big part in "The Brothers Karamazov," the famous novel of Dostoievsky, "the Dante of the North," as Huneker called him. The latter will be a United production. Both of these productions with Laughton will be waited for by me with the expectancy of a fan.

To have seen Laughton in "Payment Deferred" is never to have forgotten him or the play. And, by the way, why has not this powerful play of Murder and Conscience been snapped up for the screen?

Laughton will always be associated in my mind with "Payment Deferred" as completely as Booth is in Hamlet or O'Neill in Monte Cristo.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

"Foreign Affairs," by Paul Hervey Fox and George Tilton, is a modish, sophisticated comedy, very thin, stage-lifeless and built for what is known as "the carriage trade."

Now, in pictures nearly the whole audience in any picture-house anywhere is "carriage trade." Nothing tickles the crowd like seeing the way the Counts and Countesses and the What-Have-You-Gots of Europe make love and get into and out of sex-scrapes.

"Foreign Affairs" is just that. We are at an inn in the Italian Tyrol on one of those May nights that would melt the frozen glands of a Saint Anthony.

An Italian diplomat and an Italian Countess are passing a delightful illegal honeymoon under the Tyrolese moon. The Countess' husband is on the way, he having got a whiff of her misdoings.

To throw the hub. off of the scent (or whiff) the Countess pretends to make love to a newcomer at the inn, a very rich fellow alias the onion-chewing Osgood Perkins. The diplomat (Henry Hull) takes on the kitchen-wench.

When the husband—one of those chesty and exclusive carriage-trade fellows—arrives he looks the field over and is bought off by the rich guy while the dip, and the Countess look at one another guiltily.

This pure Lubitsch (I'm always handing Lubitsch a nice sophisticated comedy to lure him from the terrible "Broken Lullaby" sort of thing). Dorothy Gish was the countess. She is one of our best comediennes and if she had any imperfections I certainly would keep mum about them.

THE TRUTH ABOUT BLAYDS

O. P. Heggie and Pauline Lord revived A. A. Milne's little satiric masterpiece, "The Truth About Blayds," and it set me thinking why this play has never been done on the talking screen.

To say that it is too literary is all tushy, as John Barrymore says. There is nothing that the talkies cannot handle profitably.

Blayds is the great Victorian poet. On his ninetieth birthday he confesses he is a fraud. The story then goes on to tell us what effect this man has on his heirs and how they contrived to save the Blayds fortune, which really belonged to the real poet.

If pictures are coming of age, here is one to do. And with Heggie there is no question about its amusing quality.

BAD PLAYS AND BAD PICTURES

"How can you sit out so many bad plays and bad pictures?" Don Marquis once asked me as we flung a load of the chortling red down our nullification sluiceways.

"Because," I replied, "I am as thoroughly interested in stupidity as in smartness. When a play or a picture begins to get sick around the gills a sort of glee takes possession of me: I want to stick around to see how rotten it can become. I seldom walk out on a play or picture. I like to observe the technique of the flop. To study the technique of flops is just as important as studying the technique of the sell-out."

Don looked at me out of the corner of his eye and said, "Ben, you can say the most specious things with the most convincing air of any man I know!"

"Whatever is is specious," I came back. "Like plays and pictures, the whole world is merely existing to entertain. That being so, I find bum plays and bum pictures extremely entertaining."

THE CAMERA REPORTS

HONEYMOONING. Fred W. Beetson, vice-president of the Motion Picture Producers Association, and Mrs. Beetson as they set sail, following their marriage, on the City of Los Angeles for Hawaii. Mrs. Beetson is the former Mabel E. Johnston. [Keystone-Underwood]

SIGNING UP. Mary Pickford, in New York, as she enrolled herself as a patron of the performance, on May 22, for the benefit of needy members of the Theatrical Press Representatives of America. Shown with her are Mark A. Luescher and Beauvais Fox of the entertainment committee.

LUNCHEON CHAT. Leslie Howard, stage star, and Vicki Baum, author of "Grand Hotel," meet at the A.M.P.A. quarters. This was shortly before Howard was scheduled soon to leave for the RKO Radio studios to co-star with Ann Harding in "The Animal Kingdom," his latest stage vehicle.

REVERIE. An interlude, as it were, in a Norma Shearer day. This is a new portrait of the M-G-M star, representing a study of her as she appears in the M-G-M screen version of the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Guild success, "Strange Interlude." The production is under the direction of R. Z. Leonard.

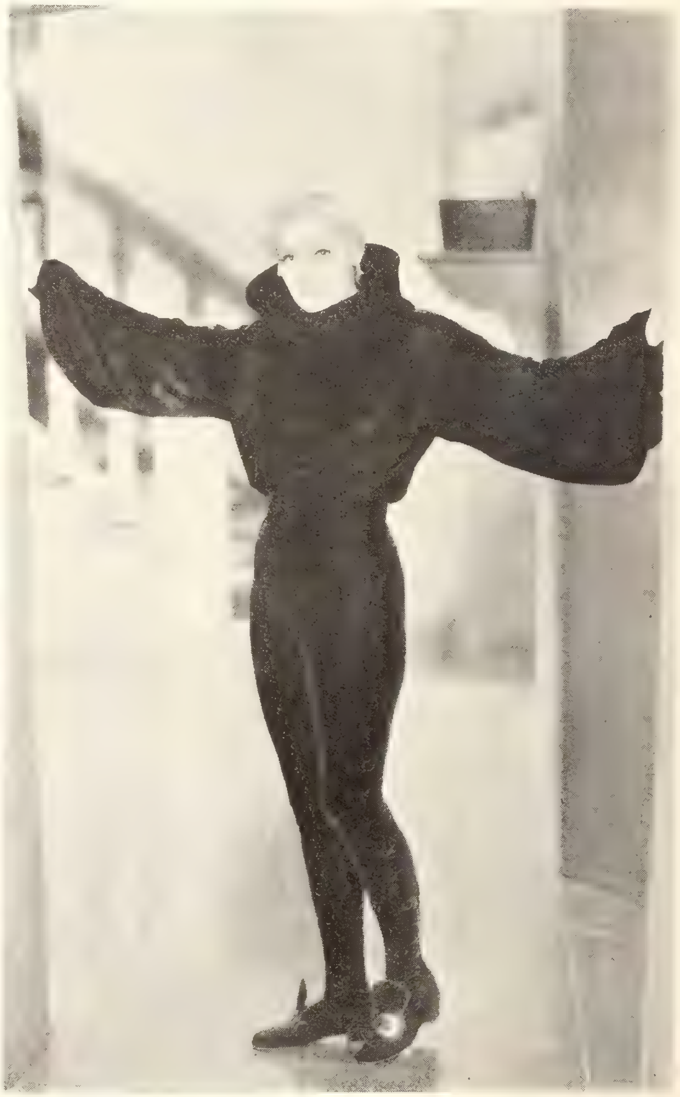
BACK. (Left) A favorite of the screen in the silent picture, who returned to show promise in the talking film only to be thwarted by illness. Lila Lee as she appears today, ready to resume her comeback in Universal's picture, "Radio Patrol."

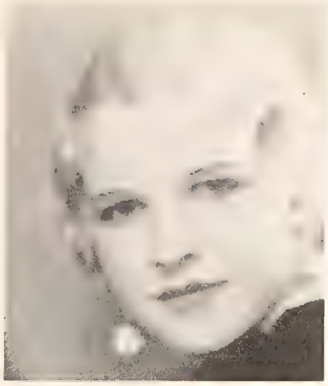
CANDIDATE. (Right) Lilyan Sabalis, who has appeared in Warner and Paramount pictures, and more recently in the revue, "The Laugh Parade." Miss Sabalis has been chosen as the candidate of a New York hotel in a Knights of Columbus contest.

CAMERA TEST. Not for Mother; indeed no! For she is Bessie Love, prominent screen personality for lo, these many years. After returning to the screen to score success in M-G-M sound product, Miss Love has been noticeably absent. Here is the reason: Miss Patricia Hawks, aged five weeks.

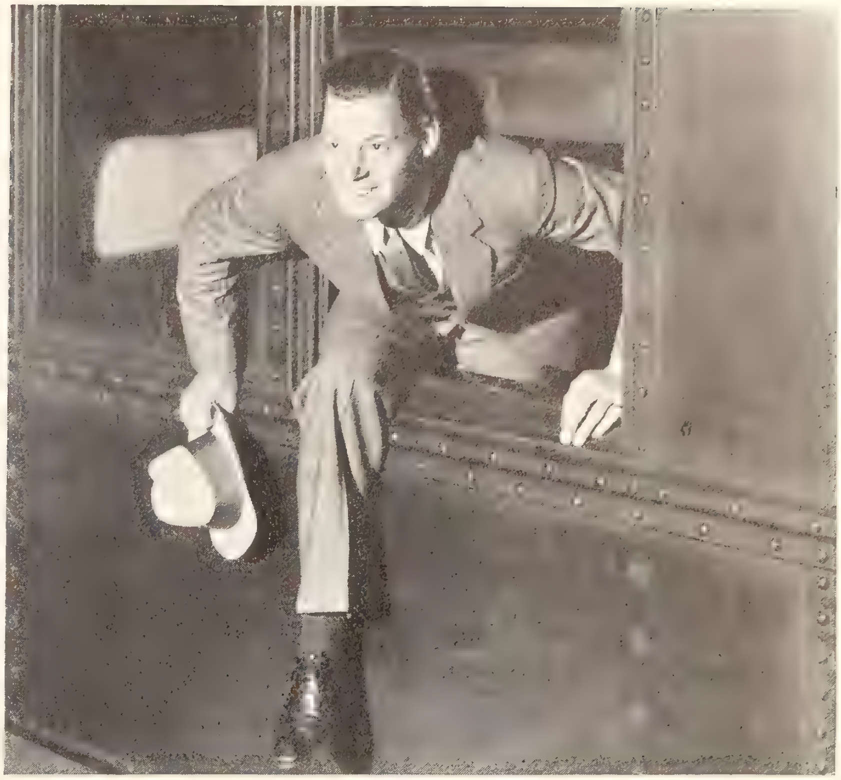


BIZARRE. A strange and fascinating costume, cut to enwrap (in a measure, to express) La Garbo. In this study of the M-G-M star, made rather impromptu on the set, she is shown as she appears in her latest production, "As You Desire Me."

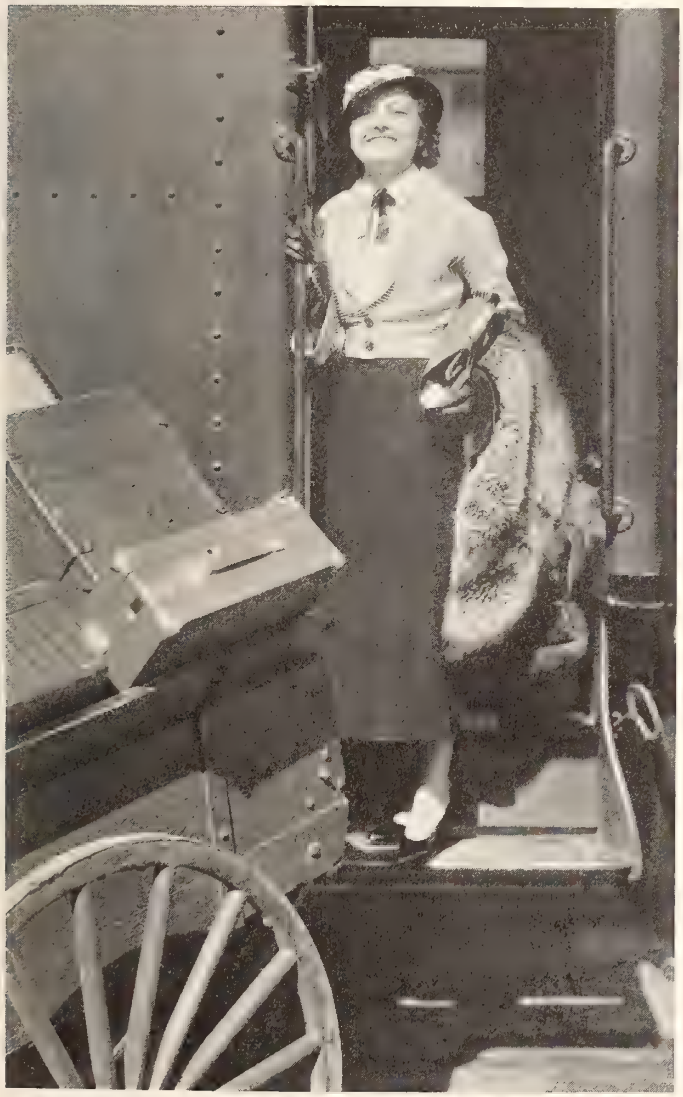
SIGNED. (Right) Irene Ware, luminary of several Earl Carroll stage productions, who has been signed by Fox. Engagement by Carroll followed her winning, in 1929 as Irene Ahlberg, the title of "Miss America." She has already left for Hollywood.



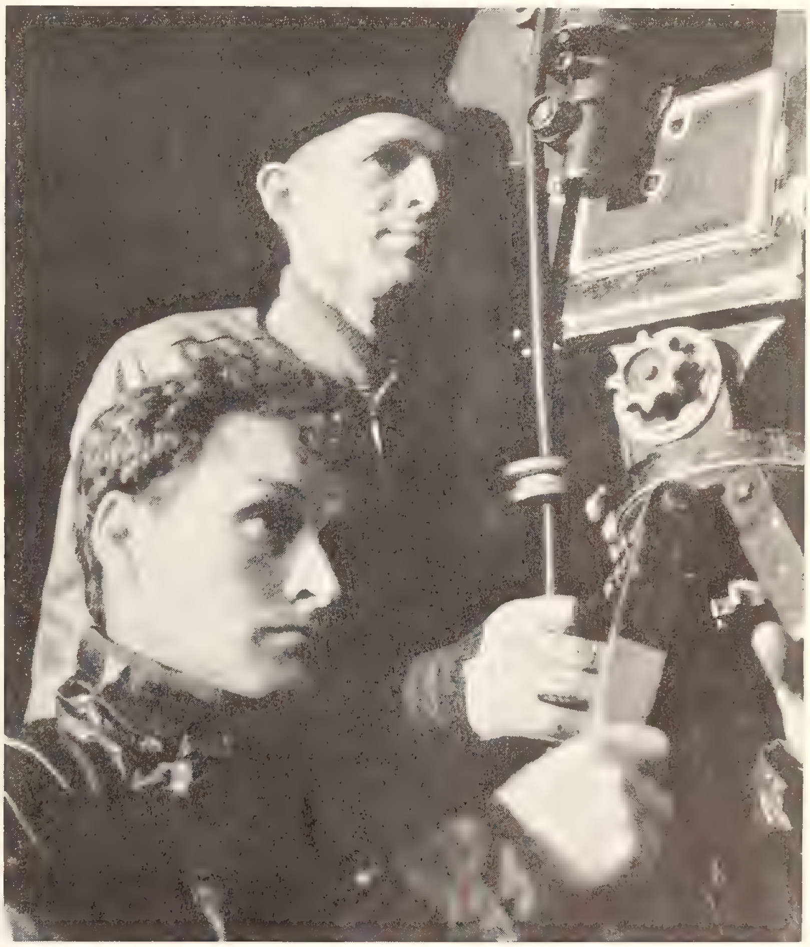
STUDY. (Left) But not altogether a dark study, as is indicated by the bit of coiffure that the picture-maker has allowed us to see. She is Miriam Seegar, soon to be seen as "the girl" in "Strangers of the Evening," Tiffany production recently completed.



JUNGLE STYLE. It's a habit now, apparently, since those many weeks as Mr. Tarzan of Africa. At any rate, this is how Johnnie Weismuller, premier aquarian and star of M-G-M's "Tarzan," came into New York the other day, to begin a tour of Eastern theatres making personal appearances in connection with that picture.



BAG AND BAGGAGE. As Zita Johann, Hungarian actress, arrived the other day in Hollywood to begin her career in American pictures. Miss Johann was imported from Hungary by Warner Brothers to appear opposite Edward G. Robinson in "Tiger Shark."



CREATION. A striking camera study of a director and his cameraman as they work intently on the recording of a motion picture scene. This photograph was made by Ferenc at the Warner Brothers studio, without the previous knowledge of the subjects, who are William A. Wellman and Sid Hickox.

UNIFIED EXPLOITING OF FILMS PROPOSED

Lester Martin of Nebraska-Iowa Allied Proposes Centralized Bureau to Promote Interest and Effect Economy

Centralized exploitation by all producing companies, as a constructive step toward restoration of business interest in the motion picture theatre, as well as to effect economies of distribution operation, is proposed in a letter to MOTION PICTURE HERALD by Lester F. Martin of Nevada, Iowa, secretary-treasurer of Allied Theatre Owners of Nebraska and Iowa.

Pointing out that in the territory which he represents "it is still obvious that at the right prices, and with any degree of showmanship, exhibitors are getting business," Martin says that some such plan should effect economy in the distribution of accessories and "make possible an organization of trained specialists in publicity promotion on all kinds and types of pictures."

Warns of "Stereotyping"

"It has seemed to me for a long while," he writes, "that the prices of accessories are entirely out of line with their actual worth, largely occasioned by the expensive method of distribution and the lack of efficiency in the method by which these accessories are handled."

Martin warns that there should be no centralized stereotyped form of exploiting pictures, "but there should be a centralized bureau for distributing this advertising and stimulating exhibitor action." He adds that he would welcome the opportunity of making a test of such a bureau within the exhibitor organization of which he is an officer, for enlargement of the plan should it prove successful there.

He suggests, as to operation, that there be a centralized distributing point or shipping facilities in each film center, also a selling office with a booker and a shipping point with a centralized paper exchange, printing, distributing and selling promotion ideas.

Special Mailings Suggested

"The trouble with the average independent exhibitor today," he writes, "is that he can go to a disinterested party and secure promotion ideas. Furthermore, it looks to me as though the industry is coupled with a lot of needless shackles of expense, with expensive exchanges necessitating high rent because of fire hazards, and poster exchanges that are losing money.

"The majority of poster exchanges operate in an unbusinesslike manner, and do not exploit the merchandise that they have to offer. A central bureau could maintain special mailings, and a special exploitation department, not to be forced upon exhibitors, but available at their request.

"In the poster exchange departments in every film center that I am personally acquainted with, press books are furnished, mats are furnished, and the usual accessories, but there is a punch lacking."

OPERA NOISIER THAN SUBWAY, TEST SHOWS

That operatic music can produce more noise than the New York subway was demonstrated in tests made with electric noise recording apparatus during a benefit performance of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

The tests also revealed that Beniamino Gigli, tenor, could attain a voice intensity 22 units noisier than a street car's, and that Lily Pons' voice was capable of besting a moderately noisy street car's clamor by 20 units. Interims of applause and between acts noises were considerably higher than those of an ordinary street during day time.

The tests were made during a performance of "Rigoletto." Gigli's voice intensity was recorded at 77 decibels twice during the performance, and Mme. Pons registered 75 decibels. This compares with 65 decibels for a streetcar and 40 for ordinary daytime street noises. During the overture, the orchestra registered 96 decibels, as compared with the subway's 95. Applause registered 80 decibels, and between the acts noises registered 55.

The apparatus used was that employed to measure ordinary everyday noises. The tests were made by M. S. Mead of the General Electric Company, who admitted that nothing of practical value was expected from the experiment.

Producer-Writer Agreement Goes Into Effect on Coast

An agreement between film producers and screen writers on the Coast went into effect on May 1, after the Code of Practice, as it is known, was approved at a meeting April 25. Committees representing the writers and producers in the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences drew up the code of relations.

Responsibility for the administration of the agreement has been placed in the hands of Lester Cowan, Academy executive secretary. The pact would eliminate the practice of some studios in ordering stories from established writers, payment contingent upon acceptance; agreement that free lance authors must give and receive one week's notice of the termination of employment. Disputes are to be arbitrated by the Academy conciliation committee.

Moves Kansas City Offices

Fox Midwest Theatres, Kansas City, plans to remove its offices some time this month from the Midland Building to the Plaza Theatre Building, far removed from the film section of the city.

Technicolor Net Profit During 1931 Reaches $37,986

Technicolor, Inc., and subsidiaries, in a financial report just issued, shows net profit of $37,986.45 for the year ended December 31, 1931, which is noted as "after capitalizing expenditure of $180,485.15, deemed to be research, development and patent costs." Net sales reached a total of $1,164,666.19, with cost of sales, including $25,292.96 for amortization of research, development and patents, set at $1,374,022.99, leaving loss of 209,356.80. ### Brooklyn Exhibitors Plan Fight Against Triple Bills

Brooklyn exhibitors plan active protest against the policy of triple featuring, which is being followed by some local exhibitors, who present the third feature on Friday nights, showing the picture scheduled to go on Saturday at the end of the regular double bill performance.

Theatre owners say they have been hard hit by the practice, and all efforts to counteract the condition have been useless. A round table discussion with circuit heads is seen as the only way out of the difficulty.

To Operate for Skouras

Frank Newman, personal representative of Spyros Skouras, arrives in Seattle this week, probably to make his headquarters, from there to direct operations of the Fox theatres in Washington, Oregon and Montana, in association with Robert Frost, Pacific Northwest division manager. Skouras himself is due in New York from Pittsburgh on Thursday. George Skouras and Eddie Peshay are in Syracuse.

COASTS MUST COOPERATE: KENT; FEWER, BETTER FILMS: LIGHTMAN

President of Fox and Head of M.P.T.O.A. Address Academy; Speakers Agree Production Must Be Aimed at Masses

Kent Declares More Roadshows Are Needed; Lightman Warns of Overseating and "Shorts Ground Out Like Sausages"

WHAT THEY SAID

SIDNEY R. KENT

"New York and Hollywood must work closer as a unit and must face the issue at stake on an even balance."

"New York has made as many mistakes as Hollywood, but it took a depression to bring them together."

M. A. LIGHTMAN

"Give us fewer pictures, if you please, but give us good ones."

"You can't grind out shorts like so many sausages."

---

A note of necessary cooperation among the production, distribution and exhibition forces of the motion picture industry was struck at Hollywood Monday night when Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, and M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, addressed a meeting of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel.

Kent made the emphatic point that Hollywood and New York must improve its coordination and cease transferring the blame for the other's mistake.

Lightman insisted that necessary economy must work both ways. More theatres must close, he said, and pooling in centers where possible must be effected. Producers must make fewer and better pictures to conform with the demand, he contended. Films must appeal to the masses to be successful, he said.

Kent said pointedly: "New York and Hollywood must work closer as a unit and must face the issue at stake on an even balance. The East and the West, instead of blaming each other for the wrong moves, should cooperate more. New York has made as many mistakes as Hollywood, but it took a depression to bring them together."

Commends the Academy

Kent commended the Academy for the move it had taken in trying to solve industry problems by the forum medium. He said much can be gained this way. As for politics, he told the members to lay off certain persons who should be wiped out of the business. He told them to work above board and avoid suspicious persons. He stressed the importance of Conrad Nagel's speech at Washington.

"I had the toughest job ahead of me when I joined Fox, but I am an optimist. This industry is about to get a physic and when it does it will be a good job. There are people who are looking for miracles without trying to solve the problem. It does not happen this way," he said. "It will take from three to five years of struggling to get this business back to normalcy. Some persons say it will return to normalcy August 1, but this isn't so. It will take longer than that, or rather three to four years, at least.

"The picture business is its own enemy. Good pictures made at the right price find a market, despite depression. It is unlike the motor business where manufacturers of Rolls Royces have to deal with special classes. Films are within the means of the masses and the masses will go for good pictures.

"I believe very strongly that this business needs more leaders," the Fox president stated. "There are a few smart ones in this business, but we still lack leadership."

Kent declared that the next four months with box-office grosses going lower and lower will bring on a crisis. He said we must work our way out of this chaotic condition by hard work and cooperation.

Discussing the European situation, he said the depreciation in currency abroad has affected the picture business very much. Where the industry could get $20,000,000, it now can get only $14,000,000. On top of this deflation, sound pictures do not gross as much as silent pictures, he said.

Many de luxe palaces in the United States are now tombstones, he said. The business is overstandardized and we must break away from too much standardization in making films. They should be different and not in cycles.

"More roadshows are needed today," Kent stated. "About 40 big pictures are turned out every year and this number should be increased. Each one should have special exploitation campaigns to get the people back into the theatre. Pictures must not be made especially designed for Broadway, but for the smaller exhibitor. Personalities must appear in them so that they can be sold to the public. When the first-runs get through with them, their advertising and publicity campaigns should help the small exhibitor profit by the pictures they play down the line.

Urges More Roadshows

"More manpower is needed in the business. It will be recognized when it asserts itself. Too much politics dominates the business today and, instead, the doors should be open for people who should be given a chance."

Across-table discussions and exchange of ideas in studios is necessary, Kent said. "I have been here a short time and have already solved big problems by talking across the table.

"I find that politics is causing much discontent in the studios and there is much underhandedness which must be eliminated. This in time will be abolished."

Kent agreed with Lightman that it was essential to try and give the public what it wants, that it is the masses we are serving and not the select few. Pictures are not made for Broadway, but for the masses, he said.

In concluding his speech, Kent touched on the policy of Fox, stating that: "I am going to place the best of my ability to making Fox the outstanding unit in the business. I will put character into it by obligating my employees to put everything they have into their work and this can only be accomplished when you meet on an equal footing across the table and everything above board."

Too Many Films, Says Lightman

Striking the keynote that pictures are made to serve patrons who pay admission prices at neighborhood theatres and what they want they go to see regardless of the cost, Lightman told the Academy members that films had to appeal to the masses in order to be successful.

"I want you to listen to some of the people as they come out of the theatre and hear their comments. Surely this is a fair cross-section of our theatre-going public. It would be presumptuous on my part, to say the least, were I to assume that I could come before you and tell you how to run this business—how to make all box-office attractions—exactly what the fickle public wants—and how it should be done—indeed, if I were able to do that I would apply for the jobs of Ernst Lubitsch, Conrad Nagel and Sidney Kent all at once.

"But I think it quite reasonable to assume that a progressive exhibitor does have the advantage of studying his audiences and that should qualify him to at least attempt to.

"What the public wants today is sincerity—not necessarily brutal naturalism, but not sentimental trash. It wants human stories told sincerely and artistically, directed by strong honest forces that can feel and live the parts of all the characters and can thus inspire convincing interpretations. Heretofore you have been required to grind out films, so many feet of celluloid per year—600, 700, 800 features—working on definite numerical schedules—strictly a commercial yardstick to measure art, temperament, genius. A sculptor interprets his emotions when he is inspired. A composer or author works only when in the proper mood and so it is with all other creators of art, but a motion picture director is told to grind out 40, 50, even 70 features per year, so many per month with mathematical precision—numerical exactness in wholesale quantities.

"Geared Up All Wrong"

"I contend that we are geared up all wrong. The statement that I am about to make may bring the 'wrath of the gods' upon my head, but I firmly believe that that system should be changed. I believe that it is quality and not quantity that we must have if we are to attain our position as an artistic and educational force in the world. There is no further place for mediocre pictures. Give us fewer pictures, if you please, but give us only good ones. Protests will no doubt arise, asserting that this would cause a shortage of pictures. I do not care to bore you with statistics, but suffice it to say that the sooner the exhibitors of America realize that one of our present evils is overseating and that many theatres must close, the sooner we can re-establish security and efficient operation.

"Further, I might add that it is far wiser to play worthwhile productions for longer runs than to pull them in order to make place for mediocre films. I might be so bold as to advocate that some theatres in many communities, now liabilities, should close part time and should exhibit only outstanding photoplays.

"Proper casting is most important to the success of a good story and I cannot emphasize too much the value of the so-called minor parts. Many of you probably do not realize how deeply the supporting characters endear themselves to the heart of the public.

"Contrary to the generally accepted idea, in my opinion it would be well for important stars to appear frequently in supporting roles especially suited to their talents.

"We are getting twice as many shorts now as we need. You can't grind them out like so many sausages. You can't make good shorts with a yardstick any more than you can features. Again quality must prevail. We want far fewer shows, but good ones."

6 INDEPENDENT UNITS QUIT MONOPOLY SUIT

Other Exhibitors Object to Inclusion with Plaintiffs in Action Against Circuits, Distributors and Cleveland Film Board

Six independent theatre enterprises at Cleveland, contending that they never agreed to participate in the monopoly suit being pressed against circuits, distributors and the Cleveland Film Board of Trade in U. S. District Court at Cleveland, have made application to the federal court to withdraw their names as plaintiffs. According to Cleveland reports, other independent exhibitors there are voicing objections to the use of their names as plaintiffs, declaring such use was not authorized.

Samuel Horwitz, of the Cleveland law firm of Stanley, Horwitz & Kiefer, representing the plaintiffs in the monopoly action, left New York early this week when the taking of testimony by deposition was deferred until next week. Efforts to settle the case out of court also were suspended until next week.

Exhibitor Association Withdraws

The move of the independent exhibitors to withdraw from the litigation followed the earlier withdrawal of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association as a plaintiff. Federal Judge Jones at Cleveland consented to this withdrawal on the grounds that the association, as such, had no interest involved other than in its capacity as representative of exhibitor members. Inasmuch as the Cleveland Association is not incorporated, all obligations of the suit fall upon individual members.

When this became known, the Ambassador Amusement Company, operating the Ritz and Ambassador theatres; the Mt. Pleasant Company, operating the Waldorf theatre; the Broadview Amusement Company, L. & S. Amusement Company, and the Milo Amusement Company voiced objections to use of their names as plaintiffs, saying they were not authorized.

Maurice Borkowitz, Oscar Stotter and S. Klinger, owners and operators of the Ambassador and Mt. Pleasant Amusement companies, made application to the federal court to withdraw their names as plaintiffs. Ernest Schwartz and B. Levine, operating the other four amusement enterprises, also protested use of their names or those of their companies as party plaintiffs.

Horwitz at Conference

"The producers can sell pictures to whomever they want to sell and under whatever conditions they want to sell them," said Ernest Schwartz, Cleveland attorney and exhibitor, in discussing his objections to use of his name as a plaintiff. "On the other hand, we, as exhibitors, have the privilege of refusing to buy pictures from those companies whose sales policies are objectionable to us."

Samuel Horwitz, attorney for the plaintiff, engaged in taking the depositions of circuit and distributor executives and officials of the Hays organization in New York for the last 10 days, refused to comment on reports that efforts were being made to settle the case out of court.

"I will not discuss any phase of the case," Horwitz said. "The entire subject is a matter for litigation, and not to be discussed outside of court."

However, it is known that Horwitz last Saturday sat in at an all-day roundtable conference with a battery of 11 attorneys representing both complainants and defendants, and, in addition, Col. E. A. Schiller, of Loew's, Inc.; Fred Desberg of Loef's Ohio theatres and other circuit executives involved in the litigation. The purpose of the conferences, which lasted from before noon until past midnight, was to effect an amicable settlement of the case, it was reliably reported.

Deferring of the taking of further testimony in New York by deposition for one week, it is said, was granted for the purpose of permitting the litigants to attempt a settlement out of court.

Follows Protection Dispute

The Cleveland monopoly suit is an outgrowth of a dispute over protection accorded Loew's theatres, and those of other circuits in Cleveland. The action was filed in U. S. district court for the northern district of Ohio, Eastern Division, in January of this year, and attacks block booking, protection and allegedly discriminatory practices in favor of affiliated theatres as contributing to a monopoly in restraint of trade and in violation of the anti-trust laws.

Following the filing of the suit, affiliated theatres in Cleveland were placed in the anomalous position of being both plaintiffs and defendants. As members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, they were parties to the suit, but their affiliations with the producers also placed them among the defendants.

The immediate outcome of this situation was the withdrawal of Loew's theatres as members of the Cleveland association. So far as is known, RKO, Publix and Warners theatres have not yet withdrawn from membership, but reports indicate they will do so soon.

Albany Council Votes Sunday Shows Over Clergy's Protest

Despite a storm of protest from religious leaders who claim to represent 90 per cent of Albany's population, the common council on Monday passed a resolution approving Sunday motion picture shows. The approval of Mayor Thacher is all that is needed to legalize the council's action. It is expected that the mayor will conduct a hearing before he approves or vetoes the proposition.

Catholics and Protestant clergy united in protesting the proposition, every Catholic clergyman in Albany signing a petition against the shows. The electrical workers' union and other labor organizations appeared in favor of Sunday shows. The meeting of the council drew one of the largest crowds that had attended similar gatherings in recent years.

Confirm Merger of 3 Coast Circuits

The general consolidation of three large San Francisco neighborhood theatre circuits totaling 62 theatres, valued at approximately $6,000,000, and making the largest circuit of neighborhood houses in California, operating from one central office, has been definitely confirmed.

The three circuits in the deal are Golden State Theatres with 37 units, T. & D. Jr. Circuit with 20 units and the San Francisco Theatres, operated by Sam and Al Levin, with five units. Principal neighborhood theatres of this city, including the Coliseum, Alexandria, Rialto and the recently opened El Rey theatres, are included in the deal. Each of the principals involved will retain its own respective executive heads. The deal is really a working agreement looking toward economy in operation, booking and buying.

The general buying for the 62 units will be done by C. V. Taylor under the direction of Bob McNeil; booking will be done by Ed C. Rowden. All theatres were represented at a joint managers' convention held at the Palace Hotel last week.

Circuits Raise Admissions To Cover New Canadian Tax

May 2 was the starting day for a new era of taxation in Canada. On that day, too, the increased amusement tax schedule became effective in Ontario and various changes in the admission price scale were noted at circuit theatres. Bargain matinee prices at the Imperial, Toronto, for instance, were raised from 25 cents and 35 cents to 30 cents and 40 cents to take care of the new tax. In some other cases with smaller houses, the general admission price of 38 cents plus 2 cents tax became 45 cents, including tax.

The independent theatre owners in Ontario, as a whole, have stuck to their regular prices and have added the tax increase.

Schwartz, Geyer Resign From Paramount Staff

Louis Schwartz, member of the Paramount legal staff for many years, has tendered a "tentative" resignation which may not become effective for six weeks or more, he said. Other resignations included those of O. R. Geyer, head of foreign publicity, Edward Ugast and Samuel Cohen, assistants to Geyer. No successor to Geyer is to be named. J. R. Koerpel, in charge of a Publix theatre operating department, will resign the latter part of May, after which the department will be discontinued.

Helen Kane Sues Fleischer, Paramount on Cartoon Series

Helen Kane, "boop-a-doop" singer, has filed suit in a New York court against Max Fleischer, animated cartoonist, and Paramount Publix, distributor of Fleischer's "Betty Boop" cartoon, for $250,000. Miss Kane asks a permanent injunction restraining both defendants from further producing and exhibiting the "Betty Boop" cartoon, and alleges that drawings bearing a striking resemblance to herself are distributed as advertising matter with the "Betty Boop" films.

THREE DISTRIBUTORS' CONVENTIONS SET STAGE FOR SELLING SEASON

Universal, Monogram and Paramount First Into Action; Better Pictures Will Solve Attendance Problem, Says Laemmle

With national sales conventions of three distributors under way this week, and with three others to be held in the month, the new selling season for at least six large distributors is scheduled to be well advanced by June 1.

Universal, which this year is holding a series of three regional sales meetings, was first of the large companies to convene. Universal's forces gathered May 1 and 2 at the St. Francis hotel, San Francisco. Monogram directors met at the Palmer House, Chicago, May 2 and 3, and Paramount opens its national meeting in the Ambassador, Los Angeles, on Thursday. The latter's convention will be concluded Sunday.

RKO's national sales meeting will be held at the Drake hotel, Chicago, May 16 to 18; Fox's at the Park Central hotel, New York, May 16 to 20, and the first of two Columbia meetings will convene at Atlantic City, May 22 to 25.

Only four large companies have yet to decide on convention dates and cities. They are: Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Warner-First National, United Artists and Educational-Tiffany.

Laemmle Opens "U" Convention

Carl Laemmle, veteran producer and distributor, opened the company's first meeting at San Francisco with an aggressive and optimistic keynote. Serving notice of "an attack on box office depression about to be launched by Universal," Laemmle said: "There is no doubt but what the amusement industry has been hard hit, but there is a way out and Universal hopes to lead the way.

"Better pictures are the only solution of the problem," he said, "and these alone will bring back theatre attendance. Universal is devoting its every energy toward producing exceptional pictures for the new season, and will be guided by a careful study of the public's moods."

Announcement of the company's new product will not be made until after the subsequent sales meetings at Chicago and New York, Laemmle said. The Chicago meeting was to be held Thursday and Friday, at the Drake hotel, and the final meeting, at the Park Central, New York, follows on Sunday and Monday. Laemmle will attend both subsequent meetings, after which he plans to leave immediately for Germany.

More than 40 Universal representatives were in attendance at the San Francisco meeting, including studio and home office executives and officials of six Universal far-western exchanges. The executive list in attendance at the meeting included, in addition to Laemmle, L. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager; E. T. Gomersall, western division manager; Ben H. Grimm, publicity and advertising department, and W. J. Heineman, western district manager. Exchange managers in attendance were: L. J. McGinley, Seattle; Al O'Keefe, Portland; Barney Rose, Denver; Jack Rue, Salt Lake City; R. I. Cadman, Los Angeles, and Kenneth Hodkinson, San Francisco.

Improved Product Noted

Talks of all executives, which were given at closed sessions, maintained the optimistic note struck by Laemmle. New product was referred to as being of "improved quality" and keyed more closely to public tastes than ever before.

The Chicago meeting was to open promptly on Thursday morning with Schlaifer presiding, and Laemmle, Stanley Bergerman, Universal short subjects producer; Frank Mastroly and Jack Ross in attendance, in addition to exchange managers and salesmen from St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Oklahoma City. Approximately 50 company representatives were to be in attendance.

E. A. Golden, Monogram Pictures general sales manager, announced a $2,000,000 sales drive would be launched May 9 and continue to September 9, to be known as "The President's Campaign," in honor of W. Ray Johnston, Monogram president. A field force of 125 men will participate in the drive, Golden said.

Johnston, in the closing sessions of the Chicago meeting of the company's directors, said that sales objectives were being advanced this year due to the encouragement from the success of the first year's operations under which franchise-holders, as a whole, exceeded their quotas.

Film Daily Golf Tourney June 22 at White Plains

Arrangements have been completed for holding the 20th Film Daily Golf Tournament on Wednesday, June 22, at the Fenimore Golf and Country Club, White Plains, N. Y. A banquet will top the event. The committee includes Al Lichtman, Lee A. Ochs, Bruce Gallup, Jack Alicoate, Ed Finney, "Red" Kann and Don Mersereau.

Applications for entry in the tournament are now being received at the offices of The Film Daily, 1650 Broadway. Entrance fee is $10, with application, or $12 if paid at the tournament grounds.

Bagnall Replaces McIntire As Executive at Fox Plant

D. E. McIntire resigned two weeks ago as business manager at the Fox studio on the Coast, and was replaced by George Bagnall, according to W. C. Michel, vice-president, who returned to the home office on Wednesday.

Michel was on the Coast in general supervision of studio operations during the illness of Richard Rowland, vice-president, who has returned to his duties.

Television Still Is Experiment: Sarnoff

Television still remains in an experimental stage and little hope of it being offered to the public on any large scale in the immediate future is held by its proponents, David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, told the annual meeting of RCA stockholders in New York this week. Sarnoff and five other directors whose terms had expired were re-elected.

"To attempt to market television prematurely," Sarnoff said, "would severely retard a development that has great promise and which we expect to grow into a great and widely accepted service. Premature marketing could only result in public disappointment and an immediate loss of sales after the initial impetus. As stated in our annual report," Sarnoff concluded, "television receiving equipment will be offered to the public when our experimentation, which will be continued energetically, has shown that the system of sight transmission having practical value can be assured."

Sarnoff said that "television images which are obscure and difficult to follow could not be expected to sustain public interest over a very long period because the motion picture industry with sound pictures has given the public a high standard of excellence in sight and sound entertainment."

Net income of RCA for the quarter ended March 31, 1932, was $503,223 after depreciation, amortization, taxes, etc., as against $1,566,519 in the first quarter of 1931. Gross income amounted to $20,322,408 for the quarter and other income totaled $262,814. Preferred "A" dividend requirements total $343,019.

Sarnoff stated that "while the amount of profit is modest, it is in excess of requirements for the 'A' preferred dividend declared by directors for the first quarter of 1932. During the final quarter of 1931," he said, "we were in the red, while during the first quarter of 1932 we are in the black."

Loew Earnings Seen Enough For Half to Meet Dividend

Loew's earnings for the first half of its fiscal year are more than enough to meet the dividend requirements on the common stock for the full year, according to the Dow-Jones financial service. The common stock is now on a $3 basis.

The estimate is after the usual deductions as well as conversion of foreign exchange.

Managers Re-elect Joyce

Frank Joyce has been re-elected president of the Artists' Managers Association at its annual election on the Coast. Other officers are: Eddie Silton, secretary; Morris Small, treasurer. Directors are: Harry Weber, Dave Thompson, Harry Wurtzel, Phil Burg, George Frank.

MINIMUM OF 63 FEATURES PLANNED BY PARAMOUNT, ALSO 120 SHORTS

Stories, Titles and Casts of 43 Features Tentatively Selected, Convention Told; 104 Issues of Newsreel on Schedule

A minimum of 63 feature productions, 120 short subjects and 104 issues of Paramount News will be offered by Paramount Publix during the coming season, the company's annual sales convention, which opened at the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles, on Thursday, was told.

Of the 63 proposed features, the stories, titles and casts for 45 have been tentatively determined. The feature list includes one Harold Lloyd, one with the Four Marx Brothers, three from Marlene Dietrich, and two from Maurice Chevalier. Two specials with casts selected from Paramount's entire star roster are also scheduled. In addition, there are starring vehicles for Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper, Tallulah Bankhead, Fredric March, Sylvia Sidney, Richard Arlen, Miriam Hopkins, Claudette Colbert, Richard Bennett, Carole Lombard and others.

Hinge on Dietrich Settlement

The three Marlene Dietrich pictures, which are planned as Josef Von Sternberg productions, hinge upon an amicable settlement of the current differences between the star and director, on the one hand, and Paramount on the other. No provision is made in the tentative lineup for any roles for Nancy Carroll, who is also a current subject of contract discussion at Paramount.

Story material includes such titles as "A Farewell to Arms," "The Mirrors of Washington," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and "Madame Butterfly."

Titles and casts tentatively decided upon follow:

"Movie Crazy," with Harold Lloyd; "Horse Feathers," with the Four Marx Brothers; "Blonde Venus," "Deep Night" and "Promised," with Marlene Dietrich; "Love Me Tonight" and "The Way to Love," with Maurice Chevalier; "Madame Butterfly," with Sylvia Sidney and Gary Cooper; "Not Married," with Miriam Hopkins, to be directed by Ernst Lubitsch; "Anything for Sale," with Sylvia Sidney and Richard Bennett.

"Lives of a Bengal Lancer," with Clive Brook; "The Sons of the Eagle," with an all-star cast selected from the entire Paramount roster; "If I Had a Million," with a similar multi-star cast; "The West Pointer," with Cary Grant; "The Girl Without a Room" (cast not set); "A Farewell to Arms," with Fredric March and Claudette Colbert; "The Glass Key," with Carole Lombard; "The Phantom President" (no cast selected).

"Blood and Sand," with Tallulah Bankhead and Cary Grant; "I Can't Go Home" (cast not chosen); "R. U. R.," with Sylvia Sidney and Fredric March; "The Mirrors of Washington," with Tallulah Bankhead and Gary Cooper; a Helen Hayes starring vehicle, title not chosen; "The Trouble with Women," with Mary Boland; "Lone Cowboy," with Randolph Scott and Frances Dee; "Hot Ice," with Richard Arlen; "Connecting Rooms" (cast not chosen); "The Lusitania Secret," with Claudette Colbert and Randolph Scott; "The Crime of the Century," (cast not chosen); "The Song of Songs," with Miriam Hopkins and Herbert Marshall; "No Bed of Her Own," with George Raft and Adrianne Allen; "The Island of Lost Souls" (cast not chosen).

"Pick Up," with Carole Lombard; "The Red Temptation," (cast not chosen); "The Sign of the Cross," with Adrienne Allen, Charles Starrett and Charles Laughton, to be directed by Cecil B. DeMille; "Hot Saturday," with Carole Lombard; "Fires of Spring," with Claudette Colbert and Fredric March; "Madison Square Garden," (cast not chosen); "The Big Broadcast," with Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin and Lyda Roberti; "Riddle Me This," (cast not chosen); "Dream Without Ending," (cast not chosen); "70,000 Witnesses," football drama, (cast not chosen); and the following three outdoor specials with John Mack Brown: "The Vanishing Frontier," "Swanee Rides West" and "Under Desert Stars."

Additional Product

In addition to the 104 scheduled newsreel releases, Paramount will offer 18 Screen Songs, 18 Betty Boop cartoons, 13 Paramount Pictorials, 13 Screen Souvenirs, 13 Grantland Rice Sports-Eye Views, 13 Hollywood on Parade, 13 Paramount Headliners, and two series of Mack Sennett two-reel comedies. The first of the Sennett series will consist of 12 Star Comedies, featuring Andy Clyde and Charlie Murray, and the second series will consist of an as yet undetermined number of two-reel comedies featuring a half dozen outstanding comedy players.

The company's convention, which was attended by virtually all ranking home office executives of both the distribution and theatre departments in addition to national field sales staffs, was scheduled to be concluded Sunday.

Chicago SMPE Sees Air Film At Its Regular May Meeting

The Chicago section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is holding its May meeting on Thursday of this week. Among the films which were to be shown at the meeting was that produced by Baron C. Shiba, head of the Aeronautical Research Institute of the Tokyo Imperial University. The other films are of a medical and scientific nature.

MPTA Cuts Convention Fee

The MPTA of Kansas and Missouri has insured a large attendance at the annual convention in Topeka, Kan., May 25 and 26, by reducing the registration fee from $5 to $2.50.

Monogram's New Program Now Set; Sales Drive Ready

Monogram Pictures, at its convention in Chicago this week, announced a 1932-33 schedule of 32 features, to be divided into 16 special de luxe films and 16 action dramas. The program is noted as "Monogram's Magnetic 32." W. Ray Johnston, president, acted as chairman of the meeting and announced the program.

Collaborating on the schedule will be: M. H. Hoffman, C. C. Burr, I. E. Chadwick, Trem Carr, Christy Cabanne, Otto Brewer, Louis King, Karl Brown, Harry Frazer, as producers and directors. Rex Bell will be starred in eight stunt pictures.

The lineup includes: "God's Country," by James Oliver Curwood; "The Thirteenth Guest," novel by Armitage Trail; "Jungle Bride," by Harvey Wilkson; "Man's Law," by Peter B. Kyne; "The Ape," stage play by Adam Hull Shirk; "The Girl from Calgary," by James Oliver Curwood; "Black Beauty," by Anna Sewell; "West of Singapore," by E. Morton Hough; "Hell's Highway," by Eleanor Welty; "The Wayne Murder Case," by Arthur Hoerl; "The Return of Casey Jones"; "Devil's Mate," by Joseph Allaire Kehoe; "Guilty or Not Guilty," by Arnold Stimson; "A Strange Adventure," by E. Morton Hough; "The Fire Patrol," by Raymond C. Ray, and one special. Trem Carr, production head, is now negotiating for Norma Talmadge to play the lead in this production.

The "sales strategy board" of Monogram took up the question of the forthcoming sales campaign, advertising, bonuses and prize contests and laid out an advertising campaign for the new sales drive which is to start on May 9. Delegates of the sales staff, and the branch managers were instructed in the use of all campaign material. Prizes will be offered between the American and British branches for leaders during different stages of the sales drive. Reginald Smith, managing director of P.D.C., London, is cooperating with Johnston in working out the distribution of quotas and prizes. To further complete details of these arrangements, Smith, accompanied by Arthur Levey, Monogram associate in London, will leave for the United States on May 22 to collaborate in the drive.

The first drive, which is to be called "The President's Campaign," in honor of Johnston, will be from May 9 to September 9, and a quota of $500,000 monthly or $2,000,000 in contracts between the American and British offices has been set by sales manager Eddie Golden as the goal of the first stage in the campaign. Including the district managers and branch managers, a total sales force of 125 will be in the field on May 9, Golden states. These will be scattered among the 33 Monogram branches and do not include the force employed by P.D.C. in London.

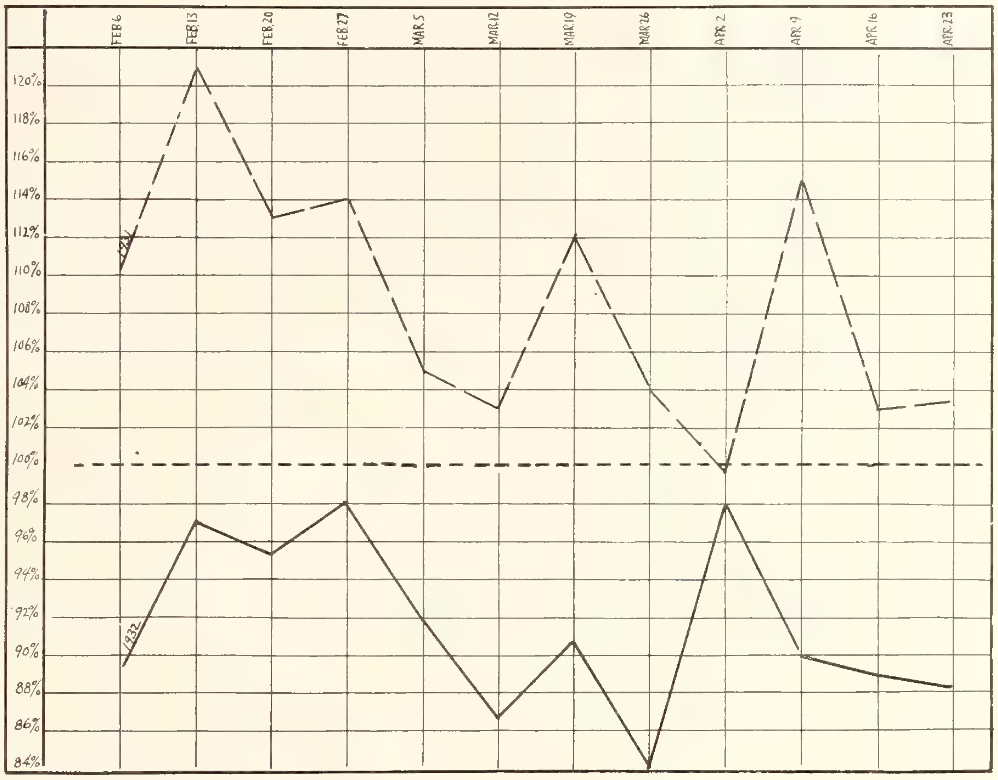
SENATE COMMITTEE ASKS A LIMIT OF 44 CENTS ON TAX EXEMPTION

Admission Levy, Football of Revenue Bill, Changed from 45-Cent Exemption of House by the Finance Committee

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Faced with the need of developing every possible means of revenue, in its effort to write a tax bill which will raise more than $1,000,000,000 without incorporating many of the ill-advised levies of the House of Representatives, the Senate finance committee at Washington this week fixed the exemption maximum from the 10 per cent admission tax at 44 cents. This reduction from the House exemption of 45 cents is expected to bring into the tax-paying fold many theatres which otherwise would have dropped their admission price to that figure, particularly among the group now operating on a 50-cent admission basis.

The action of the Senate committee was taken in the face of a strong plea from the theatrical industry for either entire elimination of the admission tax on tickets selling at less than $3 or an exemption of at least 50 cents. At the hearings before the committee, representatives of the legitimate and film theatres, actors, musicians, scenic artists and others pleaded for an upward revision of the exemption in order that the amusement industry might not be seriously affected.



The graph, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S compilations of box office receipts, shows a comparison of the intake nationally for twelve weeks in 1931 and 1932. The 100 per cent broken line represents average receipts during the entire year 1931.

Sympathy with Industry Expressed

Members of the committee, irrespective of party affiliation, expressed sympathy with the plight of the theatre. It was pointed out, however, that the money must be raised to balance the budget and that, industries able to bear taxation being few and far between, it would be extremely difficult to find other sources of revenue if the admission tax was eliminated.

At the same time, it was pointed out, the Treasury has been steadfast in its recommendation that admissions in excess of 10 cents be taxed, and members of the committee were represented as believing it a generous action to give the industry a 44-cent exemption in the face of the pressure which has been brought to bear for a number of taxes to which the committee would not bind itself.

The admission tax has been more of a football than any other item in the revenue bill except taxes on imports. An exemption of 10 cents was recommended by the Treasury department when revenue revision was first suggested to Congress by President Hoover last December; a 24-cent exemption was recommended in the report of the ways and means committee of the House, and a 45-cent exemption was carried in the House bill when it was sent to the Senate. It is not believed that the finance committee's recommendation of 44 cents will be disturbed by the Senate if carried in the bill which will be reported within the next few days, and final decision as to whether the exemption shall be 44 or 45 cents will be left to the conference committee of the two houses which will have the task of ironing out the differences.

Other drastic changes affecting all lines of business were also made by the finance committee. Normal individual income tax rates in the Senate bill will be approximately double those now in force, the committee having agreed upon levies of 3 per cent on the first $4,000 of net income, 6 per cent on the next $4,000 and 9 per cent on income in excess of $8,000. The present rates are 1½, 3 and 5 per cent, and the House bill carried rates of 2, 4 and 7 per cent.

The committee approved the House's action in reducing exemptions from $3,500 to $2,500 for heads of families and [illegible]00 to $1,000 for single persons, and cutting the deduction for earned income to 12½ per cent. Surtax rates in the Senate bill, however, will have a maximum of 45 per cent, against the House bill maximum of 40 per cent and the present top of 20 per cent.

The corporation income tax rate, now 12 per cent, is fixed by the committee at 14 per cent, instead of the 13½ per cent provided in the House bill, but the House penalty of 1½ per cent for consolidated returns has been rejected, and an exemption of $1,000 provided for corporations with incomes not in excess of $10,000.

The Senate committee materially modified the House provisions for sales and stamp taxes which, with the taxes on imported oil, coal, copper and lumber, have been the most controversial points of the measure.

A favorable report on legislation recently passed by the House, making alien actors subject to the contract labor provisions of the immigration law, was also prepared this week by the Senate, through its immigration committee.

The committee, however, has amended the bill so as to permit the entry into the United States of alien actors needed in the production of films for export when required to take parts which cannot be adequately filled by such American actors as may be unemployed.

This concession is confined to export and was made as a result of representations that it is frequently difficult to obtain from among America's own actors, artists who can meet the language or other requirements of particular foreign markets for which American producers are making pictures.

Pathe Suing Union and Firm For Infringement on Product

Pathe Exchange, Inc., is bringing suit for infringement of copyright against the New York operators' union, Local 306; Sam Kaplan, its president, and the City Amusement Company. Suit is based on the open air exhibition of the company's pictures at several points in Manhattan and the Bronx.

Pathe is asking at least $250 for each alleged unauthorized exhibition. The open air shows are said to have been established following a dispute between the union and Springer-Cocalis circuit, in the vicinity of whose houses the shows are being held.

FRANKLIN LAUNCHES NEW CIRCUIT SETUP

Six Divisions of RKO Theatres Will Each Have a Director, with Franklin Directly in Charge of Operations

The board of directors of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation met on Wednesday in New York in their first meeting since M. H. Aylesworth was elected president in mid-April. Ordinary business routine was taken up. Harold B. Franklin and Joseph Plunkett of the theatre division were scheduled to leave for the Coast immediately after the session.

Reorganization of the theatre department of RKO this week into six divisions with a director at the head of each and an operating "cabinet" of home office executives which will meet daily in New York to consider business and policy affairs as they develop, brought about what is expected to be the final step in the revamping of Radio's various motion picture interests. Distribution, home office, production and exhibition were taken in order for reorganization by the Radio interests, following a physical merging of Radio Pictures and Pathe last year.

The divisional plan for the theatre department had been expected and was announced early in the week by Harold B. Franklin, president of the theatre subsidiaries, who will direct the operation of all RKO houses.

Franklin Head of Operations

The new theatre organization setup stems from the board of directors of the theatre companies, of which Aylesworth is chairman. Franklin is the direct head of operations, working with Joseph Plunkett as vice-president and Herschel Stuart, in charge of field operations. Stuart's headquarters will be in New York.

The six divisional directors are Nate Blumberg, whose territory takes in Greater New York, New York State, New Jersey and Washington, D. C.; Asher Levy, with headquarters in Chicago and with supervision over the Omaha division; Harry MacDonald, New England; Charles Koerner, Southern; Cliff Work on the Coast, with San Francisco and the Northwest under his supervision, and Nat Holt in charge of the Middlewest, embracing the Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit divisions. The subdivisions of the New York territory have H. R. Emde as division manager of Greater New York; Joe Lee in a similar position for Brooklyn; Lou Golding for New York State and J. M. Brennan for New Jersey and Washington.

The Central division has supervision over Omaha, where Morgan Ames is division manager. Harry MacDonald, divisional director for New England, has no subdivisions within his sphere. Neither has Charles Koerner, Southern division director with headquarters at Dallas. Cliff Work, director of the Coast territory, has San Francisco, where Len Brown is division manager, and the Northwest, where Homer Gill occupies a similar position, in his charge. Nat Holt, divisional director of the Middlewest, will supervise Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit, where J. E. Firnkoess, I. Libson and Arthur Frudenfeld, respectively, are division managers.

New York operations center about the operating "cabinet" which meets daily. These meetings, presided over by Franklin, include Martin Beck, in charge of vaudeville; Joseph Plunkett, vice-president; Herschel Stuart, in charge of field operations; Phil Reisman, in charge of film-buying; Herman Zohbel, treasurer of RKO; Robert Sisk, in charge of advertising and publicity; Nate Blumberg, New York divisional director; D. P. Canavan, in charge of the construction and maintenance department; Major L. E. Thompson, in charge of personnel, and Myron Robinson, in charge of real estate. Included, too, in the new setup are William Mallard, legal department; J. M. Maloney, insurance; Dorothy M. Crawford, promotional work through organizations; F. H. White, taxes and assessments, and Bruce Powell, merchandise.

Franklin, describing several phases of the organization, stresses these points:

"In the New York office, duties are specifically allocated and it is the purpose of our daily meetings to maintain contact between departments and, at the same time, abolish overlapping. Already we feel that these meetings have demonstrated their great usefulness.

"We are encouraged concerning the picture product for our theatres. The vaudeville problem is being studied and adjusted and determined efforts are being made to inject new faces and talent into this distinctive branch of RKO entertainment. Economies have been and are being effected. But not one of them is to be classed as a foolish or costly economy. Reports that our advertising budgets are being sliced to the bone are untrue, since RKO is not, at this stage of the game, so optimistic as to attempt the sale of its stage and screen shows without employing that indispensable method."

Terry Turner, head of the RKO theatre advertising department, announced that Harry Mandel, in charge of publicity and advertising of several uptown theatres, will also handle all RKO theatre trailers. Ed Rosenwald has resigned from the business management office of the advertising department. Robert Uliston has been placed in charge of publicity for all Bronx houses, succeeding Joseph Cullen, resigned.

RKO this weekend inaugurates a daylight saving time admission of 65 cents between 6 and 7 p.m. over the circuit.

Bobby Connelly Signed

Aylesworth on Monday announced the engagement of Bobby Connelly, a stage manager and producer of musical comedies, for a new department to be created in line with Beck's plans for assisting in the selection and encouragement of new ideas and new talent for vaudeville.

Mr. Connelly's past activities have had to do with Ziegfeld's "Hot-Cha" and "Follies"; and a number of other stage plays. In London, he was stage director for both Sir Alfred Butt and Moss' Empires. In Paris, he produced Ambassadeurs Revues for several seasons.

Among notables sailing Wednesday night on the Bremen out of New York for Europe were: S. L. Rothafel, who sailed with Martin Beck. They are going abroad for auditions to foreign artists and to arrange for establishment of European offices for Radio City; they are accompanied by Mrs. Rothafel and Mrs. Beck.

Famed Director Dead

Louis Mercanton, who directed "Mothers of France," said to have been the first foreign film exhibited in the United States, died in London this week.

SMPE To Discuss Four Phases of Industry Effort

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at its Spring meeting, scheduled for the Wardman-Park Hotel in Washington, D. C., May 9-12, will cover four phases of the industry: photographic problems, release prints, theatre operations and projection. A complete session will be given to each subject. Notable speakers have been secured for these sessions.

A reduction of the number of papers to be presented has been effected, in order to improve their quality, the Society says. Not more than 35 papers will be read during the meeting. Additional discussion and consideration will be possible through the reduction.

Addressing the meeting at the theatrical session will be M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA; Charles (Chick) Lewis, conducting the Round Table department in MOTION PICTURE HERALD; S. Sumner, Massachusetts exhibitor, and N. Glasser, assistant zone manager for Warner in Washington, D. C. Various types of equipment will be discussed, with particular attention to be paid to 16mm. sound systems.

MPTOAsksMembers About Overselling

The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, has sent out a questionnaire to every exhibitor in the territory. The request is as a result of complaints from exhibitors that oversold film conditions exist.

The questions are as follows:

1. What percentage of your gross receipts do your feature pictures average in cost?
2. Do you feel you are oversold? If so, state by which company and why.
3. Have you been refused any recent requests for adjustment?
4. If you do not obtain a reduction, will you be able to stay open this summer?
5. Do you find the 25-30-35% policy of Metro profitable in view of the superior quality of these pictures?

E. M. Loew Suit At Boston Postponed

Suit against Paramount-Publix Corporation by E. M. Loew, New England exhibitor, which was filed in Boston several weeks ago and which was scheduled to come up for trial at the May sitting of the Superior Court, will probably not be reached for another month.

Executives of the Paramount company have gone to the West Coast for the annual Paramount convention. It was stated at the Paramount offices that the case would probably not be reached for several weeks yet. At the E. M. Loew offices it was stated that the company was ready to proceed with the action when the court calendar was clear.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The person in charge of the office directory board in the lobby of the RKO building in Longacre Square is evidently the last person in the world to officially recognize the unmistakable fact that changes have been made in the organization.

The name of the new president, Merlin H. Aylesworth and of Harold Franklin, Phil Reisman, Martin Beck and Robert Sisk have not been added to the list, nor have the names of a half-dozen of the retired executives been eliminated, including the appelations of Charles Rosenzweig, Hy Daab, Joseph I. Schnitzer, Eli M. Orowitz, Cleve Adams and Jerome Safron.

One of Hollywood's choicest stories involves George Arliss and his current picture activities. In many of the Arliss pictures, the final scene shows some person of might congratulating the star for his accomplishment. In "Disraeli" it was a Queen Victoria and in "Alexander the Great," a George Washington performed the honors. In his newest, "A Successful Calamity," Arliss gets the usual compliments from a President Hoover.

Warner's casting director, in looking about for someone to portray the Hoover character, discovered that Arliss's valet, George Jenner, bore a striking resemblance to the President and accordingly he fitted out Jenner for the part, supplying him with a retinue of military and naval aides. Later, the Warner casting chief learned that resemblances are only skin deep. They do not extend to the palate.

Jenner was rehearsed without sound and performed satisfactorily. Then came the tragic moment. A chill ran through the sound men when the "chief executive" of the nation turned toward Mr. Arliss, himself an Englishman, and remarked:

"Hi take pleysure in haccording you the gratitude of the people of the Hunited States."

Jenner had forgotten to tell them that he had no control of his "h's" and so he was fired on the spot as Mr. Arliss bustled out to serve tea.

Oscar Apfel was later called in for the presidential post. They show only the back of his head in the picture and it took a week to construct a toupee that resembled the back of Hoover. Apfel is nearly bald.

Perched on top of the clerk's desk in the state house of representatives the other day was a box containing William's shirt, slightly the worse for wear, but still usable. Attached was this note:

"Here's my shirt. You have taken everything but my shirt by the abominable amusement tax and I am sure you will get that before you go home—so here it is now.

"I suggest that you divide it as follows: give the bosom to the house; the back to the senate and the tail to Mike Conner."

COWS and cafes don't mix, according to J. Edelstein, theatre operator of DeSmit, South Dakota.

An exploitation stunt arranged by Edelstein to attract attention to the Seth Parker film got an unexpected touch of realism when the cow that was to be the central figure in the parade kicked over the traces, Edelstein's plans and parade, and busted up the advertising stunt completely.

Maybe it wasn't the cow's fault, maybe it was "Bill" Burns, one of the town's slickers. In either case, there was a complete lack of understanding between the two.

It appears that Manager Edelstein had arranged with Si Perkins, or maybe it was someone else, for the loan of a gentle family cow. Edelstein was assured the cow combined just about everything that one would expect in a young heifer who is meek, and accordingly he engaged two pretty dairy maids. With suitable banners on the cow and the milk maids in attendance, pails and all, the whistle was blown for the procession to journey down Main Street before afternoon crowds, advertising the show.

At this point, William Burns came out of a cafe, saw the cow on the street and jumped aboard. The "gentle, family" creature reared, throwing Burns, and with Edelstein tugging franctically at the halter rope, headed for the large plate glass window of a Main street store. And the parade was over.

It may accordingly be developed as a great love drama, a story of the city canyons, or follow some entirely new lead which is suggested by the timeliness with a current happening, or a popular theme." We take it, then, that the press material might dwell on Rudy Valley, Ralph Capone's incarceration, the Manchurian situation, Jimmy Walker's beer parade or almost anything so long as it ignores any story which is just another picture.

BLOCK BOOKING MAY GO TO SUPREME COURT

Doubt Paramount Case Will Be Argued Before Fall if Highest Federal Tribunal Does Agree to Review Decision

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Final decision as to the legality of block booking will be sought of the United States supreme court by the Federal Trade Commission, which has requested the Department of Justice to prepare an appeal from the decision of the New York federal court, holding that Paramount was not acting in violation of the law in selling its pictures en bloc.

If the supreme court agrees to review the decision, it is not likely that the case will be argued before next fall. The court is nearing the end of its term and must pass upon the appeal for review before briefs can be filed for the final argument. It is likely, however, that the court will announce its decision before the end of the term in June, if the Department of Justice does not lose too much time in filing the appeal.

Having spent many years in the preparation of the case for court presentation, the commission is said to be reluctant to abandon the proceedings at this time without obtaining a final decision. This is said to be particularly true because of the activities in Congress of Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa, who has had pending for several years legislation which would outlaw block booking.

To drop the case at this stage, it is said, would give point to charges made in the past by Brookhart that the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice had failed to push cases against the film industry with sufficient vigor.

Nothing can be done with the Brookhart bill this session, and it is not likely that he will attempt to obtain any action on the measure, if the appeal is granted, until the supreme court has passed on the issue.

Allied States Association has contributed $10,000 for its campaign to educate the public on details of the Brookhart bill and to "offset propaganda from other sources," it was stated by W. A. Steffes, president, at a Chicago meeting of directors last week.

Directors again maintained their stand on the Detroit resolution repudiating the proposed 5-5-5 agreement, declaring they do not want the projected contract. Allied directors, Steffes declared, still are opposed to certain forms of percentage booking and are urging members not to sign contracts for this kind of agreement.

Those in attendance were: Steffes, Abram F. Myers, Washington; H. M. Richey and James Ritter, Detroit; Sidney Samuelson, Newton, N. J.; Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass.; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh; Aaron Saperstein, Chicago; Otto Raths, St. Paul; Charles Metzger, Indianapolis; Herman Blum, Baltimore; R. E. Meyers, Cincinnati; Lester Martin, Nevada, Ia.; Frank J. McWilliams, Madison, Wis.; and J. Easley.

Bromley Confident Thacher Will Ask Case Dropped

Bruce Bromley, of the New York law firm of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, counsel for Paramount throughout the litigation on block booking, said this week, when advised that steps were being taken to have the appellate court's decision reviewed: "I am confident that the Solicitor General, when he reviews the decision recently handed down by the circuit court of appeals at New York, and when he studies the evidence that has been presented in this case, will recommend that the Department of Justice take no further action in the matter."

Former Federal Judge Thacher, author of the Thacher decree outlawing compulsory arbitration, is solicitor general, and will have submitted to him for approval the Federal Trade Commission's request that the Department of Justice appeal the recent Paramount block booking decision to the U. S. supreme court.

Cagney Is Barred Until He Returns To Warner Studio

Until James Cagney returns to Warner and completes his contract, he will be barred from all professional work in pictures, stage and radio, said Darryl Zanuck, Warner production manager, prior to his departure for Europe Wednesday.

"There is no question involved," said Zanuck. "It is simply a matter of living up to an agreement. Five months ago, Cagney presented salary demands and we met his terms. Now he is making additional demands in spite of the fact that he has a five year contract, so we have suspended him both as to time and pay. Every day he is out will be added to his contract." Zanuck said further, "Cagney is a fine fellow but he is being badly advised at a time when this business needs economy above all else."

The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, through George P. Aarons, secretary, has addressed the MPPDA, notifying it of a meeting last week, at which the organization "strongly endorsed" the stand of Warner with respect to the salary demands of James Cagney, star. The letter implied that pictures featuring Cagney would be kept off the screens of the members.

Bioscope of London Ceases Publication After 24 Years

The Bioscope of London, the famous old nestor of motion picture business journalism in Great Britain, ceases publication with the issue of this week. Meanwhile negotiations are in progress for the taking over of certain assets of the enterprise by Odhams Press, Ltd., publishers of Kinematograph Weekly.

The suspension of the Bioscope brings to the end a publication which has served the British motion picture world for some twenty-four years. It was founded by the late John Cabourn, a figure of distinction and wide influence through all the formative years of the industry. Mr. Cabourn died some five or six years ago.

The publication has since been under the editorial guidance of W. H. Mooring, the able journalist whose weekly dispatches and articles on British film affairs appear in the columns of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Warner Will Hold Costs Down, Quality Up, Says Zanuck

"Warner will not sacrifice entertainment value for the sake of false economy, but the company will hold production costs to a minimum," said Darryl Zanuck, Warner production manager, prior to his departure for Europe on Wednesday. In the Warner product, he said, "there will be plenty of melodrama and action. The public is tired of extensive dialogue and calm."

While abroad Zanuck will arrange for the production of French dialogue pictures at the Warner studios at Teddington, England, and Paris. At the Teddington plant will be produced 15 pictures with British casts exclusively and for the British market during the coming season, said Zanuck. The first of these will be released in Canada in about six weeks.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

BEHIND THE MASK

Columbia 68 minutes

WHILE there are many big town critics who turn up their noses at this sort of entertainment, we harbor a personal belief that they "eat it up" as much as you or I. You know what we mean; this is one of those villainous affairs where they do about everything except tie the hero to a raft and let him go to his doom over the falls.

The title, when sold along with the names and theme of plot, should make this one fairly strong at the box office. In addition to Jack Holt you have Boris (Frankenstein) Karloff, Constance Cummings and Claude King, not many names to help give this strength in selling, but add your own show-selling ability for the much needed push-over.

"Audience value," while melodramatic, is bound to hold the interest of most patrons. They will get quite a kick out of finding who the mystery man is and will also feel like cheering the hero and hissing the villain.

It's different from many of the pictures coming along lately and if for no other reason is entitled to a break. Push with as much added effort as you can and make them turn out to see it even if only out of curiosity. They won't register any kicks, it's entertainment and much more to the public's tastes than English drawing room sophistication.

Kids will eat it alive, as will the adults, so play it wherever you please.

ROADHOUSE MURDER

RKO Radio 73 minutes

THE title of this production possesses a certain amount of natural b.o. draw but the names are weak with the possible exception of Miss Jordon. This leaves you a problem for your imagination and ingenuity to sell this one at the b.o. The idea of the cub reporter taking the blame for a murder because of the resultant publicity to himself and his newspaper may be greeted with snickers from your local newspaper boys, though the audience may be willing to be carried away with the idea.

"Audience value" is weak. Neither the story nor the acting is convincing. It lacks a hero who can win the public's sympathy and promising your audience a great deal would be inadvisable.

A Laurel and Hardy comedy dividing the billing in your ads and whatever else you use to sell your attractions may get this one by without much adverse comment. We suggest careful selling and a particularly strong supporting bill.

Best played away from the children's days and not exactly uplifting for Sundays.

ARE YOU LISTENING?

MGM 76 minutes

A FAIRLY satisfying picture. William Haines falls a bit short of the job of becoming a really dramatic actor; nevertheless the picture is quite apt to get by where you sort of sell them in advance, especially along the lines that here is a picture to take your customers behind the scenes of a national radio studio. It also shows them the inside workings of broadcasting.

Anita Page and Joan Marsh contribute excellent support to Haines and Madge Evans. If one were carefully to study the characterizations in this picture we are inclined to believe that Madge would cop the honors away from Haines. Be that as it may, we think you can make some money with the production.

Title has a certain natural box office pull because of its connection with radio broadcasting programs. Tied to that is your additional selling slant about the inside workings etc., etc., and the two stars plus the supporting members of the cast. Thumb through the press book and refer to the HERALD informative review for complete cast of characters and synopsis of story. It will provide many selling slants which are really worthwhile.

"Audience value" may be a little weak, so prepare to sell it accordingly and to surround it with a strong supporting bill of shorts. A well balanced program ought to get this feature by in pretty good shape.

The radio angles would interest the kids, but nothing else, so it may be just as well to play it away from their days. Otherwise you can about do as you please. Try something new and novel in the way of advertising. Play along the lines of the broadcasting studio and radio in general. Create interest in the background of the picture. But don't expect too much from it.

FOR theatres where Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery are already favorites this one will be a landslide. Where these two stars are not quite so powerful at the box office it will create for them, and for the theatre too, a new army of admirers. Almost everything one can wish for in entertainment has been injected into this superbly acted and directed production. The gowns which Miss Crawford wears will be the talk of your town for weeks after . . . and how she wears them!

Titles running in this cycle may be termed neutral at the box office. But when it is backed up by names like Crawford and Montgomery, plus Nils Asther, Lewis Stone and others, then it becomes sure money for any box office with the possible exception of, perhaps, a few isolated spots.

In addition to the stars and cast the story provides an endless number of smart selling slants all feasible and excellent for receipts. And when you can shout from the roof of your theatre and through your advertising that here is Joan Crawford in her greatest role, then, brother managers, you have the ingredients for a record breaking run.

"Audience value" is exceptionally strong. It so holds the interest that you hardly note the passing of time. As a matter of truth, I am compelled to admit that I was quite ready to sit through it all over again and that is a statement that I can hardly make for most other pictures even including the better ones.

N.G. for kids and also for Sundays in the smaller spots. Elsewhere, OK. Let the world know you're playing this cracker-jack show.

THE TRIAL OF VIVIENNE WARE

Fox 56 minutes

SEVERAL New York newspapers notwithstanding, we consider this a well-above average picture, keeping in mind of course what "average" has meant this season. We found it quite interesting and holding the attention of the audience all the way through, possibly one reason being the novel methods employed to switch from scene to scene. Direction helped considerably with what must have been a pretty weak story. But all in all it has enough merit to warrant a real effort to make it click at the b.o.

The title certainly gives you something to start on. Names can be added according to their value for your particular situation. You have Joan Bennett, Donald Cook, Allan Dinehart (exceptionally good as the prosecutor), "Skeets" Gallagher, Zasu Pitts, plus numerous others who all help along. So you have a good selling title, enough names to back it up and now all you should have to add is selling slants that will attract attention and patronage. These you can create because the story was taken from a sponsored national radio broadcast. It deals with a mysterious murder and a courtroom trial, plus the usual jealous girl friend and all the other trimmings essential for a good murder-trial picture.

Audience strength is OK, for the reasons outlined in the opening paragraph. It should be acceptable for most theatres anywhere and if sold with the right amount of showmanship will even top your expectations, providing you even dare to estimate what a picture ought to do. But it's a pleasant pastime just to see how close you can guess and it sometimes prompts you to put a little extra effort into your selling campaign.

Not suited for kids and in smaller towns might not be considered just the right thing for the Sabbath, but you are supposed to figure out such slants yourself. Just make a try for above average business through good advertising and exploitation and see if it doesn't deliver the dough.

Drama

Joan Crawford, in the role of the too wealthy girl whose one false step comes very near to irreparably damaging a sudden romance with smooth and personable Robert Montgomery, completely won a capacity audience at the New York Capitol with her acknowledged sincere and finished performance.

The story cannot be classed as startlingly new in theme or treatment, but it was obvious from the reaction of the assembled patrons that the film, by reason of the performances, rises above its original. The story is an adaptation of a novel by Marie Belloc Lowndes.

Miss Crawford is found luxuriously ensconced in a grandiose South American hotel, and energetically pursued by a handsome Spaniard, played by Nils Asther. Miss Crawford decides she has had enough heat, enough luxury and enough Asther, and plans to return to wintry New York. Asther objects strenuously, makes mention of certain letters, and the like. Comedy relief steps in here and there, chiefly in the person of Louise Closser Hale, Miss Crawford's traveling companion and maid.

On the boat Miss Crawford meets Montgomery, and the lively, light and rather pleasant following sequences find them engaged when they arrive in New York. At the pier is Asther, whose plane trip North had apparently dampened neither his ardor nor his anger. Miss Crawford finds her stern, unsympathetic mother, played by May Robson, still unsympathetic, not trusting her daughter. Asther comes to the house, threatens Miss Crawford with exposure unless she appears at his apartment that evening, and Miss Robson overhears. The girl goes to Asther's apartment, taking poison with her in a vial. Threats, pleading, find Asther unmoved, and she pours the poison into a wine glass. Accidentally Asther drinks, dies, Miss Crawford escaping.

At the home of Montgomery's parents on Long Island, detectives find her and she is taken to the district attorney for questioning. There are Miss Robson, Miss Hale, Montgomery. The official, Lewis Stone, corners her, and things look bad until Miss Robson suddenly supports the alibi which Montgomery quickly fabricates. Miss Hale adds her bit, Miss Crawford is discharged, and the film ends, with a general reconciliation.

Newspaper Drama

A bit of newspaper drama, a murder mystery, a courtroom scene, and a rather large portion of melodrama in all phases, go to make up this effort. It centers in particular about the ambitions of young reporter Eric Linden, who in attempting to obtain for himself a name, resultant money and marriage to Dorothy Jordan, daughter of the city's inspector of police, gets himself into a varied assortment of complications, out of which he is finally extricated, of course.

Linden, seeing Miss Jordan without the knowledge of father inspector, comes upon a man and woman robbing two bodies in a lonely roadhouse to which they are driven when caught in a storm. They find enough evidence to convict the crooks, and Linden concocts an idea. He will pose as the murderer, leaving enough evidence to draw the police to him, elude them as long as possible, at the same time writing signed stories for his paper and deriving the money, name and the like therefrom. When he is apprehended, according to the plan, he will offer evidence, which Miss Jordan is to keep for him, and the murderers will be arrested.

The idea, as it develops, is a great deal better than the materialization of it. It all works well up to the time of his apprehension, a sharp grilling and third degree, headed by Purnell Pratt as the inspector, the indictment and the court trial for murder. Linden carries the hoax along to a point in the trial where his conviction appears imminent, then prepares to offer the evidence. Miss Jordan, on the way to his cell with it is robbed by Bruce Cabot, the murderer. Phyllis Clare, his "girl," and with him at the time of the murder, becomes enraged at his attempt to leave her, and tells the police, thereby saving Linden at the last and of course opportune moment. Roscoe Ates offers a bit of comedy as the restaurant keeper who testifies on the stand in his own stuttering manner.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by J. Walter Ruben. Supervised by Willis Goldbeck. From the stage play by Laszo Bus Fekete. Art director, Carroll Clark. Cameraman, J. Roy Hunt. Sound, John Tribby. Film editor, Jack Kitchin. Release date, May 6, 1932. Running time, 73 minutes.

(Fox)

Courtroom Drama

From the novel by Kenneth M. Ellis, William K. Howard, director, has woven a fast moving, action-packed drama of the courtroom, with preceding sequences, explaining the trial, with flashbacks recounting the testimony of witnesses during the court proceedings. Unusual camera work, the touch of something a bit unique in direction and settings, and the somewhat suspensive situation of a definite mystery as to the identity of the person who committed the murder with which Miss Ware is charged, kept an audience at the Roxy in New York in close attendance upon the screen.

Joan Bennett, as Vivienne Ware; Donald Cook, as her attorney and suitor; Allan Dinehart, a prosecuting attorney; Jameson Thomas as the murdered man, were conceded to have rendered the most able performances.

Miss Bennett is engaged to Thomas, but he persists in his affair with Lillian Bond, dancer in a night club and the object of the affections of Noel Madison, night club owner. Cook returns from abroad, is stunned by the engagement, and from that introductory point, things begin to happen. Thomas is found murdered, Miss Bennett is accused, Cook defends, though he is not at all convinced of Miss Bennett's innocence. The film recounts the trial in detail, interestingly, with comedy provided by "Skeets" Gallagher and Zasu Pitts, as broadcasters in a booth adjoining the courtroom.

The camera races from the courtroom to the scene of testimony; to the night club, the police station, the broadcasting booth, back to the courtroom, in a manner which greatly engaged the interest of the patrons. Complications come up again and again in the case, while Dinehart badgers the witnesses, Cook fights for acquittal. A knife is thrown from the spectators at Miss Bond, in the witness chair; Madison's henchman is apprehended, is shot by Madison when about to testify, and the latter is pursued, drops from a ledge to the street. Miss Bennett is discharged. She and Cook leave the court together. Herbert Mendin, as Thomas' valet, provides amusement on the witness stand.

Poduced and distributed by Fox. Directed by William K. Howard. Novel by Kenneth M. Ellis. Screen play by Philip Kiein and Barry Conners. Photoplay by Ernest Palmer. Sound, Albert Protzman. Art director, Gordon Wiles. Release date, May 1, 1832 Running time, 56 minutes.

Drama

A story rapid and able in construction, dialogue in keeping, performances of uniform quality, with an outstanding lead, were generally conceded to have been responsible for the manner in which this film held the attention of a group at a projection room showing in New York.

Contributing more than anything else to the finish of the picture as a whole, was obviously the work of Edmund Lowe, in the lead, as the district attorney who is forced by circumstances and a conscience into a private practice and who fights his best case as his own attorney when charged with murder. The courtroom sequences, reproducing actual proceedings with clear-cut fidelity and naturalness, was particularly effective in its dramatic action and as a climax.

Lowe, noted as a district attorney who always sends his victim away, convicts a man of murder, only to have the verdict proved wrong after the man had been hanged. Conscience stricken, Lowe resigns, retires to private practice, and defends where he once convicted. Also he becomes guardian to the mother and young son of the executed man. His secretary, played by Constance Cummings, is in love with him, but keeps the fact to herself. He had been carrying on an affair with Evelyn Brent, but breaks with her when he finds her with Bradley Page, gang leader.

Ten years later, Lowe is highly successful as an attorney, and his ward, Donald Dilloway, is being educated as a lawyer. The mother is played by Dorothy Peterson. Lowe, organizer of a reform group, has evidence to convict Page as a racketeer. In order to obtain the papers, Miss Brent "plays" Dilloway, has him rob Lowe's safe of the papers. At her apartment, she draws him into a state of intoxication, calls Lowe. When Lowe arrives, he finds Miss Brent strangled, dead, Dilloway drunk on the bed. Sending the boy home, he permits the police to find him.

The trial which follows is the dramatic strength of the film. By sheer cleverness, Lowe succeeds in proving that Page entered the apartment, killed Miss Brent and escaped with the papers. To conclude, Lowe decides that Miss Cummings will take his dictation for a long period.

Comedy-Drama with Music

A bit of melody here and there, a song number or two, in the manner of the German film, makes this rather a comedy-drama with music than a musical comedy or an operetta. The musical interludes are in all cases in keeping with the spirit of the thing, and an audience at the Europa, New York intimate cinema, which shows foreign films exclusively, gave close and rather enjoyable attention to the film.

Leading players are Dolly Haas and Gustav Froehlich, both acknowledged as capable. The cast includes several well known German players. The recently evolved policy of adding English subtitles to translate portions of the dialogue important to the thread of the story, makes the film readily understandable to the patron minus a knowledge of German.

The story is simple, rather light. Miss Haas, masquerading as a boy, attends the military academy, after her brother, more inclined toward music than militarism, goes to the conservatory. Her aged father knows nothing of the situation. At the academy, she is a leader of her group, but at the same time displays certain feminine qualities which bring about much badgering from Froelich, handsome soldier, reduced, as punishment for his attentions to women, to a post at the academy.

The suspicion grows upon him that the boy is a girl, and that is confirmed when the father, reading of the first concert of the composition of the son he thought was at the academy, goes to investigate. Froelich and his fellow-officer understand the father's statement, but the commandant, in an amusing scene, corrects the father's German speech, and being unable to understand his Italian, can not perceive what he is being told. Froelich, however, reveals the state of affairs on the eve of the arrival of the emperor for the graduation. He is informed of the girl's presence in the school, but instead of taking punitive measures, compliments the school on its

The First Mrs. Fraser

(Sterling Film Company)

Marital Comedy

(Seen in London)

Henry Ainley, doyen of London stage actors, makes a late talking film debut in this picture. He has plenty of opportunity to demonstrate his flawless diction in a picture which is overladen with dialogue. The story enjoys classical distinction and concerns the efforts of a divorced wife to save her ex-husband from the social consequences of a second divorce. She traps the husband's second wife and forces her to admit misconduct with a night-club artist, thus placing the onus of respondency on the wife instead of the husband. The fadeout finds the "first Mrs. Fraser" encouraging her husband to woo her over again and she looks likely to become the third Mrs. Fraser.

There is a polish and artistry about all the settings. The film has been produced at a cost of £40,000, and in an attempt to surpass the limitations of the stage play, the director, Sinclair Hill, has introduced a mammoth cabaret staged in the "Half-and-Half" Night Club. However, it still remains very much a stage play with the camera far too immobile and the juniors in the cast keeping up too much of a stage chatter, certain opinion agreed.

Photography, by the German, Krampf, is good, without offering any novelty. The main drawing card in the United States would probably prove to be the night-club sequence, which is bizarre in the extreme, made up of good turns.

Love in High Gear

(Mayfair)

Comedy

A comedy effort centering about an eloping couple, a stolen pearl necklace, a thief and an old flame of the eloping bride-to-be, is active, reasonably lively.

Alberta Vaughn and Tyrrell Davis, with an over-exaggerated English accent, plan to elope and be married in a small town somewhere "up-state," where his relatives can assist at the ceremony. The plan is set at a wedding, during which Harrison Ford, handsome thief, steals a wedding gift, the necklace. Fred Kelsey, obese and obtuse detective, searches all the guests, and Ford drops the jewels in the suitcase of Miss Vaughn, about to leave to meet Davis.

Miss Vaughn goes to the broken down hotel, presided over by Jack Duffy and Fern Emmett, in the style of the village "hick," where Davis is to follow. The latter is wrecked en route and Ford arrives to get the necklace. While he is there Arthur Hoyt and Ethel Wales, Davis' relatives, arrive in search of the couple, and Miss Vaughn hides Ford in a closet. Kelsey arrives in search of Davis and the pearls, then Davis arrives in search of his impending bride. Then follows, in due order, pursuit of Davis by Kelsey, assisted by the maid and Duffy with a shotgun of ancient vintage; attempt of Ford to keep out of sight; and the efforts of the relatives to discover what is going on.

Kelsey lines them all up while Davis hides in the closet, where he and Ford battle until they tumble down with the closet. A satisfactory explanation is found suddenly by Ford for the presence of the jewels, Kelsey is smoothed down by a friend of Ford, who arrives to collect the stolen jewels, and Miss Vaughn and Davis are left alone. There is a certain amount of hide-and-seek, bedroom, bathroom slapstick pursuit sequence introduced to keep the film active.

(British and Dominions)

Spectacular Romance

(Seen in London)

This is Britsh and Dominion's first real bid for American release, and although the picture can lay no claim to super rank, it should provide acceptable qualities for the U. S. public, it was indicated.

John Buchanan, already established in the American territory, is starred with Anna Neagle, young musical comedy lead with a likely future. The story in this case is slight, a simple misunderstanding between a young Viennese officer and his maid, which defers the happy ending long enough to provide excuses for a lot of glamorous scenes, a bit of effective love making, and some theme singing.

Buchanan is taxed too much vocally and not given a chance of showing his skill as a dancer, and Herbert Wilcox by his direction has done little to camouflage the leisurely manner with which the tale unfolds. There is "personality," however, and the star was well received.

The Gables Mystery

(Powers Pictures)

Mystery

British accents in this English-made film, being handled by the newly constituted Powers Pictures, should be no real drawback here, since the mystery is secure in its difficulty of audience solution, the suspense action was found in accordance with acceptability, the pace one of satisfactorily rapid movement. A strange turn or two does its bit, and the situations are handled in a rather logical fashion.

The mysterious murder takes place, to the advantage of the atmospheric effects, in a long-deserted house, inhabited alone, one is given to understand, by a strange and lonely old woman, whom no one has ever seen, and who is known as the mystery woman.

Scotland Yard, on the job, runs into a series of baffling pseudo-clues which lead it nowhere, rapidly. It looks rather hopeless when Lester Matthews, amateur detective, steps into the picture and proceeds to dig into the bafflement in the interests of British justice. He first comes to the conclusion that the death is really murder, then goes further. Unfortunately, the further is a mistake, since through the efforts of a feminine detective, it is indicated, after suspicion has fallen upon, and off numerous people, that he himself is the perpetrator of the murder. He is killed when the girl changes handbags and he walks off with one containing, not jewels as he supposed, but an infernal machine which does its appointed task neatly and with dispatch.

The denouement is clever, and more than a little surprising, adding its suspensive effect to the film as a whole.

Love Affair

(Columbia)

Drama

Wherein Dorothy Mackaill enacts the sacrificing girl who wants to help her rather accidentally acquired sweetheart, played by Humphrey Bogart, and pleased an audience at one of the less centrally located Loew houses in upper New York. The film's story as a whole seemed likewise to entertain the assembled patrons.

Humphrey Bogart is the instructor when Miss Mackaill decides to try high flying in a literal sense. They fall rather thoroughly for each other in the course of the instruction, and it all seems so perfectly simple. But he happens to be an inventor with a newly designed motor very much on his mind, and as inventors so often are, is very poor. He feels that he would be entirely out of place among the Mackaill dollars and, being a frank young man, tells her so in as many words.

Suddenly and unexpectedly, Miss Mackaill finds herself in a decidedly penniless condition, which places them on even terms. She discovers her misfortune only when she is about to invest her capital in Bogart's motor. Making the sacrifice, she offers to marry Hale Hamilton, wealthy broker, in order thus to secure backing for Bogart and the inventive implement of locomotion.

Bogart learns of the plan, calls off the deal with Hamilton and succeeds in obtaining the backing of his former employer. Miss Mackaill cancels the engagement to Hamilton when she learns that he has bought a controlling interest in the motor company. Bogart returns to his old job as a mechanic and just manages to save Miss Mackaill from a disastrous ride alone in a plane, which, one understands, meant suicide. Bogart just reaches the plane as it is leaving the ground.

to bring it all to a satisfactory conclusion, in the interests of romance and the audience. That at a local house in New York did give evidence of having been rather saitsfactorily entertained.

Three men are in pursuit of Miss Shilling during the course of the plot evolvement. One, Holmes Herbert, has not the best of intentions toward her, personally; a second, Walter Byron, has financial intention, blackmail-wise; the third, Bushell, has most honorable intentions, successfully fulfilled.

Miss Shilling, buyer for a gown shop, has a desire to travel abroad, in the interests of the firm. Employer Herbert, however, has a different desire, in the interests of himself. Byron, exploitation manager, advises her that there are more savory things than the chief's reputation, but she goes ahead with the scheme of selling him on the idea. She is on her way visiting in Herbert's car when an accident starts complications rapidly.

Herbert's daughter and fiance, Bushell, happen along, and Bushell takes Miss Shilling home with the inevitable result. They meet again often, Miss Shilling sees Herbert in his penthouse and is saved from a bad situation by Bushell. Byron has successfully blackmailed Herbert on the strength of a picture of Miss Shilling's handbag at the car crash scene. She, attempts to retrieve the check from Byron, with another difficult situation saved by Bushell's again timely arrival. The two decide they have had enough of complications, with the expected result.

Oh How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning

(Paramount)

Amusing

One of the Dave Fleischer cartoon screen song numbers, and one replete with clever drawings, novel ideas and more than a little amusement. The youngsters, in particular, should derive a good deal of enjoyment from the short. It is a smart, amusing cartoon comedy number.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Old Bull

(MGM)

Very Funny

There are real laughs in this comedy, which has Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd in a car, with Miss Pitts learning to drive. The car operates as though it were more than a little intoxicated, and comes out through a haystack on a farm. The farmer holds the car, and when they retrieve it, they find a lost circus lion in the tonneau to climax the amusing short.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Remember When

(Vitaphone)

Interesting Memories

Memories of an earlier day make up the footage of this short, and as recorded by the motion picture camera are amusing, interesting, novel in their recollection-producing faculty. Seen are Miss Pankhurst leading the woman suffrage parade; the Prince of Wales setting his first cornerstone; the Kaiser visiting his cousin, King George of England; the presidential campaign of 1912. An unusual short.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Prowlers

Of Interest

In the nature of a travelogue, this number of the Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge series offers interesting material centering about the normal daily life of the central African Negro. Several good closeup shots of the prowling cats which make the life of the native a dangerous one, are excellent. General interest, wide appeal.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Bosko's Party

(Vitaphone)

Amusing Cartoon

Bosko gives a surprise party in this number of the Looney Tunes. It all goes well in an animated fashion until Bosko's dog gets his tail caught in a mouse trap and finally lands in the dead center of the birthday cake. The youngsters, especially, will like it.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Babbling Book

(Paramount)

Fast Chatter

The rapid-fire chatter of the comedy team of Burns and Allen, whose "line" has often evoked much laughter from radio listeners, in one of their comedy sketches. This one takes place in a book shop with Miss Allen as the clerk and Burns the customer. Miss Allen's line of chatter is seemingly unending, but vastly amusing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Toreador

(MGM)

Funny

Joe Penner, Vitaphone's stuttering comic, impersonates Sid Woods, famed bull fighter, aboard the ship bound for South America. Posing as the master toreador, Penner supplies a good deal of amusement. When the ship docks in the Southern clime, Joe is forced to enter the arena.—Running time, 17 minutes.

War Mamas

Fair Nonsense

Thelma Todd and Zazu Pitts are both on duty at the front during the war, in this number of the Hal Roach series for MGM release. An audience at a New York neighborhood house extracted numerous laughs from the nonsense of the two feminine players—Running time, 11 minutes.

Extra! Extra!

(RKO Pathe)

Fair Comedy

Frank McHugh in another of his inebriated reporter acts, this time taking place in the crystal-gazing, hypnotism emporium of one Madame Olga. McHugh gets himself into all sorts of complications with the Madame, and when they try to hypnotize each other, the comedy waxes comic. Ralph Ince, McHugh's city editor, rescues him in the end.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Dunker

(Paramount)

Not Quite

Billy House, whose girth makes his name appropriate, takes the lead in this comedy which does not quite make the laugh grade, though it contains a few amusing spots. House starts in a small "dunkatoria" and grows to a large chain of "dunkatorias." His wife wants him to reduce, while he persists in eating crullers. He escapes from a reducing oven, while his wife and the police chase him, with the usual thing of the man in the women's dressing room. His wife is put into the oven by mistake and comes out a midget, also as expected.—Running time, 19 minutes.

A Slip at the Switch

(Radio)

Sale Is Amusing

Chic Sale is nearly always to be counted on for a few good laughs, and this number is no exception. Here he is once more the flagman on the railroad. Studying telegraphy, he relieves the regular operator, and is held up and robbed by two tramps. The sheriff and an old crony are playing checkers, but both are deaf. A dispatcher makes every effort to reach Sale, and Sale is amusing trying to understand via code book. A fast climax is effected with two trains meeting on a single track. Good comedy, numerous laughs.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Victory Plays

(Universal)

Tennis Technique

Bill Tilden, ace of tennis aces, shows how, with the backhand, service, volley, racket grips, all carefully demonstrated by the master, as Genevieve Tobin renders the accompanying explanatory remarks. Tennis fans will be enthused, everyone should be interested in a demonstration of sporting skill.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Holy Men of India

(Featurettes)

Travel Interest

Another of the Commander Dyott travel series, released by the newly established Featurettes, Inc. Here are incorporated interesting shots of the travel variety, depicting, especially, the manner in which the populace of India indulges in its annual religious ritual, designed to cleanse the body of sin. The East and its ways is always of interest to the self-satisfied West.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Aw Nertz

(Vitaphone)

Fair Comedy

Two lads are put out of an orphanage and on their own resources after waiting many years to be adopted, without success. They become implicated in a fight with an officer of the law, and the merry chase is on. They duck into a building under construction, and are taken for iron workers. The footage is occupied with their efforts to evade the hand of the law. A few laughs, and a fair comedy.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Last Pelicans in Europe

(Ufa)

Bit of Nature

A scientific expedition of small proportions wends its way into the reed marshes of central Europe, where are hidden, so to speak, the last of the continent's wild pelicans, we understand. Interesting as a nature study are the habits of the great-billed birds, who float lazily on their eternal hunt for fish, and whose wing spread attains a width of some eight to 10 feet. Most interesting is the manner in which the female feeds its young from its neck pouch, indicating the origin of the legend that the pelican is the symbol of motherhood. Generally appealing, though weak spots crop up in the accompanying descriptive matter.—Running time, 10 minutes.

ASKS DISTRIBUTORS TO COOPERATE IN ZONING

President Van Hyning of Kansas MPTA Asks Distributors to Participate in Forming Zoning Plan for His Territory

E. Van Hyning, president of the MPTA of Kansas and Missouri, seeks participation by distributors in drafting a plan on zoning governing the sale of product for next season in the area comprising Kansas and western Missouri. The move is in line with Van Hyning's national plan suggested to the MPTOA affiliated units in his capacity as chairman of the organization's committee on zoning.

Van Hyning has sent an appeal to general sales managers specifying that "for the general good of the industry we ask you to rescind your present instructions against participating in zoning conferences and cooperate with us in working out a zoning plan for the benefit of all concerned."

This request is in accord with the MPTOA plan of reinstating uniform zoning, successful administration of which is predicated on agreement with the distributors.

At the Hays office in New York, Dave Palfreyman said that no request had been received by the MPTOA and no action will be taken by the Hays organization as such.

The procedure Van Hyning is following to obtain distributor participation locally includes, in addition to the appeal directed to general sales managers, a supplementary request to branch managers in Kansas City that they recommend to their home offices "that the matter is serious, urgent and of great value to the industry."

Explaining fully the current situation with respect to zoning and protection, Van Hyning's plea to the sales executives states:

"As president of the MPTA of Kansas and Missouri, I have been greatly concerned over the abandonment of the carefully and patiently developed uniform zoning plan for the Kansas City territory and the discontinuance of the zoning committee to which complaints, suggestions and grievances concerning zoning and protection could be taken for conciliation and possible adjustment.

"The Washington convention of the MPTOA adopted a resolution urging the distributors to resume active participation in negotiations seeking to establish and carry out openly negotiated and mutually agreed upon uniform zoning plans for the purpose of limiting protection as to time and area within bounds that can be agreed upon as fair and reasonable.

"We are convinced that this is the only sound, sensible and practical means of self-control within the industry in the troublesome matter of protection and run that will prevent abuses and avoid confusion, litigation and attempted legislation.

"If the subsequent-run independent exhibitor can take his complaints and grievances to a local zoning committee for discussion, conciliation and possible adjustment, it will overcome much of the present turmoil, agitation and ill-will. As a distributor you are directly affected by every protection situation. If you grant unreasonable protection because of the buying power of the first-run theatres you inevitably lose revenue from the many subsequent-runs; if you grant too little, you lose revenue from the first-run.

"We believe that no intelligent or practical solution of the local protection and run problems can be reached through litigation. We think it is a practical business problem rather than a legal technicality and appeal to you to help work it out in a way that is fair and open and above-board instead of by hit or miss private contracts and secret understandings. For the general good of the industry we ask you to rescind your present instructions against participating in zoning conferences and cooperate with us in working out a zoning plan for the benefit of all concerned.

"The suits at law that have been instigated on zoning we believe are futile and will not result in any clarification of the legal right to negotiate such zoning plans. They are started with no sincere idea of trying to solve the protection problem and will take years to reach a final decision. The suits on protection could all be avoided if the local zoning committees were permitted to function.

"Any zoning plan that is eventually negotiated and agreed to depends on the distributor for its successful operation, as the distributor is a party to both first and subsequent-run contracts; therefore your participation and cooperation is essential. The season rapidly approaches during which contracts for the new season's product will be written with a variety of protection and run clauses therefore the matter is urgent and important.

"We appeal to you for help in solving our mutual problem in this manner and will appreciate an early reply in the interests of the whole industry."

The letter sent by the MPTA to local branch managers sets forth:

"While we do not think the zoning plan was given a thorough trial in this territory because of the early withdrawal of distributor support, we believe that it clearly demonstrated to the intelligent people in the business the numerous advantages of this method of self-control in the correction of abuses that you were otherwise powerless to avoid. The mere open discussion of protection and run removed much of the bitterness and hard feelings that grew up over the fixing of protection and run by private contracts and secret understandings.

"The resumption of uniform zoning and zoning negotiations depends solely on the distributors. Will you help to get this important matter started again by recommending to your home office that the matter is serious, urgent and of great value to the industry?"

Dramatic Stories Figure in Producer Purchases in April

Current dramatic successes on Broadway figured prominently in purchases of production material in the month of April. Among the outstanding purchases were: "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," by United Artists; "The Animal Kingdom," by RKO, and "The Devil Passes," by MGM.

The American Play Co., New York, and various story agents report that buying of production material was unusually active in the past month. Story departments of large producers, however, said that most of the purchases in which their companies had engaged in the month were intended for the new season's productions and would not be announced in advance of the impending sales conventions. The following compilation of purchases, therefore, cannot be considered to embrace all purchases made in April.

These purchases have been confirmed:

Columbia Pictures

"Brief Moment," stage comedy-romance, by S. N. Behrman.

"That's My Boy," football novel, by Francis Wallace.

Fox Film

"Trick for Trick," stage mystery drama, by Vivian Cosby, Harry Gribble and Shirley Warde.

"Chandu The Magician," radio mystery playlet.

Jesse J. Goldburg

"The Girl With Red Hair," magazine serial.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

"The Devil Passes," stage play by Benn W. Levy.

Monogram Pictures

Original western melodrama by Wellyn Totman.

Radio Pictures

"The Animal Kingdom," stage play by Philip Barry.

"Gun Law," western melodrama, by Bennett Cohen.

"Double Exposure," original story by Paul Thompson.

United Artists

Barrett Endorses Gangster Picture

Wilton A. Barrett, executive secretary of the National Board of Review, emphatically endorsed gangster films when speaking last week before Rhode Island Council of Women at Providence. He also made the prediction that class theatres are certain to come some time in the future, and that a great dramatic film could be made on the subject of unemployment.

Barrett praised films as a great medium of culture and expression, though he does not advocate their use as a medium for presenting reform propaganda. He said he thought it a fallacy to assume that a motion picture could affect the conduct of the public. "Motion pictures are the reflection of the people rather than the people the reflection of motion pictures," he declared.

"We believe," he said, "that the motion picture should serve the same purpose as the press, pulpit and public forum in holding up a mirror to society so that things which are in need of remedy may be brought to light. For this reason we believe the gangster picture fulfills a social function."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 183 theatres in 30 key cities over the country for the calendar week ended April 30, 1932, reached a total of $2,193,153, an increase of $74,631 over the previous calendar week, ended April 23. During the latter period the total was $2,118,522 from 178 theatres in 30 cities. Only one new high individual record figure was established during the more recent week, at the Pantages Hollywood, in Hollywood, with "Careless Lady." Eleven new low individual records were noted during the same period. During the preceding week, no new "highs" and seven new "lows" were recorded.

There is no low price substitute for the best QUALITY sound equipment

. . . trying to find such a substitute has cost theatres more than $8,000,000

These exhibitors purchased equipment on the basis of price instead of Western Electric quality. They accepted inefficient service or improper go-as-you-please service instead of regular ERPI service. Result: they lost over $8,000,000.

These more than 2300 exhibitors changed to Western Electric to regain their lost patronage and so secure for all time the highest standard of quality.

8600 Western Electric exhibitors are being fully protected by ERPI's refusal to meet price competition by lowering quality . . . or by reducing standards of preventive service. They know their capital investment in Western Electric sound is safe . . . that it will continue to pay dividends in satisfied patrons. They'll tell you Western Electric costs less in the long run!

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Family Suitability

BROKEN WING GOOD
Paramount

From the stage play by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard. A musical comedy, entertaining, with attractive settings and competent acting. (Leo Carrillo, Lupe Valez, Melvyn Douglas.)

DARING DANGER GOOD
Columbia

Tim McCoy in a Western which is distinguished by fine scenery and superb riding.

DESTRY RIDES AGAIN VERY GOOD
Universal

Once again Tom Mix, as Destry, rides the plains to foil the villain in the Western manner. He is aided by his trick horse, Tony, who shares honors. (Tom Mix, Claudia Dell, Zasu Pitts.)

GIRL CRAZY VERY GOOD
RKO-Radio

The adventures of a young man who is sent to his father's Arizona ranch to get away from the "bright lights." Many laughs are provided as he converts this place into a "dude ranch". (Eddie Quillan, Robert Woolsey, Bert Wheeler, Arline Judge, Dorothy Lee, Kitty Kelly, Mitzi Greene.)

IGLOO
Scott Arctic Productions

Filmed in an Eskimo village, this is a thrilling picture of the life of these people of the North. The dangers they face and their struggle for existence are shown in a way that is at once entertaining and educational. (Native Eskimos.)

THE MAN FROM NEW MEXICO
Monogram

Another Western with the hero thwarting the efforts of the unscrupulous cattleman and falling in love with the rancher's daughter. Wholesome, with entertaining dialogue. (Tom Tyler, Caryl Lincoln, Jack Richardson, Robert Walker, Lewis Sargent, Frank Ball.)

ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENSE
Columbia VERY GOOD

A clever lawyer abandons his political ambitions to become the defender of the people, after a man whom he has sent to the electric chair is declared innocent. How he becomes the principal in a murder trial, and delivers his own defense testimony, is the climax of this gripping picture. (Edmund Lowe, Constance Cummings, Evelyn Brent.)

THE CRY OF THE WORLD
Int'nat'l Film Foundation EXCELLENT

This is the first production of a new organization, and will unquestionably meet a wide need for this type of picture. It is a compilation of actual and authentic Movietone film documents with natural sound and picture recorded simultaneously. The sequence arrangement, which begins with a prologue showing scenes from "What Price Glory," presents the factors that have led to the political and economic situation throughout the world today. It is an interesting, instructive and impressive screen presentation. The subject matter is mature for children.

THE FAMOUS FERGUSON CASE
First National VERY GOOD

Different from the average run, this picture describes the activities of the reporter who makes capital of scandal, creating sensational news regardless of its bitter consequences. This is a combination of newspaper theme and mystery story. (Joan Blondell, Grant Mitchell.)

GOW VERY GOOD
Capt. E. A. Salisbury

Gow, the greatest of head hunters, is the chief of the Western Pacific. Scenes of breathtaking beauty, and views of strange rituals, crude villages and strange modes of living are presented. One spectacular episode is the rescue of the Chief's daughter, stolen by a rival tribe. Entertaining, educational, authentic and thrilling.

GRAND HOTEL EXCELLENT
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A production of outstanding dramatic value based on the stage play by Vicki Baum. The character creations of the group of people living in the hotel, whose lives, unknown to each other, cross and recross in the building of the story, are so vivid, so perfect, that one seems to be living with them, rather than observing a picture. Marked by masterly direction, it is probably the greatest dramatic effort of the screen, to date. (Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Wallace Beery, Lewis Stone.)

LOVE BOUND GOOD
Peerless

A young woman blackmailer has no pity for her victims, but learns something of their suffering finally, when, after falling in love with the son of one of them, she is caught and imprisoned. (Jack Mulhall, Natalie Moorhead, Clara Kimball Young, Edmund Breese.)

MISLEADING LADY GOOD
Paramount

A romantic farce that has an escaped lunatic for its comedy balance. A bored society girl is promised a leading theatrical role if she can get front page publicity by marrying a famous African explorer. He learns of the plan and proceeds to wreak vengeance on her. The ending is a happy one. It is amusing in spots but is generally light entertainment. (Claudette Colbert, Edmund Lowe, Stuart Erwin.)

MISS PINKERTON VERY GOOD
First National

A screen adaptation of Mary Roberts Rinehart's recent novel, "Miss Pinkerton of Scotland Yard," that offers thrilling entertainment because of its well-developed mystery and the suspense sustained throughout the story. It will be enjoyed by all mystery story readers and by many who are not, because of its entertainment value and the excellent character interpretations by a well selected cast. (Joan Blondell, George Brent, John Wray.)

MIDNIGHT PATROL GOOD
Monogram

The efforts of Johnny, a cub reporter, to make good on an assignment, bring him fame and a fiancee within twenty-four hours. (Betty Bronson, Mary Nolan, Regis Toomey.)

SKY BRIDE VERY GOOD
Paramount

A romance of modern aviation and two stunt fliers, based on the story by Russell Holman. One partner is killed and the other, oppressed with his own share in the accident, resolves never to fly again. The story develops in an intensely interesting manner, with remarkable flying scenes. An unusually good motion picture. (Richard Arlen, Jack Oakie, Virginia Bruce, Tom Douglas, Robert Coogan.)

SYMPHONY OF SIX MILLION
RKO EXCELLENT

Based on a story by Fannie Hurst, this picture tells of a young Jewish surgeon who, interested only in the suffering among the poor, is persuaded by his family to change his practice and administer to the ills of the rich. Unhappiness follows until a childhood sweetheart is the means of taking him back to his beloved work. An unusual theme, full of human interest, with a splendid cast and excellent direction. (Ricardo Cortez, Anna Appel, Irene Dunne, Gregory Ratoff.)

TEXAS PIONEERS GOOD
Monogram

A scheming scout, with loyalty to no one but himself, causes an attack on a fort. The redskins and the settlers take part in the fast action. (Bill Cody, Andy Shuford.)

WHEN A FELLER NEEDS A FRIEND
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer EXCELLENT

This is the story of a lame boy whose parents, loving him with heart-hungry care, are inclined to pamper and spoil him rather than develop his chances for normal boyhood. This boasts the attractive combination of Jackie Cooper and Chic Sale among its stars and is a touching, living and true presentation of the intimate companionship that often exists between the very young and the saddened old. Jackie Cooper again, of course, wrenches one's heartstrings with his pathos and extraordinarily sensitive acting.

ZAPPATORE GOOD
Napoli Film

A laborer becomes a farmer and is ambitious for his son to become a lawyer. After wasting his time in Vienna, his parents have to sell their belongings to save him from the toils of a money lender. How the problems of all are solved, we leave to the picture to enlighten you. (Silvio Orsini, Tina Ribaldi.)

THE MOUTHPIECE VERY GOOD
Warner

Adapted from a play by Frank J. Collins, this tragic story, based on incidents in the life of an unscrupulous criminal lawyer, moves to a great dramatic finish. Involved in the meshes of his criminal practices, he finds it impossible to readjust his life and meets death at the hands of his underworld associates. This is strong, dramatic, adult entertainment with some objectionable features, but with an outstanding interpretation given by Mr. William. (Warren William, Sidney Fox, John Wray, Arline McMahon.)

NIGHT COURT GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

The machinations of a corrupt judge to victimize the prisoners in the night court of a great city give us a contrast in characteriza-

SELECTION OF PICTURE SELECTIONS

tions that show Walter Huston and Phillips Holmes at their best.

PROBATION GOOD
Chesterfield

A young society girl goes to the police court with her uncle, the judge, for a glimpse of the seamy side of life. She hears the story of a young Southerner arrested for attacking a wealthy young cad, who had been too attentive to his sister. The judge paroles the young man to his niece as chauffeur and the outcome is exciting and interesting. Well acted and directed. (Sally Blane, John Darrow, Eddie Phillips, Clara Kimball Young, J. Farrell MacDonald.)

THE RICH ARE ALWAYS WITH US
Warner GOOD

The extravagant ways of the ultra-rich as a story may prove more irritating than entertaining as a subject these days. The interpretation given this sophisticated drama by an excellent cast, however, plus clever dialogue, and the reality of the situations, will probably be enjoyed by adult audiences. (Ruth Chatterton, George Brent, Adrienne Dore, Bette Davis, John Miljan.)

RIDERS OF THE DESERT GOOD
Sono Art-World Wide

A mail coach robbery, a wounded driver and the work of the Arizona Rangers form the plot of this regulation western. Excellent riding and photography add to the entertainment value. (Bob Steele, Gertie Messenger.)

SCANDAL FOR SALE VERY GOOD
Universal

Taken from the book, "Hot News," portraying the life of a professional scandal monger, a black sheep among newspaper men, who prostitutes his profession in a mad search for sensational news. (Pat O'Brien, Rose Hobart, Charles Bickford.)

SCAREHEADS GOOD
Capital

A young reporter assumes the blame for a murder in order to clear his brother, who is falsely accused. Everything clears in a highly satisfactory way. Too melodramatic to be at all realistic, the picture, however, is clean in story and treatment. (Richard Talmadge, Jacqueline Wells, King Baggott, James Whitlock.)

SHOP ANGEL GOOD
Tower Pictuers

A department store's personnel enact in an absorbing manner the adventures of a clever employee and the family of her employer. (Marion Shilling, Anthony Bushell.)

SILVER LINING GOOD
United Artists

A wealthy girl with an income from the rental of a squalid tenament house comes finally to understand the suffering of the poor and helps to improve their lives. (Maureen O'Sullivan, Betty Compson, John Warburton, Montagu Love.)

THE STRANGE CASE OF CLARA DEANE GOOD
Paramount

A story of mother love that parallels, to some extent, "Sarah and Son." A disillusioned wife, married to a worthless criminal, is imprisoned under a false charge. On her release years later, she finds her daughter adopted into another world, and, with the courage of her love and for the girl's happiness, renounces her. It is a well-told, believable story, full of emotional appeal and strong dramatic values. (Wynne Gibson, Pat O'Brien, Frances Dee, Dudley Digges.)

STREET OF WOMEN GOOD
Warner

A wealthy idler is changed into an ambitious business man through his genuine love for a woman who is not his wife. The latter, selfish and luxury-loving, refuses him a divorce. It is a much-abused theme with no original suggestion in its development, but it is well photographed, directed and interpreted by an able cast. (Kay Francis, Alan Dinehart, Gloria Stuart, Roland Young.)

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY
Warner EXCELLENT

Mr. Arliss brings us another delightful story that becomes distinguished screen entertainment because of the artistry of the acting and the care given to details and setting. As a man of wealth, he announces his financial failure to test the moral fibre of his wife and grown children. It is filled with amusing situations but is sincere and believable in its story basis and interpretation. (George Arliss, Mary Astor, Evelyn Knapp, William Janney, Hardie Albright.)

THE TRIAL OF VIVIENNE WARE
Fox VERY GOOD

A murder mystery story with all the attendant suspense and thrills, and with the interest well sustained until the final scene. Bits of comedy, clever dialogue, romance, tragedy and plenty of action make this thrilling entertainment. (Joan Bennett, Donald Cook, Skeets Gallagher, Zasu Pitts.)

VANITY FAIR VERY GOOD
Allied Pictures

A clever and artistic adaptation of Thackeray's classic, "Vanity Fair," done in modern dress. It is the story of a beautiful, but ruthless and ambitious girl, utterly devoid of moral principle, who uses her fascination for men to procure the luxuries of life, and finds in the end that "the wages of sin is death." Adult audiences will enjoy the beautiful English settings, the thoughtful direction and the excellent work of the cast. (Myrna Loy, Conway Tearle, Barbara Kent, Anthony Bushell, Walter Byron, Lionel Belmore.)

WITHOUT HONORS GOOD
Artclass

A fast-moving Western of a reputed bad man who becomes a Texas Ranger to clear the false accusation made against his dead brother. A better-than-usual plot is clearly worked out and offers good entertainment for those who enjoy the Western stories. (Harry Carey, Mae Busch.)

FOREIGN FEATURES

BONDAGE VERY GOOD
Ufa

Adapted from the book, "The Danischeffs," by Pierre Newsky, this is an interesting portrayal of Russia in 1850 when the wealthy owned both the land and the serfs who worked it. The story is built around the love of an aristocrat for a girl of the peasant class, and includes a revolt of the workers on a great estate against oppression. It is developed in an interesting manner and has a happy ending. (Heinrich George, Mona Maris, Harry Halm.)

CHIN CHIN CHINAMAN
British International VERY GOOD

A poor title for a fairly original mystery melodrama, with cleverly maintained suspense and a super-detective, employed to guard the jewels of a Chinese official. It is well portrayed and offers enjoyable entertainment. (Leon Lion, Elizabeth Allan, George Curzon.)

DZIESIECIN z PAWIAKA
(Ten Condemned) VERY GOOD
Blok-Muza Production

This first Polish language talking film shown in this country is a thrilling story, based on historic facts, of ten Polish revolutionists sent to the Pawiaka prison in Warsaw, in 1906, for the assassination of the Russian governor-general. Some of the prominent political leaders of Poland today figured in the fight for freedom portrayed in the picture. A good cast offers excellent character portrayals. English captions for those unfamiliar with the language help to interpret the story. (Josef Wegrzyn, Karolina Lubienska, Adam Brodzisz.)

GOLDEN MOUNTAINS GOOD
Amkino

A grim and stirring study of the suffering, confusion of mind and final revolt of the Russian peasant. It is powerful in its realism and in its photography. There are some dull and slow-moving parts but the acting, in general, is admirable and the drama itself intense and impressive. (Boris Poslavsky, M. Minchurin, J. V. Korin.)

IL EST CHARMANT EXCELLENT
(The Charm School)
Paramount

A clever French musical comedy with the theme of a young law student who runs his law office in a small French town, in the way one would expect in a musical comedy. It is generally charming with clever comedy and good music. Two principals explain the plot in English as the story opens. (Henri Garat, Meg Lemonnier, Baron Fils.)

LIEUTENANT, WARST DU HUSAR?
(Lieutenant, Were You a Hussar?)
Aafa GOOD

A conventional musical comedy plot of an exiled princess and a Revolutionary leader. Passably good entertainment. (Mady Christians, Gustav Diesel, Georg Alexander, Lotte Spira.)

THE MIRACLE OF ST. ANTHONY
F. Vitullo Productions VERY GOOD

An Italian silent film with well handled drama and a fine musical theme. Temptation, redemption, and a faith that restores sight to a blind man are the story themes, treated in an appealing way. The titles are doubled in English. (Maurizio d'Ancora, Ellen Meis, Evalina Paoli.)

RESERVE HAT RUH VERY GOOD
(Reserves on Furlough)
Tobis

A German language screen comedy of life in the German army before the war. Farcical adventures of two of the recruits are most enjoyable. A good cast gives an excellent performance. (Claere Rommer, Lucie Englisch, Santa Soeneland, Paul Hoerberger.)

RONNY GOOD
Ufa

An original screen operetta that lifts a conventional and unimportant story into a gay and

RITA C. McGOLDRICK'S SELECTIONS

amusing musical film. Ronny is a costume designer who, through mischance, becomes prima donna in an operetta written by the Prince of Perusa. An English screen translation of the important dialogue and songs is given. (Kaethe von Nagy, Willy Fritsch, Otto Wallburg.)

DER TEUFELSBRUDER VERY GOOD
Foreign Service Company

A German version of the opera, "Fra Diavolo." An Italian version was released some months ago and two of the singers in that version appear in this. The story of the robber chieftain who outwits those who try to capture him is developed with fine action by a capable cast. The music is well rendered and there are settings of rare scenic beauty. (Tino Pattiera, Kurt Lilian, Brigitte Harney, Heinrich Heilinger.)

Short Subjects

ABYSSINIA EXCELLENT
Columbia

A Travelaugh with John P. Medbury giving running comments on a journey up the Nile, a trek across a desert with dances and war maneuvers by the native Abyssinians.

AWAKENING VERY GOOD
Standard

A one-reel dramatization of the awakening of spring. Young animals in the fields, birds trying their wings. Included is some lovely imaginative photography and a great deal of natural history interest.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT GOOD
Warner

Mr. Ripley shows us some astounding facts in this short. There are two men in Missouri who have reached the age of 119 years; there is truffle hunting with pigs; the largest book in the world, weighing a ton, and a police dog who walks a tightrope.

THE CAT'S CANARY EXCELLENT
RKO-Pathe

An Aesop Fable full of clean comedy, joy and laughter. A cat swallows a bird and becomes musical.

THE CHIMP VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Laurel and Hardy in a clever comedy. Instead of wages for their work, in a circus, they are given a chimpanzee and a flea circus. Their attempt to sleep with their new friends provides hilarious entertainment.

THE COLE CASE VERY GOOD
Warner (Adults)

An S. S. Van Dine mystery short subject that is exceptionally well developed. The famous Dr. Crabtree (Donald Meek) unmasks the real criminal in an unexpected climax.

HIGH SCHOOL HOOFER
Warner VERY GOOD

In this adaptation of the opera, "Carmen," the beautiful rendition of "Toreador" and "Card Song" will delight any audience.

A COMPLIMENT FROM FORD

When Conrad Nagel returned recently to the Coast from a tour of the country, he brought a message from Detroit and Henry Ford, who told him that no industry has made a better record in re-establishing confidence than that of the motion picture. According to Nagel, the automobile builder complimented theatre owners and distributors for their courage in keeping houses open and thousands at work while other businessmen, possessing of less nerve and fight, closed their doors and swelled the ranks of the unemployed. Nagel was heartily welcomed on his return.

The nursery rhyme, "Sing a Song of Sixpence," made into a clever and amusing Oswald cartoon.

GERARD FLAYS TAXATION; LEVEE ASKS "NEW DEAL"

Former Ambassador Attacks Anti-trust Laws; Academy President Tells Picture Club of False Economy Dangers

If the late President Woodrow Wilson had not appointed James W. Gerard our ambassador to Germany, Gerard would not have spent four years in Berlin. And if he had not spent four years in Berlin, Gerard would not have written "My Four Years in Germany." And if he had not written "My Four Years in Germany," Warner Brothers would not have been able to produce that picture. And if Warner Brothers had not made a lot of money, they would not have been able to finance their excursion into talkers. And if Warners had not made an excursion into talkers, the sound field might not have been developed. And if the sound field had not been developed the motion picture industry would not be as large as it is today. And if the motion picture industry was not as large as it is today, there would not be a New York Motion Picture Club. And if there was no New York Motion Picture Club, the Honorable James W. Gerard would not have been a guest of honor at the club on Tuesday in the first place.

Thus was James W. Gerard introduced by Louis Nizer, of the New York Film Board of Trade, to a representative gathering of film notables at the third weekly "open forum" and luncheon of the Motion Picture Club on Tuesday. Gerard immediately launched into a brief but fiery attack on taxes "which are burdening the nation" generally, asking that the motion picture industry call this fact to the attention of people of the country so that concerted effort might be made pointing toward relief.

Gerard said that 25 per cent of the nation's income goes to federal, state and municipal taxes. "No nation can prosper with its back broken by taxation," he added, as he reiterated a plea that films be used to "bring home to the public this fearsome burden."

Would Drop Anti-Trust Laws

The ex-ambassador to Germany under the Woodrow Wilson regime said he advocates the elimination of the Sherman antitrust laws as a means of alleviating the present economic stress on general business.

Gerard concluded his remarks with the suggestion that an international basic language be used in the production of motion pictures in order that American companies might regain the ground which they have lost in European markets since the adoption of sound.

Nizer, as chairman of the meeting with Jack Alicoate, vice-president of the club, then introduced M. C. Levee as the next speaker. Nizer presented Levee to the gathering as the non-yes man of Hollywood—"the man with an idea."

"Too Much for Failures"—Levee

Levee is in New York from the Coast to discuss with industry leaders the details of his new Screen Guild plan of cooperative production whereby "key" artists would participate in the economics of picture-making. He admitted that he might be looked upon in some quarters as "radical," but his answer was a generalized defense of his plan as against what he termed "the present idea of rewriting the picture business after a six-weeks' survey spent talking to yes-men."

Levee, who is president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, said he left Hollywood with the moral support of many production leaders, some of whom at first belittled his plan, but later admitted it to be a solution to many of the industry's current ills—socalled.

"This industry pays too much money for its failures and not enough money for its successes," Levee said. He decried the current methods of operating, adding that "mass production cannot possibly survive."

Discusses Economic Factors

Levee then proceeded with a general discourse on the industry's economic factors. "The Coast cannot adjust itself fast enough to meet the situation because of contractual obligations," he said, referring to high-salaried artists and other production phases. "Cutting salaries of stenographers will not alter things, considering such cases as that of one important company, with a 50-picture program, which wrote off $1,000,000 worth of dead scenarios last year!"

At this point, and without further explanation, Levee told the assemblage that "the industry has a place for a man who will not be a party to chicanery or to secret negotiations as regards the acquisition of important talent from another."

Levee explained the workings of his new Screen Guild plan. "Each picture," he said, "would be produced as a trust, exactly like a real estate trust which controls certain property. The Guild would finance production without any charge for interest or bonus for financing." Key artists "would get 20 per cent of the agreed salary in cash and 80 per cent in script. The first $120,000 would be used to pay back the Guild and the next $80,000 or so would buy up the script originally given the more important artists—players, director, writers, etc. All over $200,000 would be split on a proportionate basis between the Guild and the key artists, depending on what percentage of script was at first given the artists."

"Let these high-salaried artists take a chance and find out whether they are really worth $187,000," concluded Levee.

Big 4 Increases Coverage Nine Per Cent in 1932

Big 4 has sold 1,135 new accounts in 1932, bringing the total number using Big 4 product to 8,247—or 65½% of a total of 12,605 sound houses throughout the country, according to a statement issued this week.

14 Counties Favor "Blues"

Fourteen out of 71 counties in Wisconsin favored the continuation of Sunday "blue laws" in the state, at the recent referendum. The state as a whole voted for repeal by the 1933 legislature.

Consolidated Votes Capital Reduction

At a meeting of stockholders of Consolidated Film Industries, late last week, it was announced that earnings for the first quarter of 1932 were approximately $300,000, and would be about the same for the current quarter. It was said President Herbert J. Yates anticipates an increase in earnings during the second half year due both to new contracts now being negotiated and operating economy as the result of the perfection of new machinery.

Stockholders at the meeting voted to reduce the amount of capital of the company from $9,000,000 to $6,524,973, to the end that the capital shall consist of $15 with respect to each share of issued and outstanding preferred stock. The monetary difference, namely $2,475,027, is to be transferred to capital surplus.

After official sanction is given, the revised charter of Consolidated will now provide: that the total number of shares that may be issued by the corporation is 1,000,000 shares, of which 400,000 are to be participating preferred, each without par value, and 600,000 shares are to be common stock each with a par value of $1. Each share of common of no par now outstanding shall be convertible into the new common having a par of $1.

Sono Art Buys British Film

As its first announcement regarding next season's product, Sono Art-World Wide states it has acquired American rights to "Bachelor's Folly," co-starring Herbert Marshall and Edna Best, and featuring Gordon Harker, comedian. The picture was produced by Gainsborough, in cooperation with British Lion Corporation, both of London.

New Series for Universal

Universal will release a series of 26 shorts, "Down Memory Lane," to be produced by William Rowland and Monte Brice, and featuring various celebrities of the moment. Louis Sobol and Nick Kenedy, columnists, will present the featured persons in each of the series.

Kahane, Selznick Confer

B. B. Kahane, president of RKO, left last week for Hollywood to confer with David O. Selznick, in charge of production, on the 1932-33 schedule. Kahane will attend the sales convention at the Drake hotel, Chicago, May 16-18.

Bachman Goes to Coast

J. G. Bachman, who will produce four for RKO next season, leaves New York by plane for Hollywood this week, accompanied by Jack Shapiro, partner, a theatre builder who will engage in production for the first time.

To Hear Bowes in Germany

The program of the Capitol theatre in New York, conducted by Major Bowes, will be rebroadcast in Germany on Sunday, May 8, by the German Broadcasting Company.

HONEY OR VINEGAR!

THE old expression about catching more flies with honey than with vinegar can be applied in many cases to our own cute little industry. Not any particular branch, but just in general.

Let us cite for example, that great working combination known as the Harmony Quartette (the title is ours), consisting of Harry Kalmine, zone manager; Harry Goldberg, advertising and publicity director; Lou Brager, exploitation director, and Al Zimbalist, editor of "Howdy," their intimate little division house organ.

These four men are concerned with just one thing; keeping the Warner Theatres in New Jersey out of the red and operating efficiently. To accomplish this task they have perfected one of the finest working organizations in any circuit and the proof of fair play and human treatment of every man in the division is reflected in the aggressive showmanship being invoked to keep that division profitable.

Some division and zone managers have just the opposite slant on handling managers. They believe in driving, riding, insulting, intimidating and worrying their house men under the erroneous impression that it is the only way to get results. Perhaps the constant changing of managers and division managers in these zones is ample proof that such methods are not only wrong, but impossible for real results.

In addition to their other "family" activities, they have formed themselves into a Club which carries many important benefits for the members besides promoting good fellowship and friendly relations among them all. Special discounts from merchants, frequent get-together blow-outs and other forms of entertainment are constantly being engineered until now they look upon their club as their best recreation.

The Harmony angle is further emphasized via the division house organ, "Howdy," which is edited by Al Zimbalist. Here again we find that the keynote is "let's work together," rather than "must"—"must"—"must" from cover to cover. Which should be quite an inspiration and education to those who handle other circuit house organs.

Keep your eye on the Kalmine Zone of Warner Theatres; we have an idea that they are going to be pace-setters for the rest of the circuit.

LOTS of old friends are arriving in New York due to important circuit changes constantly (and regularly) taking place. The Round Table welcomes Eddie Eckles to the big town where he assumes charge of RKO's house organ . . . and we won't be surprised if Eddie names it "Now."

As we type this item we are gazing fondly at a beautiful bound volume of the original "Now" which for years was an inspiration for every Fox West Coast manager. Somehow or other we're going to enjoy reading another of its kind under the editorial guidance of Eddie. We're wishing him lots o' luck!

IS the following of interest to you?—

A check up on Club members who have dropped out of theatre connections reveals that more than a dozen of them are holding down important, and well-paying, jobs in commercial fields where their previous experience in showmanship is standing them in good stead.

Showmanship is a much needed asset to many commercial companies and they know that the best men for creating selling and advertising ideas are the type of men who were successful in show-business.

Next time you are told there is no future in this merry-go-round business of ours, just remember that good showmen are always in great demand; if not in show-business then in commercial organizations.

LOUIS ORLOVE of Milwaukee very thoughtfully sent us a large cartoon of delicious cakes which he promoted in a city-wide tie-up for his theatre.

Swell thought there . . . if only all of our members would send their Chairman samples of their various food, candy and other tie-up material we could well afford to thumb our nose at this mugg depression.

Far be it from me to even hint at such a suggestion . . . but . . . prompt editorial acknowledgement will be made of all such contributions to my diet-stricken stomach . . . and if we get more than we can use we'll start an unemployed managers' coffee and cake service. . . . (If they close many more theatres it may be necessary.) . . . Well . . . anyway . . . thanks, Louis, for the cake . . . please send me a cup of coffee . . . I love to dunk . . . "CHICK"

PUBLIX CREW DOWN IN ALTOONA WAGED A HEAVY CAMPAIGN

Among the multitude of business boosting stunts is the one tried out recently by the Publix theatre men in Altoona, Pa., General Manager Arthur Himmielein, Managers W. W. Ackerman and C. A. Notopoulos and Publicity Director Carl B. Sherred. It proved beyond a doubt that even in these trying times that there's a way to bring shekles to the box office if the will to win is put behind the move.

This group of showmen tied up with the local post of Veterans of Foreign Wars on a percentage proposition, 75 per cent to the house and 25 per cent to the Post, with a split on all above four thousand. Over 800 veterans are members of the local organization and they all lent a helping hand to make the event a big success. The Olympic, the same house used by the Post last year, was again used for the "Week."

One of the local newspapers tied-in with the occasion by issuing a special six-page section. The first page was almost entirely devoted to matter describing the V. of F. W. Movie Week, theatre and attractions. The balance was filled with a variety of ads promoted on the strength of the tie-up, news of the veteran's association and other interesting articles.

Other news concerning Sherred and his associates includes a stunt pulled on "Rue Morgue," whereby a corking gorilla outfit was secured from a New York City firm at a rental charge of $15 per week. The "gorilla" was used on the street every day and hauled to schools, where he handed out heralds. This stunt blocked traffic and put the picture over to a big gross. Sherred attributes much of the success of this stunt to the realistic outfit.

Kiddie trade is also on the upturn at the Mishler Theatre through the mediums of Buck Jones and Tim McKoy outdoor clubs, attendance reaching from 2,500 to 3,000 youngsters on the week. This, Sherred thinks remarkable, when taking into consideration such forerunners as "Mickey Mouse," "Our Gang," "Krazy Kat" and like organizations. The Warner Theatre also has a Kiddie Club and features a giveaway of presents on Saturdays.

We might have known that the Publix crew in Altoona would have shoulders to the wheel in an effort to garner all that was coming to them in the way of business, and we're glad to hear that they are getting away with it. Sit down at your typewriter again in the near future, Carl, and tell us some more about what you and the rest of the boys are doing down your way.

Ralph McAleer Dead

Ralph McAleer, owner and manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Parsons, Kas., and a well known showman in state theatrical circles, recently died from results of an injury sustained in a fall down the stairway leading to the basement of his building. He was forty years of age.

SALMON PROMOTED!

Monty Salmon, who has been acting as city manager for Publix in Philadelphia for the past several months, has been promoted to the post of district manager of the Atlantic States division, with heaquarters at the Tower Theatre, Philadelphia.

Salmon will have supervision of all Publix theatres in Philadelphia, Ambridge, Butler, Johnstown, Uniontown and Parkersburg, Pa.

PETE EGAN WAGED A SPLENDID CAMPAIGN DESPITE BITTER COLD

Despite thirty degrees below weather in Calgary, Canada, during the month of March, Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre, waged a campaign that produced excellent results at the box office.

Included among his advance work was the distribution of heralds in all parts of the city, using special matinee coupons for the special showing at the 9:30 A.M. show, and a broadcast over two local radio stations two days in advance. The front of the theatre was attractively closed in with compo-board and decorated with cutouts and stills.

After much dickering and salesmanship on the part of Egan, permission was secured to use a 30-year-old fire engine. The accompanying photo will show the antique steamer, with its double team of horses, standing in front of the theatre. It caused considerable of a sensation when it was drawn through the city streets, smoke pouring from the stack and one of the firemen letting out the Joe E. Brown yell. Traffic was held up at the principal intersection for over a half-hour.

Another stunt that did much to obtain publicity on opening day was brought about through the fact that a local organization known as the Gyro Club was holding a tag day for a baby clinic at the same time. It then occurred to Egan that his fire engine ballyhoo could be used for a dual purpose and negotiations resulted in placing a banner on one side to aid in the drive for the clinic. In appreciation the Club promised a party of 50 couples for the second night's show.

A tie-up was also made with the daily newspaper for the running of a classified page gag, consisting of guest tickets based on answering five questions, such as "Where Can You Have Furniture Stored and Pianos Moved?" The answers could naturally be found among the many small ads.

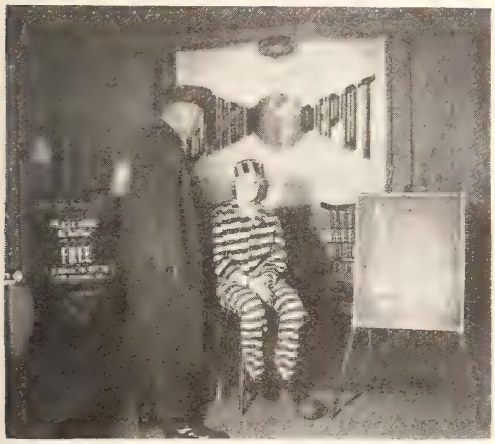
It was a bitter cold wave that swept over Calgary at the time Egan sold this picture and down here in the States it's hard to realize just what a handicap 30 degrees below weather can be to box office possibilities. However, in spite of the severe cold his campaign resulted in one of the largest turnouts he ever experienced.

By this time Pete Egan and Calgary have undoubtedly thawed out and we'll be expecting further news from this prominent Canadian Round Tabler. Incidentally, this campaign will, of course, be included among the entrants in the Warner-First National drive.

CLARK USED NOVEL LOBBY STUNT WHEN SELLING "BIG HOUSE"

A novel lobby gag was recently used by Charles B. Clark, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, Md., that gained a lot of publicity for "Ladies of the Big House."

Two thousand envelopes containing dummy keys were distributed, with copy announcing that if the enclosed key fitted the handcuffs on a lady (attractive blonde) seated in the theatre lobby, the holders of the keys would be admitted free to the attraction. Fifteen bona fide keys were included among the dummies. The young lady (see photo) was dressed in convict clothes, with ball and chain around her ankles.



It's almost needless to state that the gag caused plenty of comment and furnished a lot of amusement for everyone who tried to unlock the handcuffs, all resulting in a most lively lobby attraction. It should not be an expensive stunt to put over for cheap keys can be purchased in lots of 2,000 at an attractive price. Time for the handcuffed lady and cost of her costume are the only other items of expense, except envelopes and printing, and an ad on the back of envelope might even take care of that expense.

CALDWELL PROMOTED WALL PAPER TO USE AS "PARADE" HERALD

It's been some little time since we've run across use of the wall paper herald but we note that it was employed not long ago on "Manhattan Parade" by J. G. Caldwell, manager of the Princess Theatre, Aurora, Ill. The familiar line, "We Took The Paper From The Walls To Accommodate The Crowds," followed name of theatre at top of herald. Attractive mats and copy combined to make it an appealing medium.

The samples were secured from local paint concerns and cut to desired size. As Caldwell states, it's not a herald that can be used very often but with a colored film such as the one named above it proved an effective novelty. In the meantime this showman will have put over another stunt and we'll be awaiting word of it.

DAN CLINTON GOOD DIPLOMAT DOWN IN TOWN OF PANHANDLE

Once again we hear from Dan Clinton, manager of the Palace Theatre, Panhandle, Texas, who has been hard at work ever since he reopened that house. He recently put over a little gesture of good will which will undoubtedly serve him well in time to come.

In Panhandle the church element is against the showing of Sunday movies, but it's all right with the City Council, consequently Clinton runs his shows on that day. However, in order to placate the church heads and gain their good will, he occasionally ties-up with a Sunday school class and has the members sell tickets for a 50% share of the gate. Adults are charged at the rate of 35c, youngsters over 12 years of age at the rate of 25c and children are admitted for 10c. This class also gets up a Country Store Night of their own by tying up with local merchants for the usual awards of articles, as well as cakes, pies, candy, etc. On these occasions it is customary for the High School Band to gather in front of the theatre in order to attract attention to the event.

This department has often commented upon these get-together movements between theatre and churches and Clinton's method appears to be a good one for the fostering of a better understanding among all elements in a community. He evidently feels that it is better to occasionally take a half a loaf and retain the good will of the churches than to exercise his right to Sunday shows by holding them without letting some church in on the deal. After all is said and done, the element of competition on Sundays often is the main bone of contention and Clinton's sacrifice appears to be one way to alleviate the friction. Others in similar situations may profit by his suggestions.

WEISS GETS RESULTS BY CONSISTENT PLUG ON ALL ATTRACTIONS

It's been several weeks since we've reported on the activities of Alfred Weiss, Jr., manager of the Park Theatre, Tampa, Fla., but we're able to state at this writing that he's still busily engaged with the business of selling shows at the same old stand.

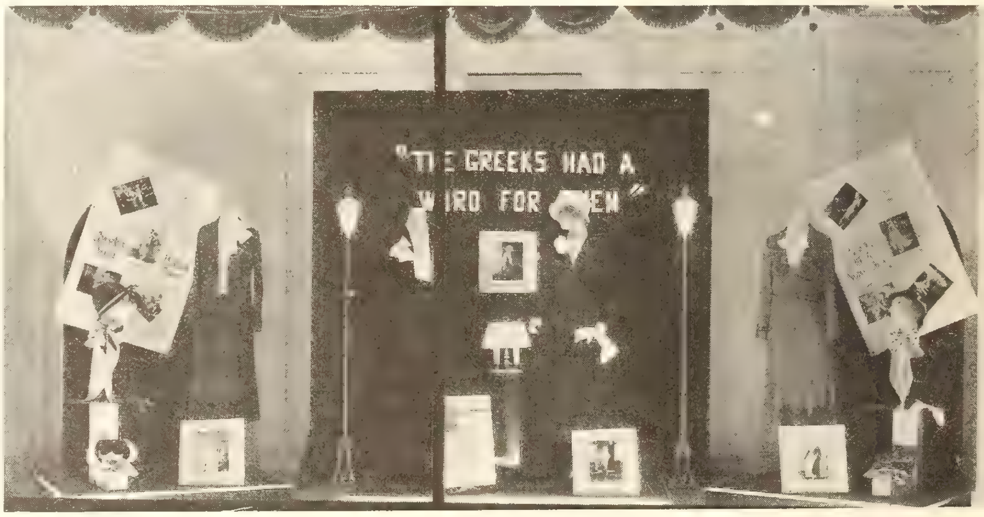
When he played "Emma" a short time ago he distributed several thousand cards, blank on one side and copy on other side stating that free tickets would be given to a certain number of patrons who demonstrated the number of times the word Emma could be written on the card. A couple of the returned cards at hand are conclusive proof of how seriously this gag was taken and, as Weiss states, it would be quite necessary to spend an afternoon to count the words. He also had a tie-up on the same picture with a grocer, who gave permission to have all bags stamped with copy reading, "Emma Says Buy All Your Groceries and Meats at Blank's Market." Over 60,000 bags were distributed from the seventeen stores in the chain at the small cost of $9. As a further tie-up for the idea, the person who brought in the most stamped bags received a guest ticket for the show. Outstanding trade resulted from the above stunts.

His efforts on "Rue Morgue" also produced gratifying results and included the sending of 150 letters to Doctors; a novelty card, with a "test your health" gag (if the spot turns red see doctor—if it remains black it's strong enough to see the thrill picture of the year); engagement of an attractive girl in uniform of nurse to pass out small envelopes containing capsules "to give you strength enough to see" the picture; use of a truck with two 24-sheets posted on each side, gong attached, on streets for three days, and regular run of newspaper advertising.

He used two other little gags successfully on recent pictures. One was a small paper bag containing peanuts. Copy read, "You wouldn't take a ham sandwich to a banquet but everybody takes peanuts to the circus—Polly of the Circus at Park Theatre Now." The other was a long "Adult Fare" ticket for the most thrilling entertainment trip in the world—from Peking to Shanghai—via "Shanghai Express."

Weiss and his gang at the Park have been hitting the ball a lively pace over a considerable period and outstanding business at his house undoubtedly resulted from consistent plugging of each show. Inexpensive novelties, such as described in the above paragraphs, have been used with excellent results in the community. We're glad to be able to pass some of Weiss' tips along to his fellow showmen and hope he'll come through with others.

SHOWWOMAN WARD PROMOTED ATTRACTIVE WINDOW



Anna Bell Ward, well-known showwoman of Lexington, Ky., and assistant general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company in that city, recently put over a corking window for "The Greeks Had a Word for Them." It was made with one of the prominent department stores in Lexington, certain stills from the picture appropriately tying in with the display of new fashions in women's clothing. You can see for yourselves that the title received a great break.

DeHAVEN INTRIGUED KIDDIES WITH OFFER OF MINIATURE CAR

Some time back we mentioned that A. Milo De Haven, manager of the Burke Theatre, Bronx, New York City, had engineered a tie-up with an auto dealer for the give-away of a juvenile model Pontiac and we are now privileged to record that a certain Bronx youngster is the proud owner of the car.

The campaign ran over a period of four Saturdays and on the last day more than 700 kids were on hand to attend the matinee when the car was given away. In addition to the auto some twenty-five awards of books, dolls, drawing sets, games, etc., were handed out to the fortunate ones. If you will carefully study the photo on this page you will see the additional articles on display near the candle torch lamps.

The entire cost of the campaign including 250 window cards, heralds, program and newspaper advertising, was absorbed by the auto company, as well as auto and additional awards.

We can see by the above and from copy in his programs that De Haven is doing some tall hustling for business up his way and there can be no doubt but that costless give-aways are one way of solving the present trade problem. We also note that he recently tied-up with three local music shops for the give-away of 25 harmonicas at a Saturday matinee. This was another costless deal that made a hit with the kiddies. That's all for this time. More dope on Showman De Haven just as soon as we get a further line on his activities.

WORTH LOOKING INTO!

At this time of the year, many street and outdoor events are staged by schools, high schools, local organizations, etc., and if you are on your toes you ought to arrange to "shoot" as many of those events as possible.

You know you can take regulation standard film yourself and save the expense of a cameraman, especially if you are located where it is hard to get a good man. So there is no reason why you should not take local pictures of events bringing out large crowds, or of parades, etc. (especially Decoration Day parades), and if you use a car, have appropriate banners or signs telling the crowds when and where they can see the pictures.

Don't overlook the spectators at such events. Get slow panorama shots of them; they'll surely want to see what they look like. All representative groups attending these outdoor rallies should also be taken separately. Order yourself some titles and then you have a good bit of "vegetables" to serve with the "roast."

Another good stunt is to tie up with all outdoor events (when possible) so that in case of rain the event should be staged in your theatre during the morning. This angle presents many good-will tie-ups. It's hard to set them forth in detail because they are mostly a matter of local nature and you should best know the way to tackle them.

MELINCOFF TIED-UP WITH MERCHANTS ON CO-OPERATIVE FLYER

A fourteen by twenty inch cooperative flyer was used by Max Melincoff, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lawrence Mass., for exploitation of "The Crowd Roars."

Each of the several merchants distributed 5,000 of the heralds, making a total of 50,000 that were put out in addition to the 10,000 handled by the theatre. Machine finish paper stock was used.

Every ad related to some local firm or organization concerned with the auto industry and was therefore a "natural" for the picture. All the deal cost Melincoff was a matter of fifty tickets to those who made an appropriate sentence for the picture

HERMAN KANTER HAD GOOD RETURNS FROM A SKETCHING STUNT

Prior to leaving his post as manager of the Lido Theatre, Bronx, New York City, Herman Kanter put over a sketching contest on "Lady With Past" that proved to be an excellent patronage-booster for the house.

For best sketches of Constance Talmadge awards of passes were made, the first award calling for a season pass; second, a three-months pass and a one-month pass for the third. Interest was kept alive through lobby display, program announcement and by trailer.

The display of drawings in the lobby attracted much attention and it was planned to have the winning sketches sent to Miss Talmadge with request for her acknowledgment to artist, announcment of same to be made on screen. It was also suggested that the star might include an autographed photo of herself.

This was a nifty little stunt of Kanter's and we don't doubt for one instant that the fans were interested, particularly as to the letter and photo angles. We are at loss at this writing to advise as to this showman's whereabouts but trust that he will let us know in due time.

POSTER ART WORK FROM ROBERT RUNKLE

Herewith a few samples of poster art work submitted to the Round Table Club by Robert Runkle, who tells us that he is a beginner in this branch of showmanship. He has been trimming windows and painting signs for the past three years, and about three months ago started doing art work for the Crawford Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

The accompanying illustrations will convey an idea of his versatility as a poster man. At the left note "Waterloo Bridge," with the city background, searchlights and dirigible; next, the Laurel-Hardy caricatures, and James Dunn with the attractive shadow silhouette. Comedy is ably expressed in the one on Wheeler and Woolsey, while the John Gilbert poster portrays the more serious note.

This department is just as interested in Runkle's work as he is in the series of post art which we are presenting from time to time. He tells us that it helps him along. We will assume that his contributions will furnish inspiration to other members.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE SMALL AD!

A Practical Showman Illustrates Some Pointers Necessary in the Make-Up of the Smaller Sized Ad for Show Selling!

By BILL ADLER

If Eddie Cantor were a motion picture theatre manager, he might have sung—"Tomatoes are cheaper, but space rates no cheaper, so now's the time to fall in love—with one-column ads."

With crimson clouds hovering over all too many situations threatening showers of red rain; with managers more and more assuming entirely the duties of advertising; and with space reductions demanded by the season if not general conditions, it is well to get everything possible out of reduced space schedules. This, for thousands of theatres, means schedules composed wholly or mostly of one-column ads.

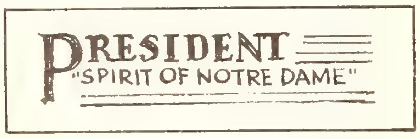

FIG. A

Advertising principles apply to single-column ads as well as to large copy. Oftentimes, however, the baby sizes are subject to two extremes of abuse. They may be slighted because they are considered of only directory value, or they may be injured by too great enthusiasm of the ad-writer whose eagerness results in overcrowding or inserting of art work that turns out to be gingerbread.

Must Be Readable!

It is true, one-columns will prove to be of directory value more often than display ads, although two lines of agate type still represent a layout. Further, people read what is said; they do not read layouts. What must be put across clearly and fast is the attraction title, stars, and theatre name. The manner of putting copy in print—the layout or arrangement—is merely the means to this end.

FIG. E

In preparing one-column ads, it is better to consider any given amount of space from the standpoint of limitations rather than possibilities. Title, signature, star and certain items of policy must appear in every ad, no matter what the size; additional subject material assumes the nature of a luxury and can be included only after the essentials have been set in and there is remnant space.

Three Size-Groups!

Once the daily sizes of a schedule are determined, the object is to utilize the various sizes to best advantage. For the sake of discussion, one-column ads may be divided into three size-groups.

1. One line to seven lines, or one-half inch in depth.
2. Eight lines to 20 lines, or one-half to one and three-quarter inches.
3. Over 25 lines, or over one and three-quarter inches.

Few need be cautioned to stick only to type in setting ads in the first size-group. Occasionally some one will attempt a shallow signature slug with a half-inch ad. Almost always, the outcome is a signature cut that steals most of the tiny space, with the slug itself "filling in" and becoming poorly legible. To break up the evenness of an all-type ad, the first letter of the theatre name at the top may be set several sizes larger than the other letters in the name, the way initial letters are set in opening paragraphs of books. Fig. A.

Signature Cut Important!

In ads falling within the second classification, it is well to use some engraved form of signature. Figs. B, C, D. The rest of the ad should be in type. The signatures should always appear at the top because, lacking art work to tie sig and copy together, the average reader is accustomed to associate copy with the signature appearing above. A Ben Day background often is preferred to a pure reverse slug, as Ben Day is a shading and not in absolute contrast with the white background behind the type copy. But the letters of the signature should be outlined in black ink to prevent the Ben Day screen from wearing off or failing to delineate sharply the edges of the letters because of imperfect printing. Fig. B. Imperfect impressions are constant and unavoidable in the speed of newspaper publication and the texture of newsprint stock.

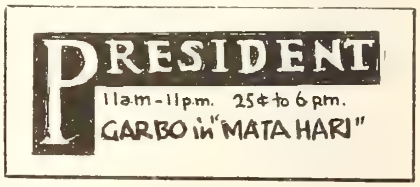

FIG. C

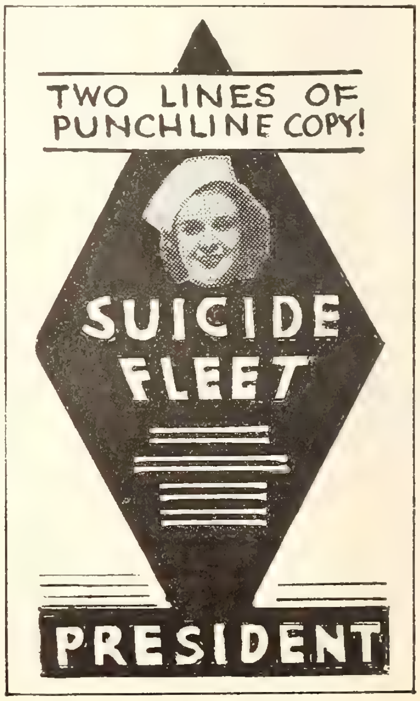
Ads of twenty-five lines or deeper are large enough for some form of display, even if the display is obtained only by use of large and small types and varied styles of type faces. As a rule, one-column display ads deeper than 12 inches might better be used as six inches on two-column ads. A 12-inch depth for a one-column brings it two inches above the fold of a full-sized newspaper page. Longer ads are skinny

FIG. F



TWO LINES OF PUNCHLINE COPY!
SUICIDE FLEET
PRESIDENT

The present trend towards smaller spaced ads, especially the single column variety, is not particularly traceable to the so-called economic conditions.

Showmen who have "played" around with various sized ads always found that the one column make-up lends itself to many interesting and unusual forms of advertising.

We have noted the shift to the smaller sized ad and have been making it a point to emphasize them on the Club pages. So much so that much of our mail now concerns this kind of material. That is why we shall continue to stress such items.

In selecting Bill Adler to offer suggestions in the form of an article with sample ads to illustrate his thoughts, we were anxious to contact someone whose activities concerned material of this sort. How well he handled the assignment you can decide for yourself after you've read it over.

Bill is known practically all over the country by reason of his recent connection with R K O under Jack Hess. He was first in Chicago, then to the west coast and then to the home office in New York. Advertising was part of his task on all assignments and so we feel certain that what he has to say will be welcomed by every showman who would like to learn a little more about modern newspaper ads.

RAPIDLY INCREASING IN IMPORTANCE!

and ordinarily hard to work with to secure pleasing design and composition.

Where there is a choice between halftones and line drawings in art work for one-column display ads, that is, where line art will serve equally well, line drawings should be chosen. Engravings in line work, other conditions being equal, will show up with greater sharpness; they will hold details of character halftones would lose. Fig. H.

By the same token, one-column ad preparation demands greater care in selection of halftones when halftones are employed than ads of two or more columns. Failing access to an artist, halftones "shot" without retouching must be sharply defined as to form and to contrasts of the shades in the still, or drawing, Fig. G.

Signatures placed at the bottom of ads should be tied in so that at a glance they belong to the copy above them. If this is not assured, the signatures may easily be mistaken to top foreign copy below. (Fig. F.) In Figure F the punch copy at the top is held together with the illustration and copy (in reverse in the diamond design) and separated distinctly (by the point of the diamond) from anything which might be run above the hairline dividing rule of the newspaper.

Watch the Lettering!

Lettering is perhaps responsible for most crimes in ads of the stature under discussion. Artists allowed to run wild will frequently succumb to the temptation to get fancy. Disproportionate depths to what they are doing for the ad (the hell with the type, the papers can squeeze it in) is one pitfall. Another is the use of curly-kews, seraphs, needless and "vibrating" in-linings, etc. Lettering is a device to achieve what type can not; lettering acquires thickness for short words to fill out lines agreeably; lettering places words slightly too long for one line evenly without a crowded appearance.

To promise easy reading from left to right, lines of copy should not be broken into lengths less than the width of the copy space within the ad. These lengths should run full across the column.

How to Conserve Space!

To conserve space by condensing copy, unimportant words frequently can be eliminated. "With," "in," "and," "the," "a," may be deleted without injuring the meaning of the copy. Figs. A, B, C. On the other hand, such words set light-face and small and centered alone on a line, may serve to space out copy, gain readability and leave together important words that belong together. Fig. E.

Blacks and whites require some thought in the way they are distributed. Fig. H. A heavy head slug with halftone beneath will tend to divide an ad in two if followed by light-face type copy. It certainly will have no balance and will not register unless given undue attention. In Fig. B the slug seems to hug the white copy space and is held in by the black lower corners.

The ultimate effect sought in preparing a single-column advertisement of any size is a pleasing unity with the featured topic—sig and title registering instantly.

It must be kept in mind that the sample ads illustrating Bill Adler's article are not intended to be "model" ads. They merely serve to show you what Adler feels he cannot adequately describe in the text. Blank lines are for added attractions, policy, price scale or time schedules.

Other suggestions or sample ads are wanted and will always be given careful consideration. If you have hit upon something new or novel in your newspaper advertising why not pass it along for the benefit of the rest of the members? That "All For One and One For All" slant is worth practicing.

Follow These Rules and You Will Soon Understand Why So Many Others Are Finding Single Column Ads Profitable!

Much can be accomplished through the intelligent use of the exchange mats. Showmen who shy away from them are making a serious mistake because they can be broken up and incorporated into very attractive advertising.

Some years back a whole lot of propaganda emanated from various sources against the exchange mat. This was based more upon a few individual opinions rather than actual fact, but the wide publicity given to the discussion resulted in many showmen, especially those in the smaller towns and cities, discarding them and trying to do without them ever since. A glance through the newspaper advertising in smaller communities will show that many are still depending upon rule and straight type to achieve attractive advertising.

Look through every press book ad. Try to figure out what you can do with the many mats available at nominal cost. Just keep in mind that they do not have to be used entirely. Break them up as you please; combine several for one ad; try using the title portion of a mat, generally the lettering is far more impressive than anything your local paper can furnish.

But, above all, try to create advertising that gets away from the monotonous sameness that detracts, instead of attracting, the attention of your newspaper readers. Theatre advertising must conform to the spirit of the business itself. The box office will reflect the wisdom of such methods.

LASSMAN PUT OVER BIG DAY FOR VAUDE TROUPE IN TROY, N. Y.

Prior to being transferred to management of the Avon Theatre, Utica, N. Y., Garry Lassman, manager of the Lincoln Theatre, Troy, N. Y., boosted trade during the Lenten season with a troupe of radio cowboys. It was the first time the Troy ever presented a vaude act and darned if Garry didn't commemorate the event by having no less a personage than the Mayor himself meet the cowboys at the steps of the City Hall.

His effective campaign included use of a trailer one week in advance, by which he told patrons of the surprise in store for them; use of a special stage in lobby, later moved to outside, for display of cowboy paraphernalia; the posting of 200 one-sheets; distribution of 5,000 special heralds house to house; newspaper stories and cuts one week in advance; special window displays in radio stores; visit of cowboys to orphan asylums, where they entertained inmates; tie-up with local radio station for half-hour program, during which a plug was given theatre; promotion of two cowboy suits from department store, to be given away at special matinee for children, and to cap the climax, a parade on the day the troupe arrived in town. The parade was staged on a Saturday and the accompanying photo shows the Boy's Band, promoted for the occasion, leading the line of march.

It happened that Lassman was playing "Gay Caballero" at the time and the added attraction made a most appropriate offering. All that fuss he stirred up in connection with the troupe of cowboys illustrates just what can be done to gain a lot of publicity at small cost. The next time you hear about Lassman the news will concern show-selling at the Avon in Utica. We know it will be interesting.

MITCHELL TIED UP WITH A NEWSPAPER ON ROGERS PICTURE

When exploiting Will Rogers' latest picture, "Business and Pleasure," J. L. Mitchell, manager of the Genesee Theatre, Waukegan, Ill., sold the local newspaper the idea of running a "Will Rogers for President Campaign Contest." Ballots were printed in the newspaper for six planks, the first to be Business and Pleasure. Twenty guest tickets were awarded to the twenty people who sent in what the paper thought to be best platforms.

While the contest was conducted along humorous lines, a great quantity of platforms dealing with the repeal of the 18th Amendment and action on unemployment received an editorial break from the paper sponsoring the contest.

TWO USHERS HELPED JOHN McMANUS SELL A ROBINSON PICTURE

Two ushers dressed in Chinese costumes worked in two different roles to exploit "Hatchet Man" for James T. McManus, manager of the Marlboro Theatre, Marlboro, Mass.

Four days in advance, the two ushers dressed in costumes and make-up which gave them the appearance of being real Chinamen, put on a small "act" before and after showing of the trailer.

As the trailer started a Chinese gong was struck and then the boys shuffled out onto the stage and sat cross-legged in the light of red baby spots. At the end of the trailer the gong was again struck and then the boys made their exit. This added a bit of atmosphere to the trailer showing and proved quite effective, as was evidenced by the comments of the patrons.

When not appearing on the stage these same two boys in their Chinese regalia walked around the principal streets of the city, especially at the peak hours of the day and evening, when there were lots of people on the streets. They carried signs on their backs, copy on the signs announcing title of picture, name of theatre and play dates.

The above is another example of the fine service being rendered by many usher staffs in Publix-New England theatres, an outgrowth, we believe, of the idea that was started in the Publix-Olympia in Boston quite some time ago. Since then we've had many occasions to comment upon willingness on the part of ushers in that section to lend a hand in exploitation activities.

AN INCENTIVE FOR EVERY R.K.O. MANAGER!

We print below a statement from Harold B. Franklin regarding his views on theatre operation and the relationship between the field and the home office. Long an admirer of Mr. Franklin and his methods, we hasten to broadcast his recent statement because every house manager on the R.K.O. circuit will rejoice in working under a leader with such liberal views.

"CHICK"

"I have operated many theatres. And whatever measure of success I have had arises from the fact that individuality has always been encouraged where found. These lines will be followed and all possible latitude allowed men possessing such qualities. Responsibility should be definitely placed, and when it is entrusted to the proper hands, we have achieved good organization. Division managers of our circuits will operate almost as if they were the owners of their houses and it is my guess they will feel their duties and obligations keenly. We will not attempt to direct their every move from New York. The New York organization will serve to guide operations, to coordinate and to inspire, if you please.

"You are not to feel, because of my entrance into this situation, that there will be wholesale shifts and changes. There may be, of course, some realignment, but in this event we seek to make our changes and promotions from within the ranks. This company has a very definite investment in its employees and we not only improve the status of this investment when we discover men within our ranks who can assume large responsibilities but we build our morale—already good—to even better proportions.

"There is a feeling prevalent in R.K.O. and the theatre companies that the downswing has been reached and that the upward trend has begun. We want to continue the spirit of encouragement within our own ranks, and the best way of doing it is to stress, once more, our determination to take advantage of the manpower within the organization and to give the manpower every opportunity. In the days when the Keith Circuit operated its houses in the East and the Orpheum Circuit under Mr. Beck its western chain, the local management was given both power and leeway. You must, of course, have your men before you can go through with this policy, but unquestionably theatre management cannot be done from one office. This explains our determination to constitute the home office as a guide and as a place from which suggestions emanate, but we do want to have our men everywhere be managers, not only in name but in practice."

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Carroll Coffel

On his return to Indianapolis at the close of the World War, Carroll Coffel turned his attention to showbusiness and for a starter secured a permit to work as an extra prop man at a local theatre. He stayed on that job until Barton and Oleson opened the Strand at Crawfordsville in 1919 and then went with that outfit as a stage carpenter, remaining with Arthur Jackson when that showman took over the house. He worked with Jackson until September, 1928, taking out road shows, etc., and when the Vonderschmitt Amusement Company acquired the Strand, took a two months' rest. On his return he went with Vonderschmitt as maintenance man for the entire circuit and when the Strand became Publix property he remained as assistant manager. He subsequently was appointed manager, a post we find him filling today.

Coffel was born in Illinois in the year 1898 and was graduated from High School at the age of 16. He takes an interest in civic organizations and is a charter member of the local Lions International. He has had plenty of experience in many branches of showbusiness and thinks he would again choose it for a career if he had to start all over again, only he'd start at an earlier age.

Randforce Changes

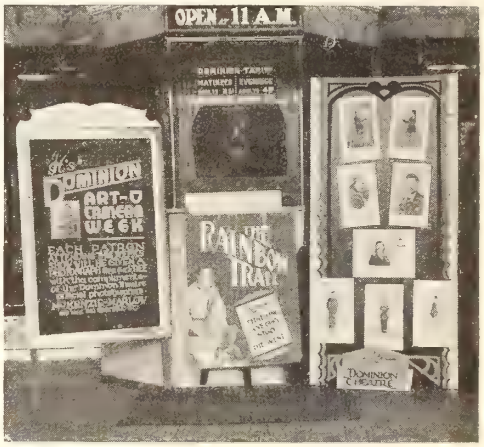
George Langbart, Supervisor of the Park Slope Division, in addition to looking after the Carleton, will also have charge of the Atlantic; Lou Schnitzer has replaced Meyers, resigned, at the Cross Boy; Harvey Fleischman is filling Sach's post at the Embassy; George Seed has been transferred to the Leader, replacing Manager Falk, who replaces Simon, resigned, at the Stone; D. Serecky has succeeded Manager Nolan at the Maspeth; Manager Braudio is temporarily out of the running at the Roebling, owing to indefinite closing of that house; George Davis has replaced Kurland.

ACKERY PLEASED HIS PATRONS BY A TIE-UP WITH A PHOTOGRAPHER

A tie-up made with a local photographer by I. F. N. Ackery, manager of the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver, Canada, recently made a big hit with his patrons.

He arranged with the studios to present each patron with a photograph of themselves, or of a child up to six years of age, as an Easter greeting gift. Sittings were made by appointment. The photographer printed up 10,000 attractive cards for the occasion, giving details of the offer. These were handed out to each patron as he or she entered the theatre. The reverse side carried ad on current attraction.



The lobby display, as illustrated in the accompanying photo, consisted of large colored photographs of the theatre staff, all supplied by the studios. Interest was aroused through trailer, newspaper advertising and four window displays in prominent downtown stores.

Good business for both theatre and studios resulted from this tie-up, states Ackery, and it was regarded by patrons as a "refined form of publicity." The photographer cashed in through advertising and many orders for additional pictures.

Holt Now RKO Chief!

Nat Holt, well known Kansas showman and district manager for Fox theatres in the Midwest, is H. B. Franklin's selection for the post of divisional director of all RKO houses in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit.

WAR ANGLE PLAYED UP BY GEORGE LABY

Photo above shows one of the last displays engineered for the Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass: by Manager George Laby before he moved over to the New Paramount Theatre. The war angle was emphasized on "Broken Melody" (Man I Killed) and this picture had an exceptional run in Boston. Note the bugler, who stood in lobby and intermittently sounded notes. Views show either side of entrance, with long, upright panels of stills.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

At the age of 17 years nothing looked better in the way of a business career to John Roger Ludy than showbusiness and so he waded into the game as a member of a carnival band. Since that time he has been musician, with a circus, had his own orchestra for several years, and we now find him holding down the job of manager at the Hines Theatre, Portland, Ind.

John R. Ludy

Ludy was born in Winchester, Ind., in the year 1894 and received his education in Winchester and Portland schools. While following the show game, after graduation, he saw service during the World War with the 159th Depot Brigade. After discharge he again took up direction of an orchestra. He has since worked for the Moller Enterprises and has managed the Royal, Theatorium, Princess and Hines Theatres.

That he picked out a profession suited to his tastes is indicated in his statement that he would again choose showbusiness if he had to start all over again. He's a married man and active in Portland civic life, being a member of the Masons, American Legion and the K. of P.

Street Stunt by Maizlish

Harry Maizlish, Warner exploiteer on the West Coast, is always up to something new in the way of dressing theatre fronts, etc. One of his latest exploits was the erection of five frame arches across Hollywood Boulevard for the engagement of "It's Tough to Be Famous." On the arches 40 portraits of internationally famous personages were painted. The display gave the street a holiday attire, helped along by bunting, flags and streamers.

WEISS ENGINEERED CORKING CAMPAIGN ON TARZAN PICTURE

A striking front, atmospheric effects at theatre entrance and in foyer, tie-ups with local merchants and many other interesting stunts featured the campaign made on "Tarzan, the Ape Man" by Harry H. Weiss, formerly manager of the Paramount Theatre, Miami, Fla.

Activities at the theatre, special stories in two newspapers, special exploitation and the radio all figured conspicuously in the advance campaign. The papers gave generous space to stories, readers and cuts of Weismuller and scenes from picture; a local station broadcasted announcements twice daily in return for a tie-up made in reference to the naming of certain telephone numbers and still another radio station made single announcements for three days during run of picture.

Exploitation included bumper announcements on 25 local taxicabs two days in advance and during run of show; placing of four desk pieces in downtown arcades with book containing supply of stills and notice that Johnny Weismuller invited people to view the scenes; distribution of 5,200 cards each bearing a letter of the title "Tarzan," with copy instructing holders to seek other cards to make up the entire set and then secure a pass at the box-office (R was used as the key letter); use of 50 special quarter-sheet window cards for merchants who distributed the "Tarzan" cards; the distribution of 75 script invitations to well known people about town; distribution among soda fountain and barbecue stands of 5,000 paper napkins with special imprint; distribution of 50 14 x 17 cards, each carrying a still, in prominent windows, and a special BVD swim suit tie-up for a window in the leading department store.

Both the card gag and special script invitations mentioned above were instrumental in creating a lot of word-of-mouth advertising. Regarding the cards, it is taken for granted that those which bore the key letter "R" were issued only in the quantity desired for a predetermined number of passes.

The scripts were made to represent an old-time parchment communication, rolled and sealed with wax and red ribbon. While about 75 were sent out only four were given up at the door, proving that most were kept for souvenirs of the occasion. Further proof of this was demonstrated by the number of phone calls requesting one. A special effort was made to get one to Arthur Brisbane, a guest at the Lion's Club luncheon, and it became the object of much attention as it passed from hand to hand.

The accompanying photos will convey a fair idea of the front and special jungle lobby constructed for this show. First, note the huge block letters set along edge of sidewalk in front of the theatre, all about seven feet high by 18 inches deep. Next, take a glance at the lair-like entrance to the lobby, with crocodile creeping out from one corner. Then the narrow inner lobby with its profusion of Spanish moss, palmetto palm and other native shrubbery, all of which lent itself admirably for jungle atmosphere. Among the plant life in the lobby were a number of stuffed animals promoted from a local collector and these also helped round out the general scheme.

Miami looks upon Johnny Weismuller as a native son and it was only natural for Weiss, in addition to cashing in on the exploitation possibilities offered by the film, to put on a corking good campaign. It is well to mention in connection with that Swim-Suit tie-up that the department store was the ritziest one in town and hard to crash for an entire window. He is also to be commended for that extraordinary sidewalk display of block letters and jungle atmosphere. In fact, the entire campaign was well rounded out in all respects and will undoubtedly rank as an outstanding one in the round-up being waged by M-G-M for best efforts on "Tarzan."

MORE CAMPAIGNS ON "FIREMAN"

DUE to the number of campaigns sent the Warner Home Office and this department by contenders for honors on "Fireman, Save My Child," we are forced at this time to include the balance in condensed form instead of setting forth details of each campaign in a separate story. This move is not by any means to be construed other than lack of space and a desire on our part to get all campaigns into print within a reasonable time. Outstanding features of the following campaigns will be discussed in detail at a future date.

W. A. Lanagan,

Rembert Theatre, Longview, Tex.

Considerable originality featured Lanagan's campaign and after carefully looking over the press sheet he decided to play up the title and name of Brown.

He sold the local newspaper on the idea of pulling a "Brown Convention" and promised that he would personally engineer the promotion of a full cooperative page among the merchants in exchange for publicity. Other advance work included use of trailer one week in advance; shadow box, main auditorium; cutout display in foyer; window cards in choice windows; tie-ups with stores; lobby display of gifts to be given winners of contest; 24-sheet marquee display, and inserts in leading cafes.

Other stunts included a big street parade, arranged through cooperation of local fire department; gifts of hosiery, through tie-up made with store, to first five women entering theatre on opening day; invitations to all persons named Brown to be guests in return for registration at box office prior to 1 P. M. on playdate (56 registered); use of local celebrity as M. C., and a strong newspaper campaign.

Business was 'way above normal, Lanagan states.

Alvin Hostler,

Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa.

A variety of stunts, including a novel street ballyhoo of a Ford with trick rear wheels, were used by Hostler. The car was rigged up to resemble a fire truck, with ladders and lengths of hose placed along front fenders and young driver dressed in slicker and regulation hat. When the car was driven about 10 miles per hour it would bounce all over the street. Extra attention was attracted when one of the wheels came off in the busiest section of the town.

Lobby announcements were made three weeks in advance; radio broadcast three days prior to opening; a tie-up effected with local sporting goods store; ushers were dressed in fireman outfits, and special invitations were issued to local firemen to attend a special showing. The picture played a week to extra good business.

J. R. MacEachron,

Majestic Theatre, Stuttgart, Ark.

The local fire department lent a helping hand to MacEachron for his campaign on this picture, as it happened to be engaged at the time in a grass-burning move to keep down fire hazards. The use of banners on fire trucks, advertising picture and theatre, gave the attraction plenty of publicity as the trucks worked in all main and outlying sections of the town. The young son of the local fire chief was dressed in uniform and tied in with the occasion.

In addition to the fire department tie-up, MacEachron issued special heralds for insertion in Sunday editions of local and out-of-town newspapers.

Lenny Freund,

Albemarle Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Schools, the local fire department and Boy Scouts were contacted when Lenny Freund, manager of the Albemarle Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., planned his campaign on "Fireman."

Brown's popularity among school children resulted in a promise from practically every principal in Flatbush schools to allow distribution of advertising matter. Bringing attention to the picture among the youngsters in this wise, thought Freund, would result in good word-of-mouth advertising among the parents.

Both old and modern fire fighting equipment were obtained, the former from the Volunteer Association and the latter from a well known manufacturer's agent. The flagpole of the theatre was also used for display of a dummy fireman.

In line with the gag used by the Warner Theatre, Broadway, New York City, he ran a pipe line from the heating plant to roof of marquee for a fire and smoke effect. Red flood lights were used to complete the illusion. This worked so well that it resulted in a fire alarm, described elsewhere on this page.

Additional effort included use of pictorial three-sheets on bill-boards; arrangements made with fire captain for Firemen's Family Night; distribution of 1,000 fireman hats among school children; special auto summons made up for attachment to steering wheels; use of paper napkins in local restaurants; use of triangle cards on corner poles at street corners; use of stickers on newspapers sold at local stands, and several thousand "For your personal attention" envelopes distributed by usher staff. All advertising carried the slogan, "Guaranteed Entertainment for Young and Old."

Considering the fact that but little exploitation is done along Flatbush Avenue, Freund appears to have put over a most comprehensive campaign.

James T. McManus,

Marlboro Theatre, Marlboro, Mass.

The fire department angle was extensively carried out in a variety of selling stunts by McManus and his stand-in with the local department stood him to excellent advantage. The display in the lobby included red lights in inner lobby one week ahead; 29 fireman helmets promoted for ceiling hangers, and on box office and marquee; six nozzles for inner lobby and 1,400 feet of hose for marquee; large imitation fire axe used in 1910 for anniversary, suspended from ceiling in inner lobby; fire bell, rung currently by cashier, and use of wall frames for stills and inserts.

A thirty-five-year-old fire steamer was also promoted from a neighboring town for a ballyhoo. Two horses and a driver were also obtained at no cost to haul the steamer around town opening day and one day in advance. This novelty attracted a large crowd. Marlboro firemen were also invited to attend the show on opening night and they came in full uniform. Newspaper advertising was slightly over average. Readers and scene mats were used daily. Excellent business resulted.

WHAT PRICE PUBLICITY!

Unaware that a well meaning neighborhood citizen(?) had turned in a fire alarm when he tested out the Fire and Smoke effect on the front of the house the night before "Fireman, Save My Child" opened, Lenny Freund, manager of A. H. Schwartz's Albemarle Theatre, Flatbush Ave., Brooklyn, recently had the pleasure of making explanations to the Chief when the engines arrived at the theatre.

It was a great gag and it drew a big crowd but the Chief warned Lenny that it would not be in order again, under penalty of a severe fine.

Tony Williams,

DeWitt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J.

A movement to include all local exempt firemen of his city in a benefit offer made by the State Association was seized upon by Tony Williams as a means to exploit this picture. It took considerable salesmanship on Tony's part to persuade the group to cooperate, but he finally won their consent to contribute old equipment, photos, etc., that dated back as far as the year 1840. The newspaper took up the story and published a reader each day, commenting upon some person who spotted a relative's picture or some other novel article in the lobby. The "exempts" also agreed to parade to the theatre on opening day, all in return for card propaganda in lobby. The stunt turned out to be both a box office stimulant and builder of good will.

J. A. McDonald,

Memorial Theatre, McKeesport, Pa.

Cooperation from the local fire department and a ladder contest for the youngsters played important parts in McDonald's campaign.

One week in advance, in addition to a lobby display of stills, special cards and relics of the local department, he made arrangements with the Chief for the loan of one of the first motor trucks used by the city. This truck was in use all of the day preceding opening of picture. On opening day the lobby display was moved to a local storeroom and shown for duration of engagement.

Twenty-five ladders were constructoed by members of the Junior Komic Club and submitted for the construction contest. Prizes were awarded for the five best entries, the first two being a three-month membership in the Y. M. C. A., given by the local branch.

Frank LaBar,

Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

Resourcefulness played an important part in Frank LaBar's campaign, and when taking into consideration the small outlay of cash made, results were most gratifying.

The old city post office, right in the heart of the city, was being torn down at the time, and LaBar made arrangements to bill the fence around the building. With large pedestrian traffic around the spot, it's a safe bet that his announcement reached a greater portion of the city's population. This tie-up will continue. Through his friendly relations with local newspapers, he was successful in securing a large amount of publicity, especially on the sports pages where it would attract the fans of this sort of picture. Tear sheets at hand attest this claim.

Jack Stein,

Embassy Theatre, Orange, N. J.

Approximately 2,000 people were lined up on opening day as the result of the efforts Jack Stein made to secure cooperation from city schools, etc. The schools were sold on the fact that the picture had been placed in the selected list in the March issue of the M. P. Review, General Federation of Women's Clubs and that it was listed as family entertainment.

Other selling angles included a walking ballyhoo of a sandwich-man, dressed in a flaming red shirt and fire hat; display of stills in windows of prominent stores; trailer one week in advance; outstanding 40 by 60 sheets with clever cutout effect of Brown's face, and distribution of 3,000 programs.

The above resulted in high gross for the past seven months.

MORE SEATS AROUND THE TABLE!

DAVID W. HARRIS was proposed for membership in the Round Table Club by William Murphy, of Erpi, who tells us that Harris is a newcomer to showbusiness. We are glad to have him with us and hope that this department will prove a help to him with the management of the Palace Theatre down in Davy, West Va. Just as soon as he catches up with himself we're sure that these columns will carry some interesting yarns about his activities. We wish him luck in his new venture.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

SAUL L. GOLDSTEIN manages the Ideal Theatre over in Roxbury, Mass., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new Club representative of New England. A good percentage of contributions to these pages have their source in his section of the States and we're going to take for granted that Goldstein will help keep up the excellent average. Let's hear about that last good gag you put over, Saul; the rest of the boys will want to be let in on it.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

JACK CAMPION is the assistant manager of the Earle Theatre in Washington, D. C., and has the interesting job of helping Manager H. E. Lohmeyer sell his shows. This new Club member is 27 years of age and jumped all barriers up to assistant manager when he entered this game under Publix at the Riviera Theatre down in Scranton, Pa. He has been with Lohmeyer for the past six months and with the able coaching available it probably won't be long before he'll be branching out for himself. Jack, tell your boss to let us know what's going on at your house, or with his permission, try your hand at knocking out a yarn which will interest your fellow Club members.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

DAVE SIMON skippers the Palace Theatre at 2404 Second Avenue, New York City, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this go-getting aggregation of showmen of the World. Before Dave took over the helm of the Palace he had charge of the Odeon Theatre, and also the Palestine, both New York City houses, and with all that experience to his credit should be able to make a lot of constructive suggestions on the art of purveying entertainment to the masses. Let's hear from you, Dave, just as soon as the opportunity comes along.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

WILLIAM JOSEPH RUTH is another manager in the big city of New York to become a member of this ever-growing organization of showmen and he hails from the uptown section, where he manages the Morningside Theatre, 2139 8th Avenue. Welcome to the gang, Bill, and it will not be our fault if you don't pan out as a real active contributor to this department. Take a few minutes off next breathing spell and let the Club in on what tricks you're pulling in the show-selling line.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

HARVEY HANHEIM hails from Pittsburgh, Pa., where he manages the Idle Hour Theatre. However, there are no idle hours among Harvey's twenty-four each day for we understand he's very much on the job of selling shows. We're glad to list his name among the recently-elected Round Tablers and trust that he intends to give a good account of himself as soon as the opportunity presents itself. Let the rest of the gang in on what is going on down your way, Manheim, and we'll pass the good word along.

HENRY EARLE holds forth at the Warner Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., a house managed by Perry Spencer, former publicity man at the Strand in Utica, N. Y. Perry proposed Earle's name for listing among the many showmen in this Club and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application and to introduce him to his fellow showmen. Let's hear further from you, Henry, and relay our best regards to Spencer. We noted that he recently crashed the news columns of many papers on that letter-to-attorney stunt for considerable publicity and hope that it will react favorably.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

WILLIAM F. VAN DYNE manages the Orpheum Theatre up in Utica, N. Y., and at this writing he, too, becomes inducted into this vast army of Round Tablers. He's located in a hustling Mohawk Valley city, where the folk can take their movies or let them alone, according to what's offered, and so we know that Van will have a few tricks up his sleeve which will be of interest to his fellow Club members. Let's hear from you, Bill, and pass along the good word to Garry Lassman when you meet him. He recently moved to your town from Troy. Give him the Club grip, which is just an old-fashioned handshake.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

E. M. TANNENBAUM is another owner-manager to join the exalted order of Round Tablers and his home town answers to the name of Olyphant, Pa., where stands the Roxy Theatre. It is a pleasure to list this new member's name among the many on the Club roster and we'll hope to hear what Tannebaum has to say about present and future prospects for showbusiness down his way. Incidentally, E. M., just what are you doing to pull in the good citizens? Let your fellow showmen in on your recipe for a full house.

ORVILLE CROUCH is the manager of Loew's Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, and he's another showman in line for introduction to the many members of this organization. Crouch was proposed as a Round Tabler by that well known showman Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine, also in Toledo, and we're mighty glad to have additional representation in that city. Let the rest of the gang know what you've been doing in showbusiness, Crouch, and you may do that by shooting the dope right along to Club headquarters.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

ALLAN N. SMITH hails from down South in Newbern, Tenn., where he manages the Palace Theatre, and he was proposed for Club membership by Howard Waugh, former manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, and a well known and regular contributor to this department. At this writing we are glad to record that Smith is also a Round Tabler and we'll be looking forward to what he'll be sending along in the way of suggestions on the business of selling shows.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

WILLIAM BLANE manages the Chelsea Theatre, New York City, and we're also glad to acknowledge his application for membership in this army of showmen. Bill mixes pictures with vaudeville in the Chelsea district of the city and he should be able to pass along some interesting ideas on operation of a combination house. There's a lot of people who think that the boys in the big town have lost the art of show-selling, so you tell 'em Bill. Let the gang know that showbusiness is still a business around this neck of the woods.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

RUSSELL LONGGREAR is the resident manager of the Queen Theatre, Hazlehurst, Miss., and we're right glad to record that he, too, is another new member of this great army of showmen. We made Russ' acquaintance through a slight error on the "Personality" page, when we confused Hammond, Ind., with Hammond, La. That was that doggone rewrite fellow's fault, Russell; he probably was thinking of going fishing, or something like that. Anyway, we're mighty happy to know that you like our Club and that you've decided to lend a hand toward keeping the old ball rolling along. Let's hear further from you.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

MARVIN S. SPRINGER recently joined the exploitation department of Columbia Picture Corp., and he's another to request membership in this showman's organization. Okay, Marvin, step right up and meet the boys so that they'll all know you when you get around to their places of business some of these days. Just as soon as you run across some good showselling ideas, shoot them along to Club headquarters. We'll pass them along to the gang with your compliments.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

N. J. BANKS is located up in Elmira, N. Y., where he has charge of the Strand Theatre,, and a cordial welcome is also extended to this new Club member. There's always been a hustling lot of showmen up his way and Elmira is rated as an excellent show town; hence, we gather that Banks is getting his share of the trade. We'd like to hear what methods he's using to sell his attractions and trust that he'll let us know at the very first opportunity.

Bonus System for Warner Managers

Warner Theatres, starting immediately, will inaugurate an experimental bonus system among all Warner managers and personnel of the zone offices.

In making the announcement, Joseph Bernhard, general manager, stated that, "a theatre organization is only as strong as the links forged by the ingenuity and thought of the individual theatre managers." It is his belief that a manager can be spurred to greater thought, effort and ingenuity if he knows that he is really working for himself as well as for the parent organization. For that reason, the company is going to experiment with the bonus theory until September 1. Should the bonus plan work out, it will be continued permanently.

Under this co-operative plan a fair expectancy figure is set upon the receipts of each house, according to Warners. To those managers who exceed this expectancy a bonus, ranging according to the size of the house, will be given to the manager.

In addition to giving the managers a share of the increased business they bring in, a separate house arrangement affords the personnel of the zone offices an opportunity to participate in the over-the-expectancy business done in each zone.

RKO Books First Division Film 150 Days in De Luxes

First Division Pictures announces that "The Wild Women of Borneo," now in its second week at the RKO Cameo in New York, has been booked by the RKO circuit for all de luxe theatres for a total of 150 days.

RKO houses in New York and surrounding territory and in Albany and Rochester, N. Y., will play the film during May. The film in the future will be played only on a percentage basis.

Coast Independent Showmen Draft Protection Agreement

A group of more than 100 independent theatre owners in and around Los Angeles, which disclaims any connection with Allied States Association, has held several meetings, and appointed a committee of eight to draft a protection agreement to be presented to distributors.

The committee includes Dave Bershon, Robert Whitson, Harry Hicks, Cyril Cohn, Jack Berman, H. Y. Herond, G. A. Metzger, Harry Chotiner.

Lloyd Sales Head to Coast

Creed A. Neeper, sales manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, and Leslie F. Whelan, who is in charge of advertising and exploitation, have left New York for the Paramount convention in Los Angeles. Neeper will also confer with William R. Fraser, Lloyd general manager, on the comedian's latest, "Movie Crazy," to be released in September.

DEAR HERALD:

We note by a recent issue of the HERALD that Lysle Talbot has signed a contract to play for Warner Brothers. We are glad to learn this, for we have known Lysle almost ever since he turned his back on the rubber nipple and took to corned beef and cabbage. Lysle used to have a habit of sticking his feet under our wife's table occasionally and calling for more pork and beans. He was always a bull on the pork and beans market.

The last time we saw Lysle he was playing leads in a stock company in one of the big theatres in Oklahoma City. We are confident he will make good on the screen, for he has exceptional ability, a pleasing personality and a likeable disposition, and here's hoping he will keep both feet on the ground—as we feel sure he will do—and that he will give Warner Brothers the very best there is in him, and if he does that it will be plenty good enough for anybody.

Jevver notice that the candidates for office always brag about being brought up "down on the farm," and how they used to plow corn and pitch hay and slop the shoats? Yeah, and now the press agents for the stars have adopted the same slogan: their star was reared in "rural simplicity" and when a girl used to help Mama churn, do the dishes, put on a sunbonnet and go out and play with the chickens and little ducklets and go out in the garden and pull pusley for the pigs—in fact, they were purslane for the pigs—in fact, they were regular Maud Mullers who delighted to "rake the meadow sweet with hay." And then they heard the call of the screen and away they went for Hollywood. Doe Bixby would have made a good star press agent when he wrote:

"Maud Muller on a summer's morn
Snipped the suckers from the corn,
And walloped the striped bugs that flew
From the melon vines in the morning dew.
While her father, an honest and kind old Jay,
Was out in the meadow raking hay,
And trying to lift with his brawny arm
The mortgage that covered the dear old farm."

Then as soon as the girls land in Hollywood their press agents refer to them as "that ravishingly beautiful star of the screen." Oh, yeah, we've seen some of 'em and OMYGOSH. Did you know that even some of the press agents believe that eggs grow on egg-plants, that skunk cabbage is a vegetable and that milk comes from the milk-weed? Yes, sir, they do, and did you know this: That not a drop of liquor is allowed in any studio or on any studio lot? That a violation of this rule automatically annuls the employee's contract? That Wallace Beery is a likeable fellow and not half as tough as he looks? That Len Bonner, publicity director for Warner Bros., is a swell guy, and that Bob Sherman, publicity director for MGM, is ditto? That Polly Moran darns her own stockings and says that stockings that are not darned are a darned sight worse looking than darned ones?

That we didn't get to meet our favorite, Marie Dressler? That Louis B. Mayer stands high in the councils of the Republican party? That Henry King is an excellent director? That Leo Meehan, of the Hollywood Herald office, has a delightful family and a lovely Beverly Hills home? That the report that Clark Gable played hookey when a boy and ran away from school to go fishing is false; that there is not a word of truth in it? (He was already fishing when the school bell rang)? That it would be a serious blow to the industry to take Will Rogers off the screen and make a president of him?

That Joe E. Brown conducts class in the relative values of the whites, reds and blues each Sunday? That if proper pressure was brought to bear Al might be persuaded to accept the nomination? That our neuritis still sticks to us like a porous plaster? That an exhibitor in California tolds us he thought our Column was the bunk, and that he was the only exhibitor we ever heard tell the truth about it? That you can't play golf when you've got neuritis, and that's terrible? Yes, sir, and there are a lot of other things you ought to know, but space and good sense forbids.

We want to take this means to express our thanks to you boys who have written us and expressed your sympathy while we have been hibernating in a rocking-chair with our right fin resting on a pillow. It was mighty nice of you and we appreciate it, but we can't write to each of you personally: it's all we can do to write this Colyum. But we want you to keep the latch-string hanging out, for as they used to say, "We'll be in to see you," and then we will tell you about it personally.

Here's a copy of a letter we have just received from Miss Mildred Early of the Hollywood Herald staff. She says:

"I'm rather disgusted with myself for having delayed so long writing you a note to thank you for 'them kind words' that appeared in your column a couple of weeks ago. I've already had one proposal because of it, but of course was unable to take it up because the man is already married and has a half dozen youngsters." Signed, Mildred Early.

Now there you are. She'd get the second proposal (by wire) if it weren't that we are in the same doggone fix. That's what a man misses by being married. There's a fool law in this country about polygamy. We're agin it.

We note by the press that Ralph Bellamy and Marion Nixon are going to make "Rebecca of Sunnybrook" for Fox. We'll betcha, Oscar, that that will be a whizbang of a picture, and now if Chic Sale will make "Uncle Josh Sprusby" and put in the sawmill scene, and Will Rogers will make "The Old Homestead" it will put this business back on its feet. Why don't somebody make "Shore Acres" and "Way Down East"?

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

Omaha Orpheum

Week ending April 21

RKO's greater vaudeville program for this week at the Orpheum has four acts, any of them of head-line caliber. They include "Sunkist" Eddie Nelson, Deno and Rochelle, the Royal Uyeno troupe and Ray Huling and his seal.

Deno and Rochelle open by having a recitative dance number presented by their assisting dancing girl, a man accompanying at a grand piano on the stage. Then Deno and Rochelle do a Cuban "rumba" and get a good hand from the house. Then comes a tap dance, a filler number, presented while the principals changed. Then a dance, the group dressed as rubes at a kid's party, lots of ruffles, puffed sleeves, red bow, slouch hat and all. A piano interlude and then a solo dance, an athlete-aesthetic affair. The closing number is a "Racketeer" dance, in costume and effect a well-done Americanized Apache dance.

Ray Huling drives onto the stage on a miniature wagon, drawn by his seal. Young and old applaud a dozen times or more during the act, which opens when the seal does an Indian war dance, a costume in feathers about its head. The seal also applauds, using its paddle feet with much effect, and does a number of other equally fascinating things. Eddie Nelson rides onto the stage on a tricycle, bringing with him a guitar case, from which he extracts a tiny ukelele. He sings a song he calls "When the Belles on the Beaches Begin to Peal"—yodles, cuts up with individuals in the audience and generally does a lot of impromptu clowning with the orchestra members. Later he volunteers to play any instrument. He plays a freak-shaped cornet and later a drum, the orchestra accompanying. Melodies used are "Roses of Picardy" and "Way Down Upon the Swanee River." His is a well rounded act, one that seems to take and to make folks laugh.

The Royal Uyeno troupe includes a group of first class Japanese acrobats, good showmen in their field to judge from the rounds of applause they draw. Included in their acts are some features more or less new. Their tumbling is remarkable, replete with evidence of unusual skill and training. One of the troupe does a backward flip from standing position atop a table, 25 successive times, landing each time within an inch of his original position. It is a first class act.

Continues Musical Shows

Balaban & Katz, Chicago circuit, is bringing two new and complete stage attractions to the Chicago and Oriental theatres, in an effort to increase business. "Three's a Crowd" comes into the Chicago May 6 and "Zombie" starts at the Oriental, and may go into neighborhood spots later.

Ruth Chatterton in Stage Play

"Let Us Divorce," play featuring Ruth Chatterton, Warner star, in her debut as a legitimate actress, opened last week at the Belasco in Los Angeles. Rose Hobart and Ralph Forbes are in the supporting cast. Miss Chatterton is continuing film work at the First National studio.

CHARLES B. STONE

Stone, a finished musician of exceptional technique, and master of 14 instruments, some months ago obtained a temporary release from Phil Bloom, to enable him to go to Cincinnati to conduct the RKO Albee theatre orchestra, where he immediately registered with the patrons in a big way, and has been going strong ever since.

He is a graduate of the Damrosch Institute, besides having studied in Leipzig. Included in his previous connections are the Roxy theatre orchestra and the Academy of Music, in New York, in which city he was also Hugo Riesenfeld's associate at the Geo. M. Cohan theatre.

Charlie, as he is familiarly known to the boys, recently has written a song, "Cincinnati Hills," called the first ever to have been dedicated to the city.

"Roxy" Conducts Radio City Air Program Before Sailing

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel returned to the air last Saturday, as master of ceremonies during a special "Radio City Program," over a National Broadcasting Company network. M. H. Aylesworth, president of RKO and NBC, was the principal speaker.

Roxy sailed this week for Europe on business connected with Radio City. Among the stars featured during the broadcast were Amos 'n' Andy, Mme. Schumann-Heink and several others. Erno Rapee directed the orchestra.

Rogers on Ziegfeld Program

Will Rogers and Billie Burke are scheduled to head the group of featured stage and screen players to be starred in the sixth "Ziegfeld radio show," to be broadcast over a nationwide Columbia network from Los Angeles, Sunday, May 8.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Fox

Week ending May 5

Ted Lewis, the high-hatted one, and his own company from New York, has been appearing at the Fox this week. It is the first appearance in San Francisco of this master of entertainment in more than three years and he received a reception nothing short of an ovation. Applause records are being broken at the Fox.

Ted brings the old silver-lined, battered silk hat, the band that plays his music to such advantage and a troupe of entertainers that shows he is still a good picker of talent. The stage setting is simply a huge high hat, with room on the brim for his band. The master comes out on a long runway, and his query, "Is everybody happy"? brings an affirmative roar. He sings about music being magic, with the band illustrating the points he brings out. Elsie McLeod does a lively dance, with the Ted Lewis beauty chorus forming an effective background. Ted sings "Dream a Little Dream of Me" and falls asleep while the Dixie Four sing and dance, being especially effective in the old song "All God's Chiluns Got Wings," "Snowball" Whittier offers some lively dance steps and Little Joe, a real juvenile find, does a song and dance turn that gets a great hand. The boy has talent and knows how to use it. Ted accuses him of stealing the show, but he says that he is just breaking it up.

In the concluding part of the show Lewis takes the audience to Hawaii, with eight girls doing a beautiful hula, and then in short order all are transported to Russia, through the medium of music.

This is the best show Lewis has ever brought to the Pacfic Coast and Ted himself is better than ever. He plays and sings, dances, juggles the battered old sky-piece and twirls the baton with as much skill as ever. The show runs like clockwork and lasts just a little short of an hour.

Detroit Hollywood

Week (split) ending April 20

The Hollywood stage this week offered fair entertainment. The opening act, Jack Gregory and Company in "Novelty Land," was one difficult to classify with the ordinary run. Gregory's stuff is sufficiently off the beaten path to be amusing. He and an unbilled girl partner handled an assortment of hoops which they bounced, spun, rolled, juggled and threw about in interesting moving patterns.

Eddie Loughton's customary break between the first and second act was "Another Candle On Your Birthday Cake," handled by the Merrymakers in good style. Carl Spaeth lent a casual conversational voice to the refrain. Billy DeWitt, midget, billed as "Vaudeville's Tid Bit Comedian," was great as a midget, not so much as a comedian. The size of him appealed to the audience and brought him back for an encore.

Jimmy Burchill and Blondes, billed "Blondes of 1933," appeared in cartwheels, kicks, kneebends and general calisthenics. One of the blondes did very well in an ecstatic sort of dance, using a marabou fan. She finished with contortion work, bending back and twisting her torso completely around to pick up a feather in her teeth.

Looking over a recent issue of the "New Yorker," a cartoon by McNerney caught my attention. . . . It was of a music publishing office and it is a good example of how little attention some song-writers give to the titles of their numbers. . . . # STAGE SHOWS

Dallas Palace

Week ending April 21

A colorful, capering chorus is super-successful in aiding an otherwise mediocre show at the Palace this week when the Modern Minstrels was offered. In a minstrel arrangement with the Modern Rhythm Band on the stage and also stepped seats for the ensemble partly encircling the band, the attractive dozen Sunkist Beauties opened with a tambourine number. Esther Campbell, nice to look at, is a competent whistler while Juggling Nelson clicks in his handling of the twirling toppers and he gets a nice share of applause for his adroitness.

Plenty of speed is introduced by the Three Page Boys in a whirlwind sequence of tapping as only adepts exhibit it. Bruce Jordan, filling in as interlocutor, blends in imitations of dogs and birds and then runs the gamut of musical instruments in a performance almost surpassing the original subjects at times, with his mimicry. The introduction of a veteran black-face monologist brings in Harry Van Possen, who pours out his bundle of wisecracks masterfully and carried his audience right with him. He even dips into the relics of minstreldom to give the song, "Eemph, Iimph, Umph" in his rotund, rollicking way.

The chorus waving their wands and weaving magic before the eyes in causing objects to appear and disappear was a novel hit, as was a routine handled from their background of seats when a darkened showhouse gave opportunity for dim, dipping lights encased in megaphone shaped reflectors to be used individually to enhance the vocal rendition of a musical number. A tapping ensemble and a colorful finale completed a talented round of attractive appearances for the delightful dozen. Alexander Keese, guest conductor, and the music played by the orchestra contributed greatly to the smooth running success of the show.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending April 28

The show titled "Star Night at the Cocoanut Grove" opens in an auspicious manner with Roy Bradley introducing Betty Compson, who invites the audience to be her guests at the Cocoatnut Grove. The orchestra, under the direction of Glenn Welty, is on the stage in a setting representative of the popular West Coast dining place with five couples dancing to the strains of the band's music.

Dorothy June, introduced as the sweetheart of the Cocoanut Grove, entertains with some excellent acrobatic dancing. She is attired in blue pajamas and gives a fine exhibition.

Miss Compson next introduces Julian Hall, who offers an excellent impersonation of Charlie Chaplin. He is followed by Anna Chang, who impersonates Anna May Wong and sings "Faded Summer Love" and "Why Did It Have to Be Me" in a pleasing manner. Danny Beck entertains at the drums a la Harry Langdon, while Paul Jones, impersonating Robert Montgomery, does some fancy roller skating with unusual ease and grace. Miss Compson then leads the orchestra through a selection from "Street Girl," following which she plays "Weary River" on her violin. She also entertains with some fancy ballroom dancing with Roy Bradley as her partner. Miss Compson has a pleasing personality, is unassuming in her accomplishments and makes a hit with the audience.

Judy and Cheron mimic the trials and tribulations of Laurel & Hardy, and garner plenty of laughs from the followers of these two comedians. Consuelo Gonzales impersonates Lupe Velez and presents several Spanish songs and a snatch of vivacious dancing. Steve Savage opens his mouth and gambols about in typical Joe E. Brown fashion. The lad is also a clever dancer and steps about in a comical manner, which brings no end of laughs. In conclusion, Miss Compson impersonates Marlene Dietrich and sings "Falling in Loving Again," following which she introduces the various members of the show by their stage names.

San Antonio Sadler's

Split week ending April 23

Johnny Duff, accordionist, was on for the first act and offered two short solos, "Springtime" and "Egyptianella," for which he received a nice hand from the tent theatre patrons.

"Rutons' Educated Alley Dogs" were on next, going through a routine of backward somersaults, putting on collars and other canine tricks which formed a highly entertaining part of this program.

Miss Ethel Snow, featured in the trey spot, came out in a single and sang "Crying for the Carolines," following with "Making Faces at the Man in the Moon." The natives gave her a big hand at the curtain.

Hal Burns, Cowboy yodeling-guitarist and radio artist, gave several selections on two musical instruments, the harmonica and guitar. "Hard Luck Blues," "I Ain't Got Nobody," "Wreck of the Old '97" and "Mule Skinners Blues," were among his vocal numbers. He received a big hand between encores.

Roscoe (Nig) Allen, dressed as an Italian comedian, did a clever parody on "My Blue Heaven," along with jokes and wisecracks. He also danced what he called the Barnyard Charleston and made a hit with it. Finished to a warm hand from the audience.

Numerous Broadcasts Set for National Music Week Program

Numerous programs are scheduled for the air this week, over National Broadcasting Company networks, in commemoration of the ninth annual "national music week." The schedule is said to represent the greatest number of programs ever assembled for the celebration of this event.

More than 2,500 cities are expected to participate in the celebration. Famed directors and vocalists are being prominently featured on the more important programs during the week.

ORGAN SOLOS

BANKS KENNEDY (Stamford Palace) has for the past few weeks been presenting to this rather discriminating audience the higher type of organ solos and is doing exceptionally well. Kennedy has offered every conceivable type of solo but this particular kind seems to appeal to them more than those in the lighter vein. Kennedy not only has the ability to play well, but is smart in the ways of show business and builds up his solos with attractive lighting effects and decorative designs covering the organ. As the show caught, Kennedy featured Liszt's beautiful "Liebestrum," and the applause that greeted him at the finish reflected the audience's appreciation.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee Wisconsin) presents "The Magazine of Music-Ballyhooey," with the slides presenting old-fashioned pictures similar to those seen in the comic magazine. Selections include "All of Me," "Snuggled on Your Shoulder," "You're the One," a parody on "Happy Days Are Here Again," followed by "Is That the Human Thing to Do?" Words to all the selections are flashed on the screen with comedy matter between numbers.

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood) introduces his community sing fare with a lyric called "What's Your Racket" to the old popular melody, "Collegiate." The melodies that follow, alternate numbers with parody transition lyrics, are: "You're the One for Me"; "Prisoners' Song"; "When We're Alone"; "Oh, That Kiss"; "Just Friends"; "Comin' Through the Rye"; "Faded Summer Love," a comedy lyric carrying marginal notations indicating that certain lines are to be sung by bootleggers, housewives, plumbers, etc.; "Am I Blue" and "You Try Somebody Else." Clarke continues wisely to ignore most of the effect gadgets on the console.

RAY McNAMARA (New Orleans Publix Saenger) is featured along with one of Norman Brokenshire's organ features. McNamara, at the console of the Saenger organ, accompanies the singing film splendidly in a medley of Carolina songs, which include "Carolina," "Crying for the Carolines," "Evening in the Carolines." He does what he can for the feature, which really hinders him. The house should allow him to try a solo of ballads, unhampered by slides or screen effects. At one time he was the most popular organ balladist here.

CHARLES DARRIN (Mansfield Straghn Hall) offered a community singing novelty featuring a number of songs, introduced by cleverly worded introductory songs.

The solo was well presented and had a good reception. The numbers used were: "Sweet Sue," "This Is My Love Song," "Crosby, Columbo and Vallee," "Human Thing," "Three Little Words," "Can't We Talk It Over" and "Blue Heaven." This organist is quite popular with the college audience (the theatre is on the grounds of the State Teachers College) and he usually is encored on each solo.

OVERTURES

PHIL FABELLO (New York Coliseum) and His Entertainers dedicated one of the most recent overtures "to the Ladies." A special introduction of "My Man" was played for the opening number. Snappily played rhythmic interpolations in double time were incorporated into this first number. A vocal solo, by the band's pianist, of "Sam the Accordion Man," and another vocal solo by the drummer, singing special lyrics to "A Good Man Is Hard to Find," followed. "Just a Gigolo" and "Big Man From the South" were also sung, and as a grand finale a number of the boys offered "hot" solos of the last named number.

CHARLES PAUL (Jamaica Valencia) directed his orchestra in a personally compiled and specially arranged overture entitled "Chopiniana." The presentation was a medley of the famous composer's works and included the playing of "Military Polonaise," "Prelude in A Major," "Nocturne in E Flat Major" (featuring strings, organ and piano), a clarinet solo of "Minute Waltz in D Flat Major," a piano solo by Mr. Paul of "Waltz in C Sharp Minor," and for the finale one of the movements from the well known "Scherzo."

This young, personable leader has proved a distinct surprise to the patrons of this house, who thought he would be the type to present nothing but "jazz." He has and does offer overtures of the lighter vein and does well with them, but his forte is presentations of the kind reviewed.

JOE FULCO (New Orleans Loew's State) takes a nice hand from the audience with his two numbers, "Just Friends" and "Weary Blues." The orchestra jazzes them up in the old-time hot style known as "coming to town" with R. Papalia, getting the applause for "Just Friends" with a trombone solo. A clarinet variation on "Weary Blues" helped put this number over though the organ was too loud and rather hurt the general effect.

ALEXANDER KEESE (Dallas Palace) formerly a conductor with Publix for eleven years and for the last two years musical director for radio station WFAA in Dallas, returned as guest conductor at the Palace this week. His return is auspicious in denoting successful programs during his stay. "Lo and Behold" as an opener is a short preparation for "Life's No Fun," which is a completely new tune, brisk and peppy in its arrangement. A vocal solo gave the lilting words and after the completion of the number Keese announced that it was composed by Pem Davenport, the pianist of the Modern Rhythm Band and that the orchestration was by Gus Leven, also of Dallas. Contributing further to the musical program Keese leads his orchestra in "Wasn't That the Human Thing to Do?" in which individual instruments successively carry on the refrain, with a skillful arrangement bringing in the entire orchestra for a resounding wind-up.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) directed the Fox Orchestra in a rendition of selections from the works of Wagner arranged under the title of "The Holy Grail." Selections from "Tannhauser" were featured, with some brilliant work cut out for the brass section. The organ was used in conjunction with the orchestra to swell the grand finale. The number was received with more than the usual acclaim.

EDDIE PERRIGIO (Omaha Orpheum) and his R-K-Olians did themselves proud last week at the Orpheum with their overture, an orchestral presentation of "Indian Melodies." The little medley, beautifully woven together with the required interludes, has in it airs from "Pale Moon," "Land of Sky Blue Waters," "Waters of Minnetonka" and "The Indian Love Call." Whenever a house hears it, the applause is expressive of real appreciation and enjoyment.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 126.—(A) What are the practical effects of a short circuit in a bell or buzzer circuit? (B) What is the difference between a bell and a buzzer circuit? (C) Should a bell or a buzzer circuit wire be soldered and insulated? (D) Describe a series, a parallel and a series-parallel battery connection. What is the effect of each? You may use diagrams if desired, provided you draw them neatly and in black ink (and don't make them too deep).

Answer to Question No. 119

Bluebook School Question No. 119 was: "(A) Provided the right diameter carbon for the amperage is used, does change in amperage alter the square millimeter brilliancy of the crater floor? (B) Given a 55-degree angle (ordinary arc), does the crater increase per added ampere vary with different makes of carbon? (C) In what way may you measure crater diameters accurately? (D) Does crater area (ordinary arc) increase proportionally with amperage increase?

As to this one, the following made acceptable replies: S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, Frank Dudiak, Andy Bailey, John Wentworth and William Sellers, Bill Doe, Nic Granby, Dave Goldberg, Andrew Breaston, Dan Emmerson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Chick Peters, Dave Manuels, Bob Davidson, Pat Davis, D. B. Peters, Frank Davis, Tom Murphy, D. L. Sinklow, William Broadbent, Roy Davis, John Williams, Albert Jones, Peter Jackson and Bob Diglah, L. Ludlow, Dave Mason, G. Tinlin, T. L. May, R. J. Pinker, John Ahrenson, H. D. Schofield, A. Gibson, Jack Billings, Mike McGuire, Frank Ferguson, George Deckson, Tom Turk, G. Farmann, J. G. Gates, Richard Singleton, M. D. Dove, Frank Burker, P. L. Toeping, Dave Anderson, Tom Whitnath, Alonzo Zerach, Frank F. Franks, Dave Lambert and Tom Davis, T. R. Peters, H. D. Tyler, K. L. Knight, Dave Birdoll, T. R. Peters, Don Warren, Andy L. Patry, Thomas McGruder, Henry Sicmann, S. T. Jones, Seymour Carroll, Charles Ray and Tom Taylor, L. D. Richards, Dan L. Simmons, P. D. Thompson, H. B. Billings, John Cermak, Tom Rathburn, Frank C. Hagmyer, P. T. Garling, Andrew Wells, Charles Tamper, Leo Garling, S. T. Jones, F. B. Gamble, S. T. Jones, P. D. Thompson, P. H. Bondom, Henry B. Coates, P. T. Garling, Aleck Geibto, Dan Holler, Richard Michaels and Dave Lode.

In this question, I have disregarded Section B for the reason that, due either to my own carelessness or to a printer's blunder, it did not appear as intended.

(A) We will listen to Lester Borst first. He says: "Since the question specifically states that the carbons be of proper diameter for the current flow, the brilliancy per square millimeter of area will remain constant, regardless of alterations in current flow. By this it is meant that the measured candle power of any crater floor will be the product of its square millimeter area by the average constant of 150, regardless of the number of amperes used. I believe we may now say that 160 is a fair constant for the purpose. Improvement in carbons has raised the constant somewhat during the past few years."

(B) Those who answered this question as stated for the most part held that the crater area varies somewhat with equal amperage when using different makes of carbon, with which view I am inclined to agree, though to date there seems no reliable information available.—F. H. R.

(C) Messrs. Evans and Rau say: "Press hot crater on block of hard wood. From the impression thus made the area may easily be measured and computed." That seems to be the favorite method, but I personally see no reason for handling a hot carbon. Why not lay a piece of heavy paper, such as, for example, a business card, on a flat table and press a cold carbon stub down on it, rolling it slightly. I've done it thus many, many times and have got satisfactory results. Friend Dudiak says: "The area of the crater may be calculated with the eclipse formula, once the length and breadth of the impression have been obtained.

(D) G. E. Doe says: "No! The increase is considerably in excess of the proportional current increase. If we double the current flow, the crater area will be increased 2.46 times."

Arthur C. Homme, projectionist of the Plaza theatre, in Freeport, L. I., sent in a very good answer to Question No. 108, which was in some manner overlooked, so that he was not given credit. I wrote him explaining that his failure to receive credit was the result of an accident. He answered as follows:

"Thanks for your letter giving me credit for answer submitted to Question No. 108. That was my first attempt at answering a Bluebook School question. Just wanted to see if it was possible for me to submit an answer that would at least be acceptable. After reading some of the answers submitted by Borst, Evans and Rau, Billings, Van Vaulkenburg, etc., one feels his feet getting cold, especially when he has no such command of language as is enjoyed by those various gentlemen.

"As to being the gainer by answering the Bluebook School questions, I wonder if the above named projectionists really realize what it has done for them, what you have done for them, and most of all, what they have done for themselves by answering those questions. Not only have they gained enormously in accurate knowledge, but also their names are known throughout the world of motion picture projectionists, and to thousands of managers as well. For myself, I only hope that one day I may be big enough to stand in the shadow of yourself and these men."

Lack of command of language is no bar. I seldom print anything just as written. Writing is a profession and an exceedingly difficult one. I try not to alter the THOUGHT or ideas of the men answering questions.

Detroit Industrial Picture Firm Takes New Sound Plant

The Metropolitan Motion Picture Company, Detroit organization producing industrial sound pictures, and direct licensee of RCA Photophone in the Middlewest, has moved to a new two-story studio and laboratory in the city. It is said to be the oldest Detroit organization in its field.

The company has obtained an additional RCA Photophone sound truck and recording equipment. The new quarters contain 35,000 feet of floor space, and are equipped with a sound-proof recording studio and a complete developing, cutting, editing and finishing laboratory.

An Authoritative Answer to Question No. 115

Bluebook School question No. 115, dealt entirely with the arc light source. We therefore submitted to the National Carbon Company, which is about the highest authority we know of on such matters, this question, together with various answers submitted by students of the Bluebook School. The following answer has been prepared for us by the manager of the arc department of that company, Dr. E. R. Geib. It reads as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Supplementing my letter of the 12th, the following are our answers to Bluebook School Question 115:

"(A) Question—Will an a. c. arc deliver 50 per cent as much light to the condenser as will a d. c. arc of equal amperage? Answer—In answering this question, it will be necessary that we take into consideration the types of carbons used. For d. c. low intensity service, a neutral cored type of carbon, as we term it, is used. The light from such a carbon emanates from the crater. When this same type of carbon is burned in the upper and lower holders of an a. c. arc, you do not get 50 per cent as much light as from a d. c. arc of equal amperage. This is because the actual light produced by either of the two craters is less than one-half of that from the positive crater of the d. c. arc. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that sufficient time is not given in the case of the a. c. arc for the respective positive craters formed on one electrode after the other to reach as high a temperature as is the case with the d. c. arc. However, the general practice today, when operating on a. c., is to use the special patented trim known as the National White Flame A. C. Projector Carbons developed by the National Carbon Company a number of years ago. These carbons produce a snow white light that has improved projection enormously over the results obtained from an a. c. arc equipped with neutral cored carbons. Furthermore, the materials used in the cores of White Flame A. C. Carbons eliminate most of the hum characteristic of a. c. arcs and at the same time cause the arc to burn more steadily.

"(B) Question—If a. c. is used at the arc, should an attempt be made to utilize light from both craters, or only from one? Explain fully. Answer—It is possible that optical systems could be designed which would utilize the light from both craters of an a. c. arc, but the application of this principle would be extremely difficult and possibly impracticable. It is customary, therefore, to focus only one of the craters. Even when using our White Flame A. C. Carbons, the crater and not the arc stream should be brought to the focus of the optical system. In this way, the full intensity of the brilliant crater light is utilized, supplemented by the light from the adjacent portion of the arc stream.

"(C) Question—Name at least two points of difference as between a. c. and d. c. projection light. Answer—The source of light from a d. c. arc is the crater on the positive carbon. The arc stream is colorless, or very nearly so. With the a. c. arc, there are two craters, one on each carbon. If ordinary neutral cored carbons, the same as are used for d. c. work, were used with a. c., the arc stream would be the same as that in the d. c. arc, and the volume of light, as stated in the answer to (A), less than half that from the d. c. arc. The customary use of National White Flame A. C. Carbons in a. c. arcs constitutes a second point of difference. The presence of the rare earth materials in the core renders the arc stream more luminous than the arc stream of the d. c. arc, and as mentioned in the answer to (A), the color of the light is changed to snow white. Most of the a. c. noise or hum is eliminated, and the arc burns very steadily.

"(D) Question—Are the violet lines in the arc stream said to be brighter than the crater floor itself? Answer—The violet lines in the arc stream are due to the presence of the vapor of the metal potassium which is used in projector carbons. The luminosity of these potassium lines is low, and therefore they are not as brilliant as the positive crater which emits radiation of all colors.

"(E) Question—Does the flow of current through the gas stream cause it to have luminosity, regardless of its temperature? Answer—A great deal of argument could be produced if this question were asked a group of very well informed physicists. However, there seems to be sound reason and experimental evidence for the theory that the luminosity of the arc stream, as distinguished from the crater of the arc, is not a function of its temperature. The luminosity of the crater, on the other hand, probably follows closely the law of black body radiation and is therefore influenced directly by temperature."

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

OVER-AMBITIOUS STARS

EDITOR OF MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

I want to call to your attention an evil that is being practiced in our business and I am sure you can properly write an editorial on the subject in such a manner as to bring it to the attention of all concerned.

It is on the subject of free lancing or the results from over-anxious stars to get into too many pictures. Now, I fully realize that it is the ambition of every star to make as many pictures as possible from a revenue standpoint, but I believe that I can show where this idea is all wrong from the same standpoint.

Last week I had four different pictures from as many different companies, and in each one of the pictures there was a certain female character who played in them all, and on the last one I had three people get up and walk out, saying that they were fed up on that star. I withhold the name for fear of offending that certain person, but unless all of the characters of every feature were listed in the advance billing, there would be no possible way of avoiding this booking. It hurts the star, it hurts the theatre and, I dare say, hurts the producer. When a star keeps within the control of one company, there is little or no chance of this happening, but when they appear in everybody's pictures, it is bound to happen. In the case of one company that has two or three more pictures with that person in them, I shall find it necessary to withhold dates until such time as I may think the curse of this occurrence has worn off.

I also notice that Metro has loaned Joan Crawford to United Artists for a picture, and cannot help but feel that this is going to result in discomfort to a lot of exhibitors. No doubt it will make a lot of them feel that they will have to buy all of United Artists' product in order to get that one, if she is popular with them, and you know as well as I do that you cannot buy just one from them.

But the first mentioned is the worst thing I know of. I have related my experience to several other exhibitors, and nearly all of them say that some star or other has been killed for them in the same manner. I would suggest that if a producer uses stars that do not come under their regular list of employees, that they list the names of all such people in their press sheet so that an exhibitor can avoid making the sad mistake that I did. I can assure you that, excepting one picture, I had no way of telling that this person was in the others.

This may not look serious on the face of it, but just analyze it for yourself and suppose that you attended a theatre four times in a week or even in a month, and each time you saw the same star. You would either think the theatre was overdoing the thing or that there was a lack of talent in Hollywood.

I am writing this only in a spirit of trying to point out something that may mean something to the industry and something that from a standpoint of run could not be detected from a first run week stand, but only from a hick town where four changes a week is the average policy, and which, perhaps, constitutes a majority of houses using pictures from any exchange.—RAY BRANCH, secretary-treasurer, Hastings Strand Theatre, Inc., Hastings, Mich.

Mr. Branch has so explicitly set forth his contention that his letter is a better presentation than an editorial would be. It is apparent enough that the difficulty he and his audiences find is the contradictory emotional result from, not too many appearances of the same person, but from the concentration of these conflicting appearances, resulting in the impression that one actor is too many persons at the same time. It is a condition which arises much more frequently with important types and conspicuous members of supporting casts than among stars. Meanwhile, in curious contrast, is the unhappy fact that star building is becoming more difficult today than in the speedy silent era because present production conditions and processes permit so few screen appearances per year. Miss Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin attained their unparalleled world fame on the basis of a reel a week and thousands upon thousands of screen appearances.—THE EDITOR.

ROADSHOW ADVERTISING

EDITOR OF MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

I would like to call your attention to the most indiscriminate advertising which has come to my attention in some time, and it is sponsored by one of our leading producer-distributor-exhibitors.

I refer to the roadshow advertising which is being sponsored in connection with the Metro picture, "Grand Hotel." The first billing which this picture received for its run in the Majestic theatre of Boston carried the catchline prominently displayed in the ads, "This is the only theatre in which this picture will be shown in New England this season." This was later changed to read "territory" instead of "New England"; and now it reads "city" instead of either.

Last week the Carlton theatre in Providence was guilty of the same device when it used the word "territory" in the identical catchline, prominently displayed.

We remember the procedure followed by Metro in regard to "Ben Hur" and "The Big Parade," but it had none of the earmarks of deliberate falsehood and misleading statements, which are going to react to the expense of all exhibitors and Metro itself.

The word "season" may be construed to cover a multitude of sins, but to the public it means "year" at first glance, and newspaper readers seldom take more than one glance.

I have noted that your journal takes very little part in subjects relating to producer-exhibitor troubles, but it seems to me that this practice should call forth your wholehearted co-operation.

With kindest regards, I am—F. M. A. LITCHARD, Morse Theatre, Franklin Mass.

Felix Feist, Metro general sales manager, said that the Boston and Providence theatre advertising on "Grand Hotel" which has been protested was contained in trailers, and that the copy was corrected in the manner described "as soon as it was observed." Feist said that there can be no valid complaint to use of the word "season," as the general release of the picture is not to be set for a long time "and will not be until after September, in any avent."

"'Grand Hotel' is showing at advanced prices in both Providence and Boston," Feist said. "There is no possibility of its being shown at regular box office scales before September, so I cannot see that there is any valid complaint over the use of the word 'season' in describing the period of the picture's roadshowing."

Feist added that the Morse Theatre has not bought "Grand Hotel."

---

MOTION PICTURE HERALD must take issue with Mr. Litchard's observation that this paper does not much concern itself with "producer-exhibitor troubles." This publication as an instrument of service to the whole of the motion picture industry is vastly concerned with the establishment and maintenance of fair and reasonable standards of practise in furtherance of the best interests of the whole industry. It has from its beginning consistently insisted that the well being of the entire structure demands the proper service and treatment of the retailer, the exhibitor, and cooperation with him in purveying screen wares to the consumer, his box office public. It is not, however, the proper function of a business journal to seek to intervene in the normal procedures of normal bargaining between individual buyers and sellers, or to endeavor to define to either the terms and conditions of buying or selling. It is rather the HERALD'S concern that this be a fair, clean field of business. The detailed operations are the concern of those doing that business. —THE EDITOR.

10% Wage Cut for Famous Players Canadian Workers

An agreement has been concluded between Famous Players Canadian Corporation and operators and stage hands, providing for a 10 per cent wage cut for a period of 16 months. Extension of two weeks' notice late last week effected the deliberations.

The Toronto company had proposed larger cuts, but a compromise was reached. Famous Players also agreed to pay full salaries at the Tivoli in Toronto if the house is closed for the summer.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

A colored fellow, out on parole and with a sizeable police record, recently made the mistake of hurling a brick through the window of the Screenland cafe. It was a mistake, because it resulted in his quick arrest. Arraigned before the judge and asked to state his address the prisoned declared that he had none. "Too bad," sympathized the magistrate. "I'll give you one that you will be able to use for a long time to come."

Eddie Grossman, who journeyed here from Cincinnati a short time ago to resume his old job as branch manager at United Artists exchange, is still carrying the marks of that eventful journey. Going at a 75-mile clip in his car, Grossman lost control of the machine in passing a truck, went into a ditch, with the machine turning some snappy somersaults. It was completely demolished and that Eddie wasn't also continues to remain a happy but unsolved mystery to him. His injuries were slight—but when he thinks what might have happened—Oh boy!

"Lena Rivers" was given a hearty endorsement at a private preview by Mrs. R. M. McClure, president of the motion picture division of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs and representative of thirty women's clubs and parent-teachers' associations. The picture was not only voted as being wholesome entertainment, but was almost unanimously voted as the type of production best suited for family entertainment.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it...lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

A favorite for extra wear . . . extra beauty . . . extra value!

The more wool there is in a carpet, the softer it is under foot and the longer it wears. That's logic. And because it gives you more wool, Bigelow Imperial is a favorite with those who measure carpet value by years of satisfactory service — not by cost per yard.

Bigelow Imperial is a full pitch carpet with an unlimited range of colors. And it has 18,000 more tufts of yarn per yard of 27″ width than any competing carpet, except Bigelow Sandringham (made of the same Lively Wool, same construction but a higher pile than Imperial).

Every inch of yarn in Imperial's extra dense pile is made of Lively Wool that springs back under foot, that's easier to clean, that keeps its beauty longer. Result: a thicker, quieter, more restful fabric, good for years of service.

Because it is so tightly woven, Imperial has an unusual sharpness of design and delicacy of color blending. Its colors are particularly clear and fresh, because Lively Wool contains an extra high percentage of white wool that takes dyes better. Imperial keeps its fresh beauty because Lively Wool resists matting.

You will find Bigelow Imperial Carpet in the finest hotels. There are 1300 yards in the dining room of the Greenbrier. It is laid in bedrooms in the Waldorf Astoria; in the corridors of the St. Moritz and St. Regis; in dining rooms of the Biltmore units, including the new Oklahoma Biltmore. Leading theatres, too, put Bigelow Imperial where traffic is heaviest. To name a few: The Uptown in Philadelphia, the Regent in Detroit, The Alhambra in Sacramento, The New Erlanger in Atlanta.

Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps are the "Preferred Choice."

To be universally acknowledged the "one" indispensable requisite for perfect projection, requires more than the indiscriminate use of printer's ink. Such a position can only be earned by a product which is correct in principle, advanced in mechanical execution and has proven itself superior in actual service and performance.

The light producing reserve of Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps brings all projection requirements easily within their ability to do the job best, with greater economy, reduced up-keep cost and hence, greater purchaser's satisfaction.

"First Choice" and "Peerless" are inseparably associated.

NOTES on WRITERS and SUBJECTS in this ISSUE

¶ The U. S. A. is quite left out of it in this issue's presentation of new theatres, it being felt that we could afford to concentrate our attention for one issue on what is being done outside this country. However, one aspect of both of these theatres (A Small Suburban Theatre in Canada and A New Paramount Theatre in England) gives them a special American flavor, since the one is operated by American interests—Paramount—and the other is in a suburb of the quite Americanized city (local opinions notwithstanding) of Toronto. British though Canada be, the articles and accompanying pictures of the Odeon and Paramount show the vast differences in influences between the architectural spirit of these theatres. How the Paramount, for example, would look in an American city! Yet we learn from Mr. Mooring that this house is peculiarly well adapted to the community it is to serve. Worth noting and remembering is the fact that the Paramount is one of the most palpably luxurious theatres in all England, while the city of Leeds is not only provincial but dominantly industrial. The Odeon, however, is not notably different from many an American theatre. Its interest lies principally in its character as a small theatre adapted to the modern needs of the motion picture in a community of well directed tastes. W. H. Mooring, who discusses the Paramount, is editor of the London film journal, The Bioscope, and representative of MOTION PICTURE HERALD in England.

¶ The contribution in this issue to the symposium on Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance is the penultimate one of the series. The series, which has been running for seven successive issues, will be terminated in the next with an article representing a point of view not heretofore expressed—that of the architect. It is so seldom recognized, at least in a practical way, that proper seating begins with the architect. What happens after he has made his initial preparations is of utmost importance. But he can easily be to blame for seating faults that may prove to exist in the finished theatre. On the other hand, the architect finds himself confronted with practices in both established design and seating processes that restricts his treatment, even though he recognize the possibility of bad results. Whatever may be the concern of the architect in the problem of seating, it will be fully discussed in the concluding article. . . . The contributor to the symposium in this issue is a leading seating engineer who has had extensive experience in both the practical and theoretical problems of theatre seating over many years. Leslie C. Kinley is associated with the Heywood-Wakefield Company, attached to that manufacturer's New York office.

¶ Continuing the thought expressed through many pages in the last issue of BETTER THEATRES, we offer in this issue timely suggestions from the field of theatre equipment itself. In Low Prices: The Showman's Opportunity, is discussed the many advantages in present price levels available to those who are in a position to make use of them. It is a subject about which no writer could be better informed than Harry M. Paul, who has been associated with motion picture theatre equipment manufacturing and distribution for many years, in all sections of the country. Mr. Paul until recently has been attached to the New York headquarters of the National Theatre Supply Company. At present he is connected with the Omaha branch of the same firm as assistant to the general sales manager.

¶ It doubtless is due to other factors in addition to acoustics, but there is certainly food for thought in the revelation in The New Importance of Acoustics to Natural Sound, that the majority of unsuccessful theatres are within the 25% classified as having extremely poor conditions of audibility. When sound came, acoustics rose up as a deep, dark study to worry the exhibitor the more because no one seemed to know much about it. Then we learned, and with the first few principles in our heads, we thought all was solved. But study has continued, and in the most responsible circles of acoustic research, it has been to learn largely how little we have really known about acoustics. Indeed, the improvements in the very technics of sound recording and reproduction has magnified the problem of theatre acoustics, and it was the mission of Messrs. Schmid and Wolf to tell us why this is so, and what in their opinion is the only authentic manner of meeting the resulting situation. S. K. Wolf is head of the acoustic research department of Electrical Research Products, Inc., while F. C. Schmid is his assistant.

¶ Leo T. Parker (The Theatre and the Law) is a Cincinnati attorney and a regular contributor to BETTER THEATRES on legal subjects involving affairs of the theatre as represented in various litigations.

THE VALUE OF THE S. M. P. E. TO THE THEATRE

an editorial

FEW industries enjoy the practical benefits and the prestige of an organization comparable to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. And the motion picture industry is to be further congratulated on its possession of more than one such organization, for it has the American Society of Cinematographers and, more recently, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences. Taken together, these three enterprises—co-operative, progressive, authentically scientific—form, if need be, a convincing part of the motion picture industry's answer to any charge that it does not properly recognize its responsibilities.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers is peculiarly concerned with the exhibition division of the industry. Its work, of course, is not arbitrarily confined to any division. But one associates the Academy, and of course the A. S. C., rather with production, their very memberships being drawn almost entirely from the studios. The S. M. P. E., on the other hand, though having a membership representative of every branch of the industry, conducts more important work than any other agency in the affairs of the motion picture theatre.

Indeed, the theatre is becoming more and more a major concern of the S. M. P. E. Establishment of the Practical Projection Committee was evidence of this tendency. In this move it was patently recognized that projection is of pre-eminent importance to the successful conductance of the motion picture theatre and, what is just as notable, it was admitted that this importance must be treated beyond the mere esoterics of the laboratory.

Among the many other manifestations of this practical interest in the theatre is the later one represented in the invitation to both of the 1931 conventions, asking an architect to read a paper before it on a specific technical contribution to the science of motion picture theatre design.

With the first 1932 convention but a week away as we write, it is to be noted that this interest in the practical affairs of the theatre, in all its departments, is impressively continued. One paper, indeed, is entitled "How Can the S. M. P. E. Be of Greater Service to the Manager?" The presence of this paper on the Washington program is more than a recognition of the importance of the theatre in the activities of the society. It may also be regarded as an invitation to the theatre manager to consider the importance of the society to him.

The interest of the S. M. P. E. in the affairs of the theatre, pointed out with considerable laudation in the paragraphs above, dictates that those immediately connected with the theatre support that interest. Even though their concern with the theatre be exclusively pecuniary (and we do not believe it is always entirely so), they should yet benefit by what the S. M. P. E. would cumulatively be able to do for them.

This direct service to the theatre proceeds logically from the character of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers as an agency of investigation, of research, of experiment in the technics of the theatre. What the society finds is translated into new and improved devices which ultimately become accessible to the theatre for finer, more effective exhibition of the motion picture. To seek such devices constitutes, we believe, the sole authentic mission of the S. M. P. E. Certainly, we should deplore any official relaxation that would permit a deviation from the society's work in the interests of pure and practical motion picture science. The work of the S. M. P. E. lies, like that of any other authentic scientific institution, in the seeking. It is because of this seeking that the theatre owner, theatre manager, theatre architect and theatre technician will find the Society of Motion Picture Engineers worthy of his intimate and substantial support.

A SMALL SUBURBAN THEATRE IN CANADA

Upper view: The auditorium, looking toward the stadium seating section at the rear. The ceiling and wall panels are of acoustic plaster, while the rear wall is of acoustic tile.

Lower view: The vestibule. Walls and ceiling are painted, bearing stenciled designs in color. The stepped ceiling provides area for cove lighting. The floor is of terrazzo.

THE RECENT opening of the Odeon theatre provides another interesting addition to the suburban motion picture houses of Toronto, the second city of Canada, with a population of 800,000 Although erected on the site of a former building and incorporating parts of the previous structure, this theatre is virtually a new building.

The problem was to provide a modern fireproof theatre building, but still to utilize as much as possible of the existing structure. The site is an inside lot 45x127 feet, with a 10-foot lane at one side, and a 5-foot lane across the rear.

The existing walls were retained, increased in height and strengthened by steel columns, which also carried the steel trusses and roof structure. The local building laws for theatres demand a strictly fireproof structure, so the work was carried out to this end. A new reinforced concrete floor was laid over the entire existing basement, forming the sloping theatre floor. The basement was subdivided to form rooms for the transformers, generators, heating plant and general storage purposes.

The Odeon is located in a semi-commercialized neighborhood district, and was erected by its operator, G. B. Garbarino of Toronto. Kaplan & Sprachman of Toronto were the architects and construction was under a general contract, with supervision by the architects. The single floor —that is, orchestra proper and stadium—seats 765. The cost, exclusive of site and equipment, was $60,000, giving a construction cost per seat of a little less than $78.50. Furnishings and equipment added $20,000 to the investment.

The building houses the theatre and associated facilities exclusively. Overall building dimensions are 45x127 feet, with an average height of 45 feet. Construction, fireproof throughout, is of reinforced concrete on a steel frame, with roofing of prepared gypsum block. The buildings is faced in brick.

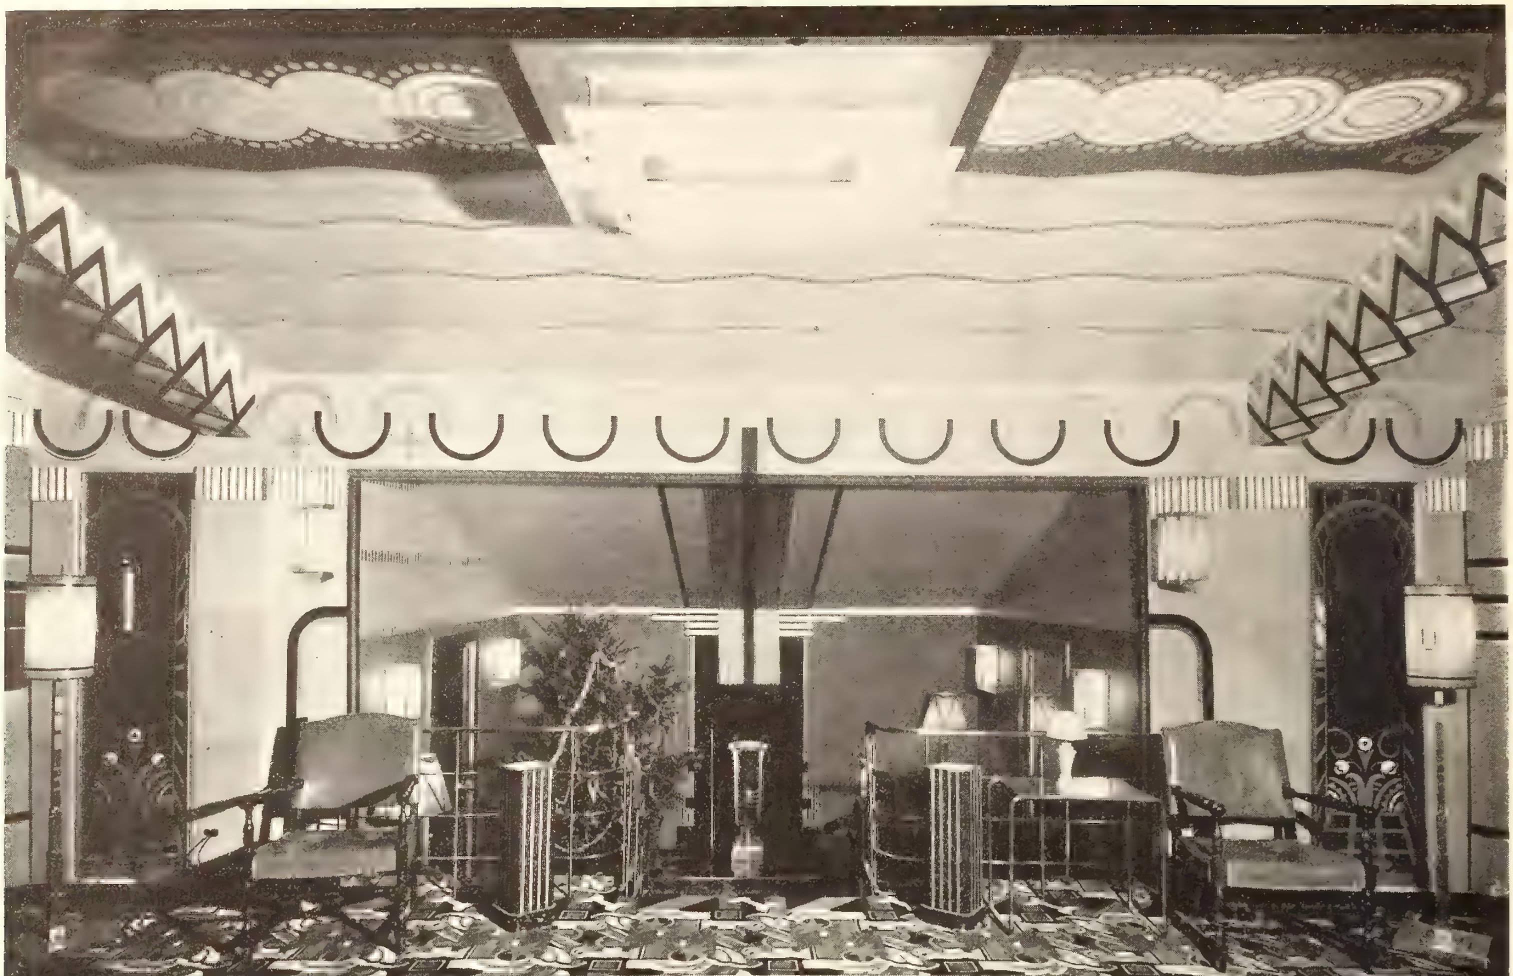
The architects began with the stipulation that absolute maximum capacity be secured, and they adopted a plan whereby as much of the entire building area as possible could be used for seating. There is no stage, merely a platform for the screen and associated sound equipment. The seating area is on the stadium plan, as previously indicated, with the stadium section extended over the lobby, a foyer, lounges, toilet rooms, theatre offices and an ushers' room. This arrangement represents the principal device employed for the utilization of all available space for seating.

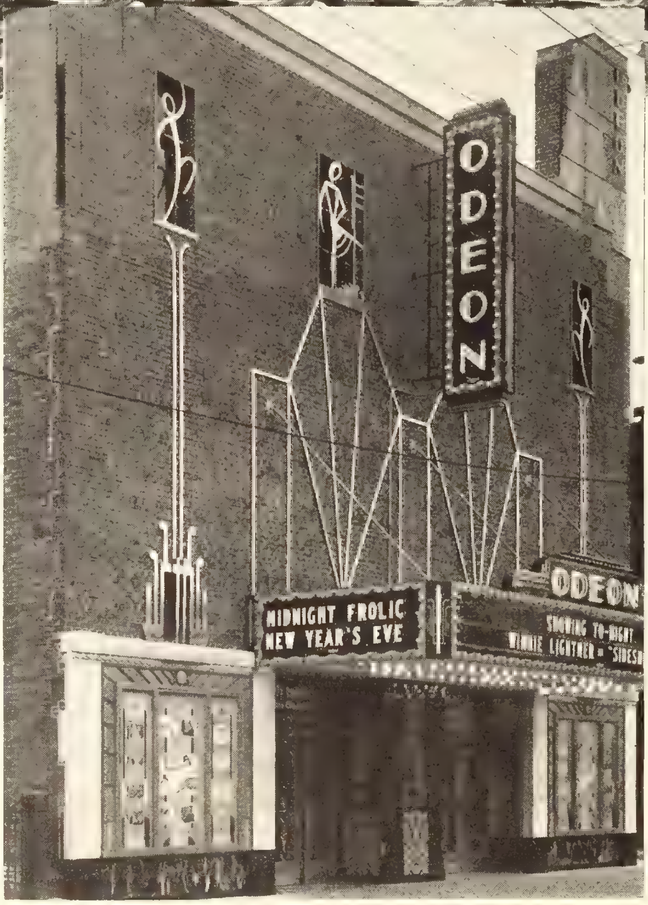
Of the 765 seats, the forward portion of the auditorium contains 487 chairs, and the stadium 278. There are 25 rows in the lower section, and 16 in the stadium. Chairs are of the box spring type, designed and executed by the Globe Furniture Company, Ltd., of Waterloo, Ont. Backs are covered in jacquered velour, the seats in maroon plain moroccoline.

The projection room, located in the usual manner at the rear of the auditorium, has relatively little elevation, due to the stadium type of plan, and the angle of projection is only 12°. Auxiliary rooms are on either side of the projection room, with the exception of the generator room, which is located in the basement. Hertner Transverters are used. The walls of the projection room are painted black to a height of 4 feet, with the balance in gray. The ceiling is painted in buff. The projection room is also acoustically treated, the forward wall and the entire ceiling being surfaced with acoustic plaster.

Upper view: The lobby, which is done in shades of brown, accentuated by contrasting gold, black and red. At right are the steps leading to a small waiting foyer.

Lower view: The entrance, showing the emphasis on the vitrolite box office which is treated as a conspicuous focal point of the front arrangement at the sidewalk.





The view at the top of the page shows the lobby, looking down into the waiting foyer, which is done largely in metal, glass and modernistic furnishings. The lower view shows the facade treatment.

Two projectors are installed, but there is space provision for a third machine. Projectors are Simplex, and the sound system is DeForest. The Odeon has a maximum screen size of 20x15 feet. The distance from the first row of seats to the screen is 16 feet.

Air conditioning facilities consist in two ventilation fans, one at each end of the auditorium. Both draw air into the auditorium through grilles terminating ducts leading from a sealed roof chamber, which has three ventilators. Provision has been made for the addition of a spray system for cooling. Heating is by a system of concealed units, operating under thermostatic control, with oil as the fuel. Except for heating, no provision for air conditioning has been made for those portions of the building outside the auditorium.

Acoustical treatment of the auditorium is incorporated in panels employed in the decorative pattern of walls and ceiling, and at the rear wall. The wall and ceiling panels are surfaced with acoustic plaster, while the rear wall is laid with perforated acoustic tile (Acousti-Celotex).

Illumination includes facilities for color effects, provided in lamps of harmonized shades arranged above each one of the auditorium pilasters on separate circuits. Provisions have also been made for future floodlighting of the exterior.

Upon entering through a shallow vestibule, the patron is within a lobby that extends the full width of the building. A small foyer, or waiting room, is immediately off this chamber, but having the effect of separation achieved by means of a few steps downward. On this semi-sublevel are also the theatre office and a store room. Men's and women's lounges, with adjoining toilet facilities, are located at the front of the building on either side of the vestibule, with entrance directly from the lobby.

The boiler room is placed in the basement at the front of the building. The basement, which extends beneath the entire building, also contains the motor-generator room, electrical apparatus and storage space.

Access to the auditorium is by means of ramped passages leading from either side of the lobby to a central cross-aisle, from which both the stadium and the two aisles of the forward portion are reached. The lowered waiting foyer occupies the space between these ramps.

The general architectural and decorative style is modern, with a moderate amount of ornamentation in simple patterns executed in plaster and stenciled designs, harmonized with general lighting facilities and the special illumination features previously noted. The architecture, decorative treatment and materials employed may be indicated as follows:

Facade. Facing in dark brick with trim in stone and vitrolite, the latter extending above a 10-foot stone base. Superimposed on this background in a rather unusual manner (see accompanying photograph) are figures from life and geometric patterns wrought in polished aluminum. Utilitarian elements, such as lettering, grilles, marquee and display sign, also achieve decorative effect through the use of aluminum and colored vitrolite.

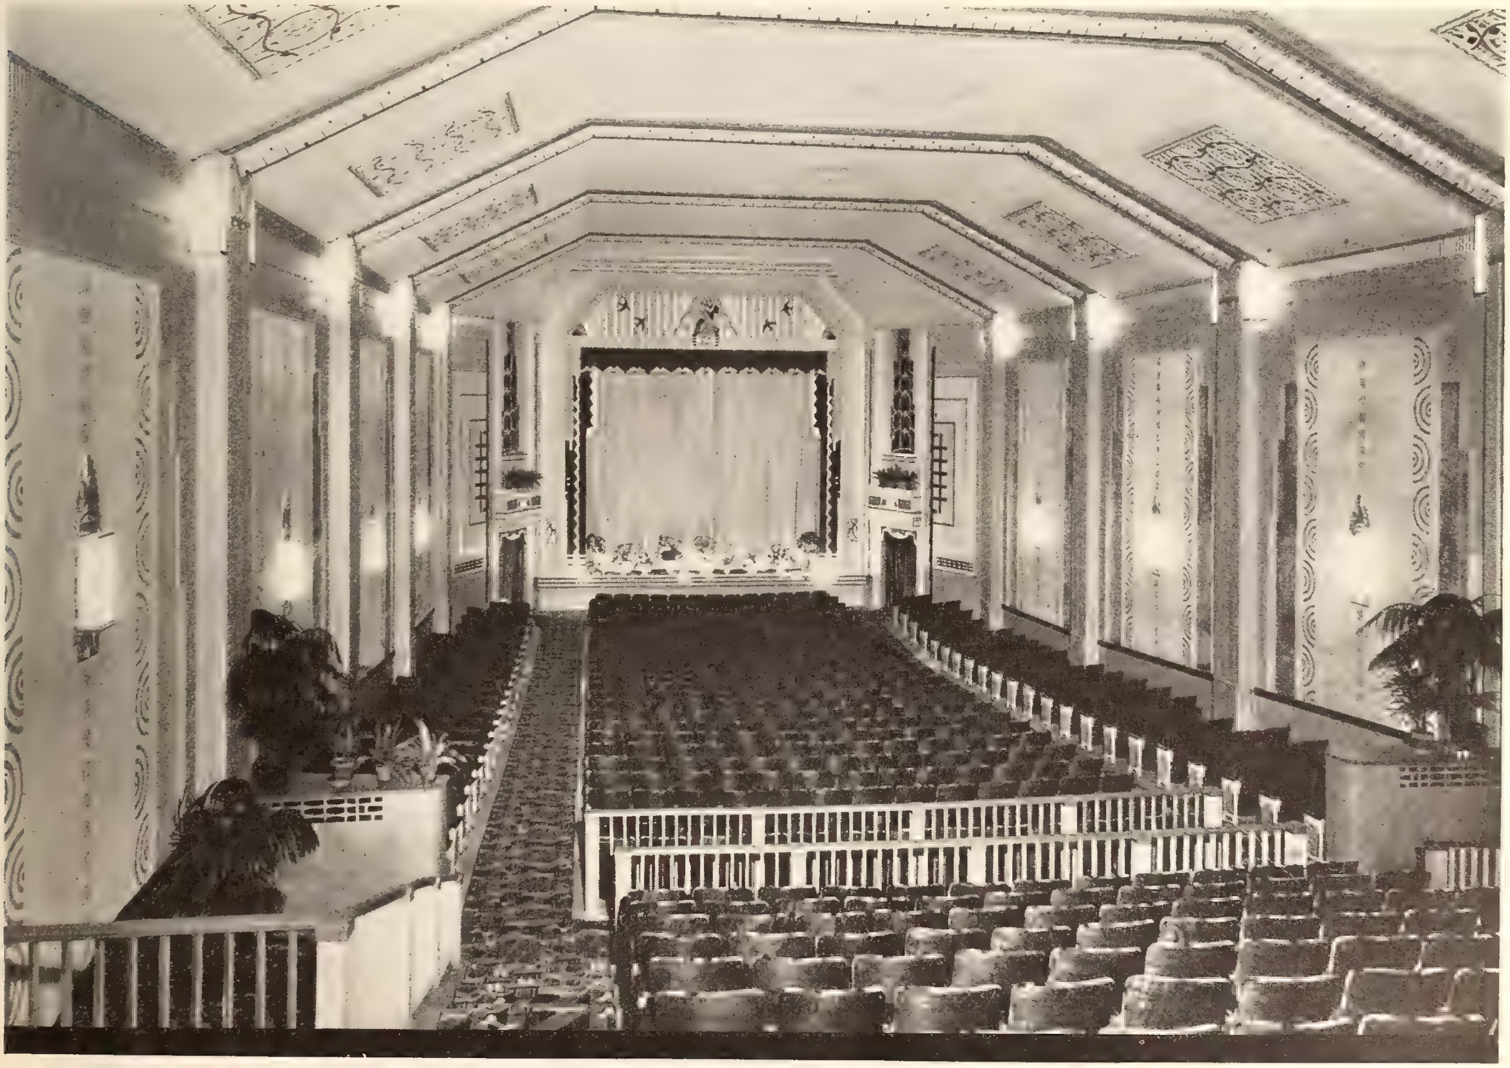
Vestibule. The floor is of terrazzo laid in a variegated pattern, while the walls and ceilings are painted and overlaid with stenciled designs. Lighting fixtures are of built-in type arranged along the walls, and are augmented by cove illumination.

Lobby. The floor is full-carpeted, while the walls and the ceiling are finished as noted in the vestibule. Lighting fixtures are of both chandelier and wall-bracket type, designed especially to harmonize with this design. A stainless steel railing, in addition to steps, effects a division between the lobby and the waiting foyer.

Foyer. As indicated, this is a small chamber off the middle of the inner wall of the lobby, serving as a general lounge for patrons waiting for seats or to meet friends. The walls are painted, the floor full-carpeted. Doors are trimmed in stainless steel and bear ornamental mirrors. In one wall is an illuminated niche containing a silvered urn. Furniture is strictly of simple modern design.

Auditorium. The general pattern of the auditorium has been determined with the proscenium arch as the focal point, as influenced by accommodation to the needs for acoustical treatment, which has been previously noted. The proscenium is ornamented in plaster, which has been picked out in color. The proscenium opening is 25 feet wide and 20 feet high. Proceeding back from this feature is an alternate series of pilasters and panels at the walls, and beams at the ceiling. The wall panels are of acoustic plaster, decorated with stencil designs, while the ceiling beams are of ordinary plaster, which also bear stenciled ornamentation. Lighting facilities are confined to the walls, the capitals of the pilasters each containing six colored lamps on the separate circuit arrangement referred to above. In addition there are wall brackets for regular house lighting. Grille work is in ornamental plaster.

The criticism invited by the extended length of the auditorium, must also consider the conditions enforced by the site, and the economy of space effected by the utilization of practically the full length of the building for seating, and of space beneath the stadium for other necessary accommodations of the modern theatre.



A general view of the auditorium, looking toward the proscenium arch. There is no stage proper, merely a platform for the screen and horns. The proscenium is 25 feet wide and 20 feet high.

MODERN SEATING AND CHAIR MAINTENANCE

VII–Seating Layout and Reseating

By LESLIE C. KINLEY

Discussing a basic and a peculiarly timely phase of the subject, introducing a new writer, a note upon whom will be found on Page 8

I
Layout

THE PROBLEM of selecting the proper seating arrangement, or layout, for the theatre is without question more important than the selecting of a particular style of chair. Regardless of the type or style of chair selected, its value as far as comfort and general appearance is concerned will be greatly reduced if the chairs are installed in a layout which does not take full advantage of all the benefits provided by the building. It should be remembered that all the patron's time, with the exception of a few minutes, is spent sitting in the chairs, and it is essential and certainly advantageous that they be seated comfortably, completely relaxed, and with a clear unobstructed view of the screen.

There should be no physical discomfort to them that would distract their attention from the stage and screen. Together with comfortable seating, it is vitally important to allow the patrons easy access to and from the seats. This point is too often not given the attention and thought it deserves. During the run of a feature that is drawing the crowds it is necessary that they be seated with the least possible confusion and annoyance to those already seated. Wide aisles and sufficient spacing between the rows will greatly assist the ushers, and contribute toward a favorable impression of the theatre.

The two styles of seating in common use now are the straight and radius layouts. A curved or radius layout is the arrangement in which the chair line usually corresponds with the curve of the stage or orchestral pit and standee rail. The straight layout is, as the name implies, the arrangement of chairs in a straight line across the house. This arrangement is not used now except in some small houses, where the curved layout would not be as practical. The straight layout does not provide as good sight as the curved layout. In a straight layout it is necessary to use the same size of chairs throughout in order to maintain straight aisles, except when the aisles are graduated.

The radius layout presents a far more pleasing arrangement and it improves all the faults of a straight layout, besides permitting a greater assortment of sizes, which factor will greatly improve the sight lines over those of the straight arrangement. With the curved layout, each chair is faced or pointed directly at the screen. Not only does the curved layout add to the general appearance of the theatre, but it also increases the seating capacity, for the curved seat line measures a longer distance between two given points than a straight line between the same points.

As for the chairs themselves, they are made (by most manufacturers, at least) in widths of 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22 inches, the width being the distance between the arm blocks. The chairs are also equipped with legs or standards made to fit a slope or incline of from one-half inch to two inches to the foot, and in most cases will take a slight bowl incline.

The number of seats to a section, width of aisles, spacing between rows, and location of cross-over aisles, is usually determined and governed by city or state laws. These laws or regulations, however, give the minimum measurements, and it is often more satisfactory to allow more space than is necessary under the law. Wherever possible the majority of the chairs should be 20 inches wide, with a few nineteens and very few eighteens.

In most cases it is necessary to use some eighteens in order to make the aisles uniform. Aisles should not be less than 3 feet in width, and the distance between the rows, measured from back to back of chairs, should be from 31 to 32 inches. This distance varies slightly, depending on the type of chair used.

It is well to remember that aisle widths are measured not from the flat surface of the wall, but from the farthest projecting point on the wall. If it is possible to eliminate a trim or wall decoration, this will give four or five inches additional seating space, which means that some of those 18- or 19-inch chairs can be increased to 19 or 20 inches, making them far more comfortable.

II
Reseating

THE NUMEROUS possibilities and opportunities of increasing box office receipts of houses in operation, by reseating is often not fully realized. Not only will reseating help materially to increase the theatre's profits, but it will enable it to win back those patrons and friends that have been lost because the house is not the attractive place it was when the equipment was new and comfortable. The competition from the new deluxe houses must be met, and reseating is one of the greatest aids in meeting this type of competition. If seats are old, with the upholstery torn and grimy, backs loose and the seat hinges noisy and loose, there is no doubt, but that they do more toward giving the house an untidy and general rundown appearance than any other equipment in the house.

Figure 1

Check over the costs for maintenance on chairs. See how much time the employes are spending in an effort to keep the chairs in working order. Have the springs in the seat cushions lost their tension, or has the padding in the seat been pushed back and pounded down, so that there is nothing left to rest on but a hard lump of padding? Test the seats yourself and see if you can sit through the entire show without twisting and shifting about in an attempt to find a comfortable, restful position. Are payments being made for hosiery and clothing that has been torn on splintered veneer back panels and seat bottoms?

Formerly, if a theatre owner decided to reseat, it was necessary to close the house for at least a week or ten days, and of course the loss of revenue caused by closing down increased the actual cost of the chairs. Now it is not necessary to lose one single night's receipts, or to be without the use of a single chair during the installation. While the reseating work is being performed it offers an opportunity to take care of many other parts of the house, which we will discuss briefly, after describing the procedure of a reseating installation.

First, some provision must be made to take care of the new seats when they arrive. If it is possible, they should be stored back-stage or somewhere on the main floor of the theatre. The actual installation work is done at night after the final show. The installation men take out only as many old seats in one evening as can be replaced by new ones during the same night. With this method of procedure, the exhibitor does not loose the use of any chairs while the change is being made. I suggest that contracts for this work be given a reputable seating company which has men with training and experience, together with the necessary equipment, to do this type of work in an efficient manner. They have made a study of seats and seating problems and are able to be of assistance to the owners, architects and builders.

Regardless of the type of house or its location, it is possible to reseat without disturbing the regular program. Consider, for example, the Paramount Publix Rialto theatre at Broadway and 42d Street, New York City. If ever a reseating job presented a serious problem, this was it, for the first show started as early as 9 o'clock in the morning, with the box office opening at 8:30, while the house ran a continuance performance until 1:30, sometimes 2:30 o'clock the following morning. This house was reseated, both orchestra and balcony, with absolutely no interruptions of any show or loss of the use of any seats.

In the Palace theatre, Jersey City, the orchestra was reseated, boxes removed, and an entire new floor and new sleepers installed without closing or losing the use of any chairs during the entire change. In this case it was also possible to increase the back to back spacing, give a wider aisle, and still increase the seating capacity of the house.

THE DRAWINGS here presented give a picture of the two types of seating layouts. Figure 1 represents the straight layout, and Figure 2 the curved or radius layout. The latter also gives a graphic idea of the possible improvements by reseating or by changing the seating arrangement of the chairs that are at present installed.

In Figure 1 the seating capacity is 680, with the majority of the chairs 19 inches wide. All aisles are minimum width, 3 feet, and the seats are spaced 30 inches back to back.

Figure 2 shows a floor plan of the same theatre with the boxes removed and the seats installed in a curved layout. Note the improvement as far as the general appearance of the house is concerned. The aisles have been widened, starting at 3 feet and gradually widening to 4 feet at the rear of the house. The rows have been spaced 32 inches apart, which distance does much to increase seating comfort. Furthermore, the chair widths have been increased, for the majority of seats are now 20 inches wide, and the chairs at the extreme ends of the rows in the side banks at the front have been given greatly improved sight lines.

What is more interesting to the theatre owner than the above is the fact that along with these changes for comfort and improved vision, there is an increase in seating of 16 chairs over the straight layout. If the back-to-back spacing had been kept at 30 inches, the seating capacity would have been increased by 56 more chairs, making a total increase of 72.

In this example it would be necessary to make some changes in the standee rail, and of course in the floor where the boxes were removed. This work is not always necessary, for almost every theatre has a different layout. The portion of the floor from which the boxes were removed should be graded to coincide with the orchestra floor at the same point. It is certain that with these changes and increase in seating capacity, the cost of the work would soon be absorbed by the extra income received from the additional chairs.

The cost of making other construction changes in the theatre can be greatly reduced, if the work, other than the seating, is taken care of while the house is being reseated. This is the owner's opportunity to make a real saving. If it is possible to replace the old veneer or plywood back chairs with a full-upholstered or inserted panel back chair, it will greatly improve the accoustical properties of the auditorium. It is not difficult to make the necessary repairs to the floor, or even lay a new floor while the reseating work is going on. If it is desirable, a permanent or temporary floor can be laid over the present orchestra pit, and the standee rail can be moved to increase or decrease the depth of the promenade. The carpet can be removed for cleaning, or the floor to be painted without interfering with the reseating work. These items can all be taken care of at the same time the chair changes are being made, together with the many other small jobs about the theatre.

Reseating, like many other changes in a theatre, will do much to increase the daily box office receipts. With the installation of new seats the house is made newer, more attractive, and besides this effect on new patrons, those who have drifted away to the competitor who gives them a roomy comfortable chair in which to sit, are drawn back. The showman should be sure that all the equipment in the theatre is being utilized to its fullest extent, and that it is working with the other units in an effort to bring in patrons.

It is the fundamental importance of seating that should be ever kept in mind, whether one is equipping a theatre for the first time, or substituting new for the old. And seating, as a factor in the success of the theatre, should always be considered in its two general aspects—as a single chair to be comfortable to the average patron and serviceable under hard usage; and as a large group of chairs, arranged to permit easy access to any chair and the adjacent aisle, and according to the specific demands of good vision at every point.

LOW PRICES: THE SHOWMAN'S OPPORTUNITY

By HARRY M. PAUL

What the theatre equipment market offers today to those who can take advantage of it, as told by one intimately familiar with current conditions

IT IS a common trade observation these days that motion picture theatres throughout the country, with but a few exceptions, are in a bad state of repair and appearance. Good showmanship has never before permitted such a general condition. Many houses are reported to be positively shabby and disreputable in appearance, hundreds of them struggling along with double- and triple-feature pictures that still do not get results hoped for. In fact, they seem to do little more than call the public's attention to the unattractive appearance and service of the house. Equipment has been allowed to run its heart out, with little if any, expense for repairs and maintenance. Furnishings have been allowed to become faded to abject shabbiness. Chairs have in many cases reached the point of dilapidation.

Small wonder some of the houses that were, a few years ago, the "talk of the town," are now ghosts of former grandeur—grim examples of hard times and neglect. Certainly the public is concerned with all this, and of course lack of patronage is responsible. But the same old public, while perhaps more frugal and penny-wise than it was a few years ago, is no less discriminating about where and how it takes its entertainment. Mr. and Mrs. Patron, and the kids, too, still like the grandeur, the trappings, and the this-and-that, which we used to call "atmosphere" around the theatre.

Of course, the protracted depression has been the cause of it all. Business at the box office has been none too good the past two years. Money has been tight, and the fear to let go of it on the part of those who possess it has made the exhibitor's path anything but smooth and easy to travel. As a matter of personal choice, no theatre owner in this enlightened age will allow his house to become run-down in appearance, and his equipment to disintegrate beyond the bounds of reasonably good judgment.

It is argued that there is always some good in everything that is bad. Perhaps out of the present situation will come something to cheer us and make the situation brighter. It is a certainty that the much discussed "hard times" will have eventually run their course. True, the process of recovery is slow, but the final outcome is inevitable. Theatres will continue to operate, and they will make money. The bright spot in the theatre man's sky right now is this: His dollar, if he has it or can get it, will do more for him today than it has been able to do for several years. It is unlikely that it will ever be able to accomplish more.

So the question is: When should those dollars be put to work on better looking, better equipped theatres? Sound reasoning says, now's the time.

Something will have to be done about it soon. Something, in fact, is being done right now by smart showmen. They are fixing up their houses today while building costs are low and good service is not hard to get. They're doing it now, while business is slack and the interruption of remodeling is less bothersome and expensive. Now is the time to put the old house in order. Optimism is a characteristic of all successful theatre men, and the successful ones are making ready for better business while the pessimists wonder and wait—for what? Who knows?

SOMETHING substantial towards encouraging a pickup at the box office can be effected right now with an expenditure of not more than a few hundred dollars for house improvements. The neglect or putting off of needed improvements may represent a loss of thousands of dollars to the exhibitor. Clever program stunts, super-exploitation, double- and triple-featuring, will not compensate for a theatre that has been allowed to get "rundown at the heel."

Construction costs—labor and raw materials—have toppled from their peaks and are right now at the bottom of the "U" curve. In all probability they are headed toward an upward swing. With the loosening of purse strings and more leniency on the part of bankers, the consequent reaction on demand for building materials undoubtedly will forestall any further abrupt recession in prices. Rather, it is to be expected that commodity and labor will go up instead of down.

What does this mean to the theatre man? How will it all affect the exhibitor who realizes the fact that his theatre is in need of repairs—if not actually a complete remodeling? Sum it all up—face conditions as they really are and the right conclusion is obvious. Unquestionably, now is the time to fix up, while it can still be done at depressed prices.

The service of good architects are available at extremely modest fees, and a willingness to serve that far surpasses the builder's fondest dreams. Contractors, with pencils sharpened to needle points, are waiting the call of the man who wants to transform his theatre into an inviting place of entertainment that will instantly appeal to the public.

Suppliers of materials, with plenty of their wares on hand, are ready and waiting for a chance at the job. Expert mechanics, and laborers as well, want work and they need it more now than they will later on, when general building activity is resumed.

Decorators have taken the cut, too. A perfect decorating job can be put through right now at a cost practically a third less than at this time last year. Real artists may be secured. Better quality workmanship and materials are at the disposal of the theatre owner, all along the line.

Ventilation, a timely subject right now with hot weather approaching, is another improvement that can be made at great saving at this time. The latest developments in air conditioning equipment are now within the cost range of every theatre. At an outlay of a few hundred dollars—on extremely liberal payment terms—any theatre can be equipped with cooling and ventilating apparatus.

Commodities and construction costs for fixing up the theatre front are now obtainable at most attractive prices. Attractive new marquees and signs can be installed right now at unbelievably low cost. Even though an exhibitor may not feel justified in purchasing a new sign and marquee, he can fix up the old one with new indestructible letters, new lamps and a new coat of paint for the entire front at an expenditure of relatively a few dollars.

Indeed, the most encouraging inducement to theatre conditioning at this time is the attractive price levels in on all equipment and furnishings. All the requirements—even the latest developments for better projection and sound reproduction—are now offered at most attractive prices and on most favorable terms.

A year or so ago a good upholstered theatre chair could not be had for less than around seven dollars and a half. Today, a better chair can be bought for in the neighborhood of five dollars. Theatre carpet prices have receded to the point where the exhibitor can no longer afford to get along without good floor coverings throughout the house. Lighting fixtures, decorations—practically every requirement for the rejuvenation and beautification of the theatre in every size and class—can now be had at rock-bottom figures. Small staple supply prices are down, too—reductions from levels of years ago ranging from 10% to 100% less.

Viewing the trend open-mindedly, it would seem that now is the time to take

Describing the latest addition to the circuit's provincial group—the Paramount in the industrial city of Leeds

By W. H. MOORING

FOR THEIR latest addition to the chain of provincial theatres operating openly under their banner, Paramount banked on the ornate. Judging the taste of the 500,000 population of Leeds, the big Yorkshire cloth center in which this new theatre was reared, the decision seems a sound one, for there is a drabness about such industrial centers as Leeds which requires some offsetting in those buildings which are dedicated to the purpose of providing the masses of working people with entertainment and relaxation.

The Paramount theatre in Leeds, like others of the Paramount circuit, was planned by Frank T. Verity and S. Beverley, FF.R.I.B.A., who from the beginning of their job seem to have forgotten all about architectural traditions in an attempt to supply Leeds with a theatre laying pretension to brightness and luxury. It seats 2,550, a capacity found on this side of the Atlantic to be the most advantageous in even the most densely populated districts. The exterior lacks distinction, except that naturally conferred upon it by its corner location. It has a plain stone frontage worked out in straight lines, and treated liberally with neon colored lighting and outlining decoration.

The interior, from the doors through to the proscenium, has vivid coloring, in which greens, bronzes, golds and silvers predominate. Immediately inside the front doors is a long narrow "crush hall" with a vestibule leading into the stall level, and an attractive double stairway running up on each side to the balcony level. This stairway provides the most attractive feature of the whole scheme, for it rises in semi-circular formation with a continuous balustrade, and gives direct access to a circular balcony, which in turn leads on either side to tea room accommodations.

From the head of the stairway, a half-screened view of the interior of the tea room is gained through a large window fronted with a lattice worked in modernistic wrought-metal work. Over the stairway is a richly decorated oval ceiling, from the center of which depends a huge crystal chandelier with opal glassware in modern style. Carpeting, both on the stairs and in the balcony lounge (to which they give access), is in richly colored and heavily designed axminster. The stair balustrades take up the same motif, which also characterizes the screen over the tea room windows.

The principal note in the auditorium decorations is provided by huge wall panels occupied by richly colored stencils, worked by hand, and describing many kinds of Neapolitan love scenes.

Mouldings above and around the panels are ornate in the extreme. They are splashed with multi-colored designs of modernistic character. The seating is rich and takes up the colored tracery of the carpeting in the backs only. The seats of the chairs are plain in design, but of varying colors.

In order to emphasize luxury, Paramount decided to make lavish provisions by way of retiring rooms, cosmetic salons and smoking lounges. No other Leeds theatre has any such provisions, and it is doubtful whether anything has been done to surpass this new theatre in this respect, in the provinces or even in London. Lighting has been partly on the exposed and partly on the concealed plan. There are enough visible units to give an effect of complete visible lighting facilities, but still more light is cast upon the colored wall surfaces by concealed fixtures.

A complete ventilation and air washing plant has been laid in, and emergency lighting has been provided for by the installation of a Keepalite system. There is a large Wurlitzer organ, and separate elevators for each unit in the large orchestra. For stage scenes, there has been installed 40 sets of counterweighting on the five-line principle.

The cost of the Paramount in Leeds was £250,000.

THE THEATRE AND THE LAW

By LEO T. PARKER

Interpreting for owner and manager the latest legal cases involving actions applying to theatres

IT HAS long been settled that theatre employes and laborers have a right to organize as labor unions to promote their welfare, safety and happiness. Moreover, prosecuting a strike is an exercise of the common law right of every citizen to pursue his calling whether of labor or business as he thinks necessary. This right, however, is limited by the exercise of the same right in all other citizens.

In other words, the right to conduct a lawful business is a property right, protected by the common law and guaranteed by the law. One who interferes with another's business, for the purpose of compelling present or prospective customers to withhold their patronage, is responsible for the harmful consequences, unless he shows a legal justification for such interference. In order to constitute such justification, it must appear not only that the interference was in pursuance of a lawful purpose, like trade competition, but that it was carried on by lawful means. For example, the circulation of libelous statements for the purpose of injuring the business of another is a malicious interference with that other's property rights, for which the wrongdoer or union is answerable in damages.

For illustration, in the late case of Olympia Operating Company v. Costello, (179 N. E. 804), it was shown that the Paramount Theatre at Springfield, Massachusetts, was opened in September, 1929. Members of the union were employed about a month before the opening to do the outside billposting and billing, and thereafter they were employed to do such advertising work. Shortly after the opening of the theatre a discussion arose between the theatre owner and the local union as to the right of the members "to change the lobby" which means the taking down of the advertising matter in the lobby of the theatre and the setting up of new advertising matter at times when the program of the theatre is changed.

Subsequently, the manager of the theatre decided that other theatre employes were capable of changing the advertising matter in the lobby and, therefore, had a meeting on March 13th at which it was decided to discharge union members of the advertising crew, not because of their membership in the union, but for the reason that other theatre employes were capable of performing the work of changing the advertising matter.

At the conclusion of the meeting notice was given the theatre owner's manager by the business agent of the union that the three members thereof would stop work at the end of two weeks. On the evening of the same day two members of the union began picketing in front of the Paramount Theatre by passing back and forth on the sidewalk, each with a printed placard or sign, attached to a stick, on which was printed the following: "Union Men and Women do Not Patronize This Theatre. This Theatre Unfair to the Billposters Union Affiliated with the Springfield Central Labor Union. Union Billposters Locked Out. Union Sympathizers Stay Away."

Suit was filed by the theatre owner, and the court was requested to grant an injunction against further picketing of the theatre. The counsel for the theatre owner argued that the picketing was unlawful because a statement printed on the sign carried by the picketers was untrue.

It is interesting to observe that the lower court granted an injunction restraining the union members from picketing the theatre, and the higher court upheld this verdict, saying:

"The statement on the placards carried on the sidewalk in front of the plaintiff's theatre 'Union Billposters Locked Out' was false. The defendants were not locked out. There was no evidence to substantiate that charge. . . . It follows that the false statement that union billposters were locked out was an unlawful means of conducting the strike. In effect it amounted to the boycotting of the plaintiff's (theatre owner's) business by the defendants causing it loss and was plainly unlawful."

Liability in Delay

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time whether or not a theatre owner is entitled to recover damages from an express company, or other common carrier, which fails to deliver films in time for being exhibited on the day advertised. This point of the law was discussed in the recent case of Pastime Amusement Company v. Southeastern Express Company, (162 S. E. 621).

The facts of this case are that a theatre owner advertised that a certain film would be exhibited on a specified date. The express company, which transported the films, failed to deliver the film in time for the advertised exhibition, and the theatre owner filed suit against the express company to recover $3,000 damages.

It was contended by the counsel for the express company that the latter could not be held liable for losses sustained by the theatre owner due to the failure to exhibit the film. However, the higher court held in favor of the theatre owner, and said:

"In our opinion . . . the complainant (theatre owner) clearly states a cause of action for actual and punitive damages."

Advertiser Liable on Theatre Contract

FREQUENTLY the higher courts have held advertisers liable for contracts made by an agent, such as a manager or a relative of the owner. It is common practice for managers and executives, clerks and salesmen to act under implied powers in buying and selling the merchandise dealt in by their several establishments. Thousands of purchases and sales are made daily and hourly by agents and employes without express and special mandate.

Therefore, it has been held that a person who conducts a mercantile business and who appoints another as representative or manager is liable for all contracts made by such representative within the scope of the business.

For instance, in Motion Picture Service v. Modica (139 So. 80), it was disclosed that the owner of a grocery store, finding business unprofitable, left the store in charge of his wife. He was gone for four months during which time a representative of a theatre corporation, engaged in the business of selling advertising which appears on motion picture theatre screens, called on the wife, who was in charge of the store, and prevailed upon her to sign a contract for the appearance on the screen of an advertisement for the grocery store. Upon the return of the store owner his attention was called to the fact that there was a large balance claimed to be due for the advertising service. The store owner refused to pay the bill on the contention that he had not given his wife authority to enter into contracts of this nature. However, the higher court held the store owner liable, and stated the following law:

"A party dealing with an agent, acting within the scope of his authority, is regarded as dealing with the principal. . . . It follows that the contract was reasonable, and that the wife had apparent authority to execute it. The husband must be held responsible for the contract made by her. . . . Our conclusion is that the wife in this case had the implied authority, as agent for her husband."

Validity of Lease Contract

IT IS WELL established law that every lease contract must be

THE NEW IMPORTANCE OF ACOUSTICS TO NATURAL SOUND

By F. C. SCHMID and S. K. WOLF

In which one learns not to be surprised when told that the majority of theatres which fail financially fall within the 25% needing acoustical rectification

AN EVER increasing demand for greater intelligibility and naturalness in sound picture reproduction has resulted in numerous advancements in the art. Perhaps the most noticeable improvement has been brought about through the extension of the range of recorded and reproduced frequencies.

To provide absolutely faithful reproduction requires that all audible frequencies of a sound be reproduced in their proper relative loudnesses. That is the ultimate goal towards which all efforts is extended. Until recently it was impracticable to reproduce sounds in the theatre above approximately 5,000 cycles per second. The frequency range above 5,000 cycles contributes greatly to naturalness, since many instruments as well as voices have harmonics above this limit. If these are suppressed, an appreciable change in the character of the sounds may be noted. A marked improvement resulting from the extension of the range is also apparent in the reproduction of common sounds, such as hand clapping, footsteps, and rustling of paper, which have in the past sounded far from natural.

The more closely a reproducing system approaches perfection, the more exacting are the requirements for a proper acoustic condition in the theatre. Obviously, if the characteristics of a theatre are such as to suppress the high frequencies, the benefits resulting from an extension of the range of reproduction will be destroyed. Few sound picture theatres have satisfactory characteristics. The majority of those that are satisfactory were orginally designed, or later corrected, in accordance with a plan derived from a detailed acoustical study of the requirements.

Of the 7,162 theatres analyzed by the acoustic consulting department of Electrical Research Products, Inc., prior to April 1, 1932, it was found that 61% were acoustically acceptable, that 14% could be considered excellent, and that 25% were badly in need of correction.

The acceptable class includes theatres that are capable of a noticeable degree of improvement, although the results being obtained are reasonably acceptable to the average listener. They may be termed as commercially satisfactory, considering the class of audience and neighborhood in which located. Considerable departure from the ideal condition is permissible, and those theatres which fall within the excellent class do not deviate from the ideal sufficiently to warrant any change in characteristics.

The remaining 25% of the theatres are badly in need of correction. They are either excessively reverberant, or they have such a large quantity of absorbing material as to produce a decided condition of "deadness." It is of interest to note that the majority of theatres that fail financially fall within this class.

ACOUSTICS is such a complex science that it is impossible to outline a general method of correction to assure a theatre having good hearing conditions. However, a few general suggestions and cautions may be of some help to the exhibitor. Most everyone is now familiar with the more common acoustical defects encountered, such as excessive reverberation, echo, interference, and non-uniform distribution. Of these, the most common is excessive reverberation. Obtaining good acoustics is not, as many people believe, just a problem of placing sufficient sound absorptive material into a theatre. It is entirely possible to get too much sound absorption, or to place it in the wrong location.

To determine the extent to which a theatre is reverberant requires that a complete analysis over the full frequency range be made. In the past, most analyses were based on computations at the one frequency of 512 cycles per second, and the theatre was corrected to the optimum reverberation time at that particular frequency. The remainder of the frequency spectrum was entirely disregarded. The analysis, for example, would indicate that 1,000 units of sound absorption were required to produce optimum conditions. The architect or exhibitor would then select the most economical material having a suitable appearance. If its absorption value at 512 cycles was 50%, he would specify 2,000 square feet, or if 25%, he would use 4,000 square feet to provide the 1,000 units. As a consequence, the frequency characteristic of the theatre depended on his choice of material, since no effort was made to determine the requirements of the theatre at any but the one frequency of 512 cycles.

There are available on the market a large variety of acoustic materials, nearly all of which have been tested by one or more laboratories. In the past, it has been customary to test materials at octave intervals from 128 to 4,096 cycles per second. This range is sufficient to furnish a general idea of the frequency characteristic. However, the improvement in reproduction brought about through the extension of the range of recorded and reproduced frequencies has made it desirable to extend the testing range one octave below and one above. This is now being done at one laboratory, and the practice will probably, in the near future, be adopted by others. While this is primarily of importance to the engineer, it is well for the layman to bear in mind that the selection of a material should depend upon its entire frequency characteristic rather than upon its absorption at one particular frequency.

BETTER THEATRES

The Backbone of Many Sales Programs

¶ In good times and bad you'll find the leading theatre equipment manufacturers represented in BETTER THEATRES' advertising pages. Their choice of BETTER THEATRES was a principal factor in attaining leadership. Their persistence maintains their front position.

¶ The type of business man who holds down sales costs by getting highest value for his sales-dollar makes BETTER THEATRES the backbone of his selling program. Dominant advertising in the dominant publication serving the theatre field is the one invariable rule he follows.

¶ We do not claim that it is the only way to supremacy, but the facts prove that unremitting advertising in BETTER THEATRES is the one indispensable requirement no matter what other methods may be used.

QP

The ability of materials to absorb sound is dependent upon the frequency, or musical pitch, of the sound. It is obvious that if the total absorption in an auditorium is greater at one portion of the frequency spectrum than at another, the composite sound heard by the ear will be relatively louder in that portion of the spectrum where the absorption is less. That is, if a material is used having high absorption in the range of the piccolos, and low absorption in the range of the cellos, a duet by these instruments would sound unnatural, as the cellos would be louder relative to the piccolos than intended.

Most acoustical materials, such as plasters, mineral tiles and hair felts, are considerably more efficient as absorbents of high than of low frequencies. Building boards, if mounnted so that there is evidence of diaphragm action, tend to absorb relatively greater amounts of low frequency energy. Draping materials, such as velour, monk's cloth and damask, if used in large quantities, have an appreciable effect in reducing the "highs," and have little effect in reducing the "lows." However, if these fabrics are used as coverings for certain types of acoustical materials, a very desirable characteristic can be obtained from their combination. Interesting data have recently been obtained showing the effect of stretching several layers of fabric at various distances from the surfaces of absorbing materials. The audience, seats and carpet constitute the remainder of the absorbing mediums found in theatres.

IT CAN BE appreciated from a consideration of the number of variables, that few theatres have similar characteristics, although many are identical at one particular frequency. Fortunately, most furnishings common to theatres have been tested for sound absorption, and the acoustical engineer is able to determine the time of reverberation at a number of frequencies. While the limits in which reverberation time may lie and still produce acceptable conditions are rather wide, there is, nevertheless, a very strictly defined optimum value for each size of auditorium and each frequency.

By comparing the number of units of absorption present, with the number required to produce optimum conditions, the engineer is able to determine the requirements. The analysis of one theatre may show it to be exceedingly "dead" at the high end of the frequency spectrum, whereas the analysis of a similar-sized house, with different interior furnishings, may show just the opposite condition. They both may require the same number of units at 512 cycles; however, consideration of the units required at other frequencies will indicate that two entirely different materials will be required for correction.

After the engineer has determined the type and amount of material to use, he must then decide upon its location. The location of treatment for most effectively reducing reverberation time is not arrived at by placing it on the most convenient surfaces, but rather by carefully studying the proportions of the auditorium and locating

Have Your Screen Resurfaced by the SCHACHT PROCESS

Inexpensive and quick, this resurfacing method brings back the newness to oxidized and discolored sound screens. Two years of laboratory tests and more than 325 theatre applications have proved the Schacht Process successful no matter what condition the treated screen was in. The new surface is extremely durable. It can be applied anywhere in the United States and Canada with no interruption to performances.

Brilliant pictures, with clear outlines, are easier on the eyes and more enjoyable. Your patrons will show their appreciation of the Schacht Process at your box office. Try it.

it where it will be most advantageous in reducing undesirable reflections. Generally, it is preferable to install treatment toward the rear of the theatre, although in houses of irregular shape and unusual proportions, an altogether different procedure may be required. Balcony houses also differ greatly from single floor houses in their method of treatment. It may, therefore, be stated that the exact location for best results various in each particular case.

The acoustical engineer is also very much concerned in reduction of noise originating in the theatre or entering from the outside. Interfering noise has two effects on the hearing of sound. One is the psychological factor of disturbance or annoyance, which distracts the attention of the listener. The other is the physiological effects upon the ear, which more or less temporarily deafens the auditor. This latter effect is generally referred to as "masking," and in the presence of noise, a greater degree of loudness of the original sound is required for equal articulation or ability to understand.

All reverberation computations are based on the assumption that the reproducer system will be operated at a normal level of loudness. If the volume must be increased to overcome interfering noise, the apparent effect of reverberation will also be increased and intelligibility will be decreased. Noise, therefore, must be kept to such low levels as not to require an undue increase in loudness for good hearing.

External noises should be shielded as well as possible from entrance to the theatre. The more prominent internal noises usually have their sources at the projection room, or at the ventilating and heating systems. Frequently, reduction of noise to an appreciable extent requires engineering study. Any expenditures involved in this direction will, in the long run, be found highly economical, since too much stress cannot be placed on the harmful effect of interfering noises on the quality of reproduction in the theatre.

The problem of acoustical correction and noise reduction is sufficiently complex in nature and important in results to warrant careful consideration without dependence purely on chance to attain that which actually requires intensive study of the individual case. Any problems that arise should be handled in co-operation with unbiased acoustic consultants to insure their most effective and economical solution.

F H Richardson

ACTION OF THE ELECTRICAL CONDENSER

I BELIEVE there is no one thing I have received so many inquiries about in connection with sound equipment, as electrical condensers. The action of these very simple devices seems to puzzle many men who are otherwise very well posted on sound equipment. Recently, through the kindness of Erpi, I got hold of a government publication put out by the Bureau of Standards, which is as clear as it is authoritative.

(The publication in question is entitled "The Principles Underlying Radio Communication." It is radio communication No. 40, and may be had, should any one desire it, by remitting the sum of one dollar to the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.)

Using the article cited and its illustrations as a basis, I shall try to explain condenser action in a manner which should, I believe, make it clear even to the apprentice.

Electrical action may often be made very plain by comparing it to the action of water in a water system. This makes it the more easy to understand for the reason that, whereas electricity is invisible, cannot be felt and may only be studied through its action, water action may be actually watched. We know what water is. We can see it, feel of it, weigh it and know just about exactly what it will do under any given set of circumstances.

Examining Figure 1, we see that if the pipes be filled with water and pump P started, valve V being open, we shall have a continuous flow of water in one direction equal to the full capacity of the pump. We also understand that if the valve be partly closed, we shall still have a continuous flow of water in one direction, but the amount of the flow will be reduced in proportion to the amount of closure of the valve, which, from the electrical viewpoint, represents resistance. A glance at Figure 2, shows us the exact similarity of action of the water and electric circuits, their motive power and resistance.

If we shove the resistance contact to the top (open the water valve), we shall have an electric flow in one direction equal to the full capacity of the battery. As we pull the resistance contact down (cut in resistance—close the water valve), we cut down the flow of current (which has been fully understood by all of you for a long while).

And now let us consider the condenser. In sound equipment it is often necessary to prevent all flow of direct current, even in the form of stray currents, at the same time offering no obstruction to full, free alternating current action. For this purpose, the electrical condenser functions perfectly. Let us see why.

Examining Figure 3, we find a closed circuit operated by a pump plunger. There is neither inlet nor outlet, but a tank of some size is connected into the system, and in the center of the tank is clamped an elastic diaphragm which prevents the passage of any water from one end of the tank to the other. In other words, this diaphragm, which is, we will assume, of very elastic, thin rubber, entirely separates one end of the system from the other.

Now if we set the pump plunger in central position and fill both ends of the cylinder, pipes and tank with water, and shove the plunger upward, the water will be forced into the upper end of the tank, depressing the elastic diaphragm, while at the same time an exactly equal amount of water will be drawn out of the lower end of the tank and into the pump cylinder. If we then pull the plunger downward, the action will be reversed, and if the movement of the plunger be continued, we shall, in fact, set up an alternating current of water.

And now let us examine the electrical condenser, which consists of two "plates" thoroughly but very thinly insulated from each other. The condenser is installed by cutting one of the wires of a circuit and connecting one "plate" of the condenser to one of the ends of the severed wire, and the other "plate" to the other end.

Since the two plates so connected are, as I have said, insulated from each other, it follows that the circuit is broken, insofar as has to do with any flow of current around the circuit. In fact no d.c. can possibly get through.

Fig. 3

"Well," you ask, "if the circuit is actually broken, how is it possible for a.c. to operate?"

Aha (as the villain says), we shall see!

As you know, a.c. flows (we will consider 60-cycle current) 1/120 of a second, in one direction, then, reversing, 1/120 of a second in the other direction. Let us name our condenser plates A and B. During one fourth of one cycle, the current flows toward one of the condenser plates—say, Plate A. When the condenser was installed, the strength of the current flowing in that circuit was considered, and a condenser with plates of sufficient size to absorb or store the amount of energy contained in one fourth of a cycle, was selected. During the time the current flows toward Plate A, that plate has the capacity to, and actually does, absorb or store up all the power contained in that period of current flow. That amount of power is then actually stored in that plate.

Plate B stores power, while at the same time Plate A begins to discharge current into the circuit. In other words, the condenser plates do electrically exactly what the rubber diaphragm does in the pump system. It actually permits alternating current to "flow" in a broken circuit.

A LETTER FROM SASKATCHEWAN

WALTER R. PYLE, projectionist of the Olympia theatre in Assinibola, Sask., writes:

"Dear Dad Richardson: I call you that because you certainly are 'Dad' to us small town projectionists. You have stimulated us to a greater extent than any one other thing I know of, and we do our darndest because we know you would not be proud of us if we did sloppy work. I am in charge of projection here, with a Motiograph Deluxe, RCA sound, and Hertner Transverter. I suppose I am not yet really a projectionist, but I am certainly striving to be one.

"Our theatre is in a town of 1,200, and since the closest city is 80 miles away, you will understand that we must rely on our own ability and ingenuity to keep things in order. I check the programs upon arrival and can certainly endorse Brother Jeffres regarding the condition of prints. Paramount prints are a pleasure to work with, but the others—well, I have often spent fully 20 minutes trying to remove blobs, scratches, holes and gosh-only-knows-what, from the end of each reel. Why can not, and why don't, all the boys figure there pickup speed and thread accordingly? Given a Paramount print, I defy any detection of our changeovers, but the others are so badly cut up that we are forced to dot our ends with a green pencil, which is thoroughly rubbed off before we ship out.

"We rehearse for volume, also for footage and for changeover. We keep a record of the same.

"Did any of you ever try to fade out a Universal newsreel and fade in a comedy when only one foot of the end remains on the Universal? It's a lovely job! All our Fox News have a nice music ending, but all Universals play about two bards and then pop. What can we do?

"The laws here compel two men on duty, so we never double reels up. The first-class examination here is plenty tough, but if anyone really studies your articles and the Bluebooks, as I have done, or at least tried to do, they can get through with flying colors. The examination makes you feel a bit proud of your first-class license, because it requires plenty of good hard study to get it.

"Our Saskatchewan examining board is very fair and just. Their examining room is equipped with Powers and Simplex projector, also a Holmes portable projector, and a Hertner Transverter. After a very rigid examination on theory, the applicant is given a practical examination based upon the projectors.

"And now for the real object of my letter: I have received so many valuable tips from our department that I feel I owe you one, only I am not certain what you will think of it. We have a cement projection room floor, and although it is well surfaced, it nevertheless gives off dust. Friend Boss suggested water-glass, such as is used in preserving eggs. Mix it 15 parts water to one part water-glass and apply to floor with an ordinary brush. It certainly makes a nice, inexpensive job. Leaves a pleasing glazed surface. Our light beam from the condenser to the aperture is now perfectly clean, meaning

The Man Who Heads the I. A.

SOME MONTHS ago William C. Elliott was, by unanimous choice of the executive board, raised to the office of president of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., William Canavan having resigned. Those familiar with the inner workings of the organization know that William C. Elliott thus took upon himself several knotty problems of great importance to every member. For example: The West Coast Studio situation. The chain theatre snarl. The independent situation. And the jurisdictional tangle. All of these difficlties are in large measure brought into existence by the present depression.

As though this were not enough and to spare, President Elliott has been called upon to wrestle with a dual organization problem, which has not as yet been solved by any manner of means.

I believe the thousands of members over this country and Canada, as well as men in England, Australia and New Zealand, would like to know something about Brother Elliott. I shall therefore attempt to provide something of an introduction.

A half-century back in the mists of time, a wee Southland babe came into the world down near Lexington, Ky. It is that youngster, now 50, who is president of one of the greatest labor organizations in the world, beloved by his fellow officers and all those who know him. The bluegrass regions of Kentucky has been famed for its horses, but it should as well be noted for its many splendid men. Such men as Elliott.

At the age of 13, while still attending school, the lad Elliott started work in the Grand Opera House in Cincinnati as property clearer. He remained in that city, working in various theatres, until he finally was admitted to membership in the Cincinnati stage employes' local union.

In 1904, beguiled by the charms of travel, he joined the Dockstadter's Minstrels in the capacity of property man, in which position he remained for about one year. In 1905 he went with the B. C. Whitney "Isle of Spice" troup (which, incidentally, put on one of the best musical shows of that day). With this company Elliott held the position of electrician. He remained with the Whitney company for three years, though he was not always with the same production.

He was on the road for 20 years, associated with some of the best amusement enterprises and players the stage has ever known. Among these were the Shuberts, Erlanger, Maude Adams, Fortham, Richard Mansfield, William A. Brady and Savage. During all these years he was in close contact with the most brilliant of theatrical people of that age.

After 20 years of this work, Elliott returned to Cincinnati, where he acted as electrician in many theatres until in 1922, he was appointed fifth vice-president of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators, by Charles Shea, then international president of the organization.

I have had several conferences with President Elliott since his elevation. He impresses one as an understanding, kindly, courteous man, as well as a sincere and capable union officer. It is unquestionably his earnest desire to give the very best service possible to the organization.

Incidentally, President Elliott has authorized me to make what he said would be his first public announcement that he would be a candidate for re-election.

The I. A. should take into very serious consideration a number of things when it comes to a matter of electing a chief executive. First, the chief executive who does not know the inner workings of the labor movement is automatically and badly hampered. Second, it is highly important that the president be thoroughly familiar with the inner workings of the organization, especially insofar as concerns the workings of the president's office. To elect an inexperienced man, particularly at this time, would be to invite calamity. Third, the chief executive must be a man in whom the membership will have confidence—a man it has reason to believe is honest and capable.

that the sound mechanism and film is not suffering from the ravages of dust from the cement.

"In closing let me most sincerely thank you again for your interest and instructions to us small town chaps. I think you have induced some of them to beat their big city brothers in excellence of sound, screen results and equipment maintenance."

As to the water-glass treatment for floors, that was recommended in this department many years ago, though I do not just know what the proportions then recommended may have been. I thank Brother Pyle for again bringing the matter up. It provides a good, cheap cement floor treatment. Of course, except in localities where some fool law prohibits it, a covering of battle-ship linoleum or cork tiling is best, but they—especially the latter—are relatively expensive.

I have printed Brother Pyle's remarks concerning the conditions of the different makes of film, to the end that producers may read them and come to an understanding of the fact that such reports are being received from time to time from all over the country. It is, in my 'umble opinion, perfectly foolish for any producer, by negligence in exchange practice, to permit his products to get that kind of a black eye in the minds of theatre managers and projectionists.

THE RESURFACING OF SCREENS

FROM an exhibitor in Ohio comes this letter: "Our screen was soiled when purchased second-hand. We have had it for a year now and it looks quite bad during a cartoon or snow scene. We have inquired about having it gone over, which would cost about $27. Also, we are told that this is not very satisfactory, as the soiled parts would work their way through. A new screen would cost around $106. What would you advise?"

I am not advised as to the kind of screen, what sort of a base the surface is carried on, what kind of a surface it is, what sort of a discoloration exists, or anything which might really help in deciding whether or not refinishing at the cost named would be a promising experiment. I therefore can only answer such an inquiry very broadly.

In this case we have a replacement cost of $106. The refinishing cost would be approximately one fourth of that sum. If the screen is a perforated one (I am not advised as to that), there is only one best way to re-surface, and that is by means of a spray and a suitable mixture. Such a surface, of course, may be coated with a preparation, provided a vacuum cleaner is run over the back side as the painting progresses, to clean out the holes. This, of course, can only be accomplished while the coating solution is wet.

Personally, I believe if I were in the place of this exhibitor I would (provided water color will adhere to the surface) coat the screen with carefully prepared white calcimine, using a vacuum cleaner (dust bag removed) behind during the process. Or if water color will not adhere, I would substitute a carefuly prepared, rather thin, white paint. Of course, it is true this would be in the nature of an experiment, but I see no reason why it would not work out all right, and if it did not prove entirely satisfactory, at least the cost of the experiment would not be great.

Through all these years I have never changed my opinion. Calcimine or white paint make a most excellent screen surface. It is true that either may be slightly exceeded in efficiency by some of the newer, costly surfaces, but the fact remains that in the end the exeess would not amount to much, and the problem of resurfacing (and resurfacing will eventually have to be done) can be overcome at a very low cost with the aid of paint and a vacuum cleaner.

SPROCKET IDLER ROLLERS

GILBERT LA POINT of Westboro, Mass., writes, "Here's another contribution to our department, this time with regard to those 'dinky little idlers' referred to on Page 31, January issue of BETTER THEATRES. I use the following method with gratifying results, to keep sprocket idlers rotating:

"First, clean the roller with a tooth brush which has been dipped in kerosene. This will remove all surface emulsion deposit if the brush be held to the roller with one hand, and the roller be roted with the other. Next, mix a solution of Artic Auto Oil with a little kerosene. I use nine parts of oil to one part of kerosene. The rollers should be lubricated at both ends as well as through the hole, after which revolve the roller a few times to work the oil inside, then carefully wipe off all surface oil. If this is done twice a week, the roller will continue to turn indefinitely. This same lubricant may be used on the feed valve rollers with good results."

The foregoing is submitted to projectionists without comment, except to say that I see no reason why it should not be quite effective if properly carried out. Remember, however, that the oil must be, as Friend La Point has said, well worked in and all surface oil wiped off—not much of a job twice a week, though in a 12-hours-a-day house I assume that it should be done at least every other day.

Many thanks for the suggestion, Friend La Point.

THE EFFECT OF AGE ON EYES

AT A MEETING of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, president, was present, and in the course of a discussion on screen illumination he made this statement:

"The age of any individual in an audience has considerable to do with screen brightness, so far as that individual is concerned."

Doctor Goldsmith brought out the fact that the average diameter of the pupil of the eye at the age of 20, is 4.75 mm., whereas at the age of 80, it is only 2.3 mm. The eyes of an 80-year-old person therefore admits only approximately 24% of the total available light, as compared with a person 20 years of age.

Frankly, to me that is an entirely new angle to the exceedingly difficult problem of screen illumination. Is there no end to the difficulties to be encountered when one attempts to find out what screen illumination ought to be in theatres? According to this, it seems that we should have to seat the old folks down front, retaining the rear seats for the younger generation!

I might add, as evidence of the activity of the Projection Practice Committee, that the report of the last meeting covers five typewritten pages, and all good stuff, too.

CHANGE-OVER SIGNALS

I AM a bit puzzled. J. E. Hogue, projectionist of the Kerby theatre, in Houston, Tex., is using a 6-volt transformer and a bit of tinfoil glued to the edge of the film for a changeover signal. He wants to know if I have knowledge of any metallic paint which might be substituted for the foil, saying that years ago, in Memphis, Tenn., they did use some sort of quick-drying paint or lacquer for the purpose.

After explaining that I was reluctant to supply such information now that the Standard Release Print has come, believing we should respect it and encourage all projectionists to discard all other changeover signals, I made some suggestions to Brother Hogue by mail. However, while I do hold that the Standard Release Print should be respected, and every possible effort made to encourage all projectionists to depend upon it so far as possible, still there is that so far as possible to be reckoned with.

For many reasons the Standard Release Print cannot be relied upon wholly by all projectionists. No use denying or sidestepping that fact. The S. R. print is not always made properly visible to the projectionist in the first place, and beyond any question of a doubt many projectionists are receiving S. R. prints badly mutiliated, or even almost entirely missing, under which condition it is nonsense to expect them to be used.

What then is the answer? I would welcome discussion on this point. The changeover signal used by Brother Hogue is harmless, but few theatres have or ever will have the equipment necessary for its use, hence it is of no value for general use.

FROM AN OLD TIMER

R. D. SPOONTS, of Old Hickory, Tenn., brings the long-ago vividly before the mind's eye in the following friendly letter. It has not much to do with projection, but I am sure thousands of old-timers will enjoy it. He says:

"Dear Old Friend: This is a letter from one old-timer to anoter, though I must say you are only old in the matter of years. You are not old in what you have done and are doing for the good of the motion picture projectionist and the business as a whole. I have been reading your writings for the past 20 years. Some will say, 'Gosh, he is a granddad!' Well, I am, though not an old one in the matter of years and I want to say to the younger generation in the profession that in all these years there has been no man in the business that has done so much, or is doing so much for them as their friend, F. H. Richardson. After some of the younger blood has had the years of experience that you and I have had, Richardson, they will realize that fact.

"I often wonder what some of the younger men would do if they had to put up with what you and I did when we were helping to nurse the business 25 years ago, in the days of the Edison and Lubin near-projectors with wooden frames, the Opteograph, the Standard! And how happy we were when finally the Powers-5 came! That No. 5 certainly seemed then to be the very last word in projectors.

"If some of the projectionists of today had the experience you, I and the other gray-beards acquired in the 'University of Hard Knocks,' they would perhaps better appreciate what they have today. They would perhaps realize how much you have given them and are giving them out of your past experience. Well, I remember one Eastern city where once I had only one workable coil in my rheostat, and another where I was obliged to build a rheostat out of a whisky barrel, water, salt and carbons. Those were the days when we got real experience. Does this bring back memories of long ago, Friend Richardson?

"Remember how we used to hang a bag over the balcony edge, or if there was no balcony, then off the kitchen table, and run the film into it? And the trouble we sometimes had in finding the end of the film when we let it get away from us? In those days the projection room was just big enough to crowd a projector and a rewind bench into, plus an 'operator,' provided he was not too fat.

"Well, Rich, those days are gone, never to return. They are now only memories, praise the Lord, though after all it is pleasant now to be able to pull those dusty pictures out of their cubby holes somewhere in the brain and, perhaps with a sigh, look them over once in awhile.

"I am now working in a city of about 12,000, in a theatre that cost $120,000 The projection room is 15 feet wide by 30 feet long. From the floor to ceiling is 8 feet 6 inches. There is nothing in the room but two Super-Simplex rear shutter projectors, W. E. non-synchronous equipment, and W. E. system with 41, 42 and 43-A amplifiers, plus an output control panel. We have Peerless reflector arc light sources with two motor generators located downstairs.

"At the rear of the room is another which has the emergency battery rack for

How to Reach the Theatre Market

A straight line is still the shortest distance between seller and buyer. BETTER THEATRES is that straight line in the motion picture business. Nearly everyone with buying authority in the field is a reader. So are those without authority but with advisory influence. Reach them and you have gone straight to all of your market.

Advertising in BETTER THEATRES is the most economical as well as the most direct route from you to your customer. With one advertisement you reach the whole of your market. Not a prospect is missed. Not a cent is wasted.

Detailed and audited figures to prove these statements will be sent upon request. Address:

the house lighting system. Adjoining this is still another room 6x8 feet in size, containing the film cabinet and work table, and also a metal stand with automatic rewind. A fourth room contains toilet and wash basin with hot and cold water and a towel container that is kept supplied by the janitor.

"Best of all, though, are the people I work for, because they think I know my business and there is nothing I ask for that I do not get. Just to show you the kind of people they are, I asked for a set of your Bluebooks of Projection, and the company is sending a requisition for the same.

"I have overcome the bad habit that the drive on the W. E. system has of pumping oil, and if you would care to know more about this, I will write you later explaining how it is done.

"Oh, yes, by the way—when your first handbook came out I was a member of the Peoria, Ill., local, which body purchased a copy for each of its members.

"When are we going to get films mounted on 2,000-foot reels? From the standpoint of saving film that is now used for leaders, and from the cost of replacements due to doubling up, it seems to me the cost of new shipping boxes and reels would be more than offset during the first year."

Well, that is a long letter, but it is, I believe, a very interesting one. Only the genuine old-timer can look back upon the early days, comparing them with the present. (Friend Spoonts need not swell up and pop off his vest buttons. I am a granddad, too—six of em! Laugh that off!)

I read your comment about nursing the business and can testify that that is precisely what we were doing 25 years ago. Some of the newer ones may occasionally forget the fact that if we old-timers had not attended to that nursing 25 years ago, they would not themselves be in the motion picture industry, because in all human probability there would not today be any such industry.

Twenty-five years ago a very large majority of those in the business did not believe it would become permanent. I happened to be one who did, and I worked with that idea and end in view.

To the present day projectionist, doubtless such a tale of a water rheostat seems the "bunk." I, myself, remember how at one time, about 25 years ago, I was sent out to a village to put on a show for a school and a church combined. I got there only to discover they had not sent a rheostat. Fortunately I was able to dig up a lot of copper wire, which I hooked to the top strand of a barbed-wire fence, moving the wires gradually closer together until I got the current I wanted. I got along very well, the only trouble being that one fence post burned up. . . . Yes. I remember the old gunnysack "take-up" very well indeed, and I can tell you a few yarns about that, too!

Your outfit sounds good, except for one thing: If you have a motor-generator set and storage batteries are in the same room, you had better keep it mighty well ventilated, since otherwise the acid fumes eventually will attack the insulation of the motor-generator and you may, and probably will, have trouble.

We will be very glad to hear of the remedy for oil pumping.

LARGE VERSUS SMALL PICTURE

THIS IS a subject which has been dealt with, lo, these many times. It will probably be dealt with many times again, for it is of very real importance from the box office angle, and one of which there is not as yet much apprehension. There are still exhibitors and managers who believe in the huge picture, though there number apparently is decreasing.

There are numerous and very obvious objections to the huge screen image, or even to a very large one. There are, it seems to me, some simple rules which may be easily applied, save in theatres having extreme viewing distances. In their cases I believe no rules may be applied. Theirs is purely a matter for intelligent compromise.

Anyone at all familiar with the conditions imposed upon projection as it now is, can hardly fail to understand the difficulty of adequately illuminating a large picture and illuminating it evenly all over its surface. It is an attempt to pass an enormous amount of light through a small aperture and distribute it evenly over a relatively great amount of space, and that is a difficult, if not an impossible, thing to do. Moreover, this difficulty is considerably enhanced when we deal with sound-on-films, since the projector aperture is then still further reduced.

A screen 22 feet wide by 16 feet, 8 inches high contains 363 square feet, or 152,272 square inches, therefore if the film photograph were one square inch in area, it would require that number of them to cover its surface. But the sound-on-film has really only something like .75 of a square inch of area, hence it would require approximately 165,000 of them to cover a 22x16.5-foot screen. In other words, the magnification is in that proportion.

Let us look at it from another angle also: A 22-foot-wide screen is 22x12, or 164 inches wide. If, then, the film picture were exactly one inch wide, it follows that any fault in the film photograph would be 164 times as wide upon such a screen as it was in the film photograph itself. Looking at the matter from this viewpoint, we may readily see what an effect increasing the size of the screen image has upon making visible to the audience all defects there may be in the film photograph. And, marvelous as is the photography of today as applies to motion pictures, it is hardly to be expected that it is without defects. Every print received for projection contains photographic defects. Some contain many of them. If the magnification be not so great, these defects are not so visible upon the screen, and certainly that is something to be desired.

Another important thing which has important bearing upon picture size, is the fact that graininess visibility increases directly with increased magnification. Many productions which, if projected as a 16-foot picture, would show little if any signs of graininess, but would have an enormous amount of it were the screen image increased to 22 feet wide.

It must be also considered that the small picture is much more beautiful and much more comfortable to the eyes of those occupying the front half of the theatre than is the larger one. From the front half of the theatre the large picture looks more or less "coarse," unless the screen can be placed at the back of a deep stage, which adds to the distance of the screen from the rear seats and thus forces over-illumination insofar as concerns the front part of the theatre. It also adds to the difficulties of sound projection. It is a complicated and very difficult thing, all right, no matter how it be viewed.

"Well," you ask, "what then should be the size of the screen image?"

In answering that question I can only set forth my own individual impressions and opinions. There are several points to be considered, each one of which has an important bearing when one must decide what the size of the picture should be in any particular theatre. In fact, in some ways this question involves the planning of and construction of theatres. If a theatre auditorium have great depth, either the screen image must be very large or the screen must be very brilliantly illuminated if the picture details are to be comfortably visible from the rear seats. And there lies the great difficulty, for it automatically follows that either a huge picture size, or a highly brilliant screen illumination, will not set up the best condition in the front half of the theatre. Visibility as applies to the screen image is the product of two things; namely, picture area and screen brightness. Any increase in either the area or brightness makes the picture more visible from a great distance, and harder on the eyes at less distance.

We now have a few large theatres in which the maximum viewing distance is such that it is impractical to use anything less than a 20- or 22-foot screen image, except that the screen illumination be so brilliant that every bright spot in the picture constitutes more or less of a large glare spot to the eyes of those seated in the front portion of the auditorium.

As a matter of fact, in auditoriums where the maximum viewing distance is as high as from 120 to 150 feet, even the 22-foot picture must be pretty brilliantly illuminated if it is to be comfortably visible from the rear seats, and unless it be comfortable from those seats, they are not desirable seats.

It would seem that a 22-foot picture ought to be about the absolute limit in size, so long as the present projector aperture dimensions are retained. It also would seem reasonable that theatre auditoriums should not have a maximum viewing distance greater than will enable those in the rear seats to view the picture in comfort without necessitating sufficient screen illumination to set up objectionable eye strain for those down front.

INTELLIGENCE AND CO-OPERATION

AS YOU ALL know, I am now engaged in making measurements of screen illumination in various theatres. In this work I have met with courtesy and kindness from all projectionists, but in one it was something even more than this. I visited the projection room of this theatre the day before the measurements were to be made, finding two men on duty. The man in charge (or presumably he was in charge during the absence of the chief projectionist) was an energetic, clean-cut gentleman, and I mean exactly that. It was a pleasure to talk to him. A dozen words had not been said before I concluded he was really interested in his profession. Soon I came to understand that he studied and understood it.

I explained what I would want the next morning. He advised me that the house opened at 10 o'clock, but that he and the other projectionist then on duty came on duty at 9:30. I asked that he be just a few moments early if he would, as the time would be short. However, I did not get there myself until one minute after 9:30, and the white light went on the screen, ready for me, just as I entered. There was no delay. He was on the job, ready and waiting to co-operate until the job was finished shortly before 10 o'clock.

What I am getting at is this: There was something to be done for the good of projection (or we hope it will work out that way, anyhow), and this man was eager and willing to do everything possible to help. He, I discovered, not only was able to put a good picture on the screen and good sound through the horns, but also was able to work well and efficiently for the reason that he knew a lot about the "whys and wherefores" of projection matters. He therefore is a valuable man and one I hope and believe will "get ahead" in the profession.

LICENSED PROJECTIONISTS

THOMAS L. JACKSON, of Chicago, writes, "Just had an argument as to how many projectionists are licensed in New York City and how many motion picture theatres operate in that little village. Will you be kind enough to enlighten us?"

"Little village?" Maybe, son, maybe, but at least we never have to tote a shovel along to clear the smoke out of our path when we wish to take a stroll! Pay us a visit sometime and look at some real cloud-scrapers. There, son, stay hitched, will yuh!

As to licensed theatres, the city license department is unable to supply me figures later than for 1929. In that year the total was 480, distributed as follows: Manhattan 76 theatres seating in excess of 600; 79 seating less than that number; and five airdomes. Brooklyn had 90, 82 and six on the foregoing basis, and on the same basis the Bronx had 49, 13 and five; Queens 43, 20 and three; and Richmond (Staten Island) five and five, with no airdomes.

As to licensed projectionists, our licensing authority, the Department of Water Supply, Gas, and Electricity, believes in being generous. It granted licenses to 5,532 last year.

However, that is really not quite so bad as it looks, for many holding New York City projectionist license cards work outside the city, merely holding the cards (which may be renewed from year to year without expense or any re-examination at all) for display.

However, the holding of a New York City projectionist license card is nothing much to be proud of, for the very simple reason that it does not signify, nor does the city hold it to signify, that the holder is a competent projectionist, or even a competent "apparatus operator." As a matter of cold fact, the law, so the department has many times advised me, provides only for examination on just one thing; namely, competence to project film without danger, or perhaps I might better say, undue danger of film fire.

The authorities seem imbued with the idea that fire danger is the only thing that counts, in which connection I might remark that it surely can not count for much, either, since many men who were licensed almost a quarter of a century ago, when maximum amperage permitted for projection in New York was 25, have not in all that time been re-examined.

The questionable part of all this is found in the fact that many out-of-town men carry these license cards for no other purpose on earth except to indicate to exhibitors that they are competent projectionists. I have myself had New York City license cards sprung on me as proof of competence, the holder doubtless being much surprised when I laughed.

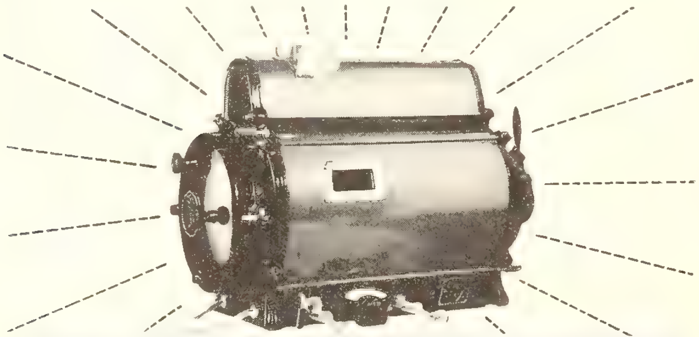
It really is a shame that our largest city should consent to issue license cards (well knowing they might be used in exactly that fashion), without a full, complete examination of all applicants, and for that matter, a re-examination at reasonable intervals, say upon application for license renewal each alternate year. A real examination, especially if coupled with a re-examination every two years, would have a very powerful effect in raising the standards of projection knowledge and thus tend to provide the people with better value in amusement and entertainment in return for the many, many thousands of dollars they pay in at box offices each day. Not only that, but it would tend to reduce eye strain, which is today far more dangerous than fire hazard, since there is now little danger of anything except possibly smoke reaching an audience from a film fire, and theatregoers are pretty well past the danger of an idiotic stampede. Moreover, if the projection room be properly constructed and equipped with a proper, very simple vent system which will be brought automatically into use when a fire starts, every foot of film in the projection room may be burned without the audience even being aware there is a fire.

Eye strain, however, cannot be guarded against in any manner except by the application of expert knowledge of projectionists. It is present today in many theatres for the simple reason that knowledge and skill are not applied, either because of carelessness, or for the reason that the projectionist lacks expert knowledge concerning his craft.

And after all a competent examination is a rather simple matter. At least it is not at all difficult. It may consist chiefly in the asking of very simple questions having to do with fundamentals. It would require little if any apparatus not now in possession of the examining board.

A man's knowledge may usually be pretty accurately ascertained by asking a few simple questions dealing with fundamentals. For example, suppose an examiner wishes to ascertain how much real knowledge an applicant has of the projector optical train. Let him ask these questions, or others of similar nature: (A) Explain in complete detail, just why both craters of an a.c. arc should not be used for projection? (B) What is a 6½-inch focal length plano-convex lens, and just why is it a 6½-inch lens? (C) Why will a lens not focus the light to a point? (D) Given a condenser having a 6-inch free opening, located with converging lens 12 inches from projector aperture, will all light passing the projector aperture enter a projection lens 2 inches in diameter at a 3-inch working distance? Explain by sketch. (E) Just why is it necessary to have more than one blade in the rotating shutter of a projector, and upon what peculiarity of the human eye does the transformation of rapidly displayed still pictures into motion pictures depend.

If an applicant answered all these questions clearly and promptly, the examiner might conclude that he understood the projector optical train, the action of light through it, and projection optics, at least fairly well. Much depends upon how the applicant answers, but hesitancy must not always be construed as evidence of lack of knowledge. Some men just can't help be scared into a blue funk by an examination which they are, under normal conditions, perfectly able to pass. An examiner must use judgment and be very careful to determine whether it really is lack of knowledge, or fright, or an inability to express one's ideas, that is at fault.



"Dependable?"

Why, many exhibitors wouldn't think of running their theatres without

SHOW BUSINESS IN THE WEST INDIES

I JUST had a talk with a man from the British West Indies. We do a lot of kicking about prices up here. Just listen to this:

Down in British West Indies you can get a pint and a half of rum for 50c, and it's real rum, too! The best theatre, has the following prices: The front of the pit is reserved for negroes at 18c per seat. The rest of the downstairs is 48c. The balcony was 60c, but has been reduced to 48c. Boxes are the same price as balcony seats—48c.

The theatre has one manager and two projectionists, the second of which latter receives the munificent sum of $3.50 per week. So after all I guess he does not consume much rum, even at the price mentioned! There are two ticket sellers—two girls receiving $3 and $4 per week, respectively. The ticket collector gets $3 per week, and a caretaker gets $4.50. Boys doing cleaning receive 96 cents per week. The managers in large theatres receive close to $150 per month.

A PROJECTIONIST PRAISES COLOR

PROJECTIONIST Lester Borst of Two Rivers, Wis., writes, "May, I, through our department, hand a verbal bouquet to Dr. Herbert Kalmus and Technicolor for their fine achievement, 'Manhattan Parade?' These Warner reels make, in my opinion, a big strike on the alley of motion picture progress. It is a distinct surprise, not so much in the color itself as in the matter of sharp definition and register. The entire picture is clean-cut and sharp. It is a God-send to every projectionist whose hair is slowly turning gray in the attempt to get good focus in projecting color prints. Projectionists and exhibitors should tender congratulations to the men whose patient research has given us the nearest approach to a life-like colored image up to this time. Myself and my co-worker, O. Loyd, certainly do appreciate such a piece of art."

AN INQUIRY ON CROOKED CRATERS

EMORY MYERS of the Strand theatre in York, Pa., asks, "Will you inform me as to why the positive carbon burns crooked in my Strong hi-low lamp? We have checked up several times to see if the positive and negative carbons are lined up properly, also if they are feeding as they should. Each time everything seemed to be in perfect condition. By laying some of the positive carbons on the table and rolling them I have discovered that some of them are straight and some are not. Tests prove that the straight ones invaribly burn straight and the crooked ones crooked. Our arcs pull 76 amperes."

Upon receipt of this letter I requested Friend Myers to forward samples of burned carbons, which he did. The craters on the crooked carbons certainly did burn to one side of the center. One side of the rim of the crater is burned, I should say at a guess, 3/64 of an inch lower than the other.

The answer seems to be this: Naturally, since the point of the positive carbon—the crater—is considerably in advance of the forward carbon support in which the positive carbon rotates, it follows that if the carbon be in any degree crooked, the point of the carbon will wobble more or less as it rotates. Perhaps, though, the term "wobble" is not exactly descriptive. The center of the crater will not rotate exactly on an imaginary line passing through the center of the carbon. Instead, it will decribe a very small circle around it, all of which has the effect of throwing the crater slightly out of center, and as the center oscillates around slightly, the same side of the carbon will always be nearest the aforesaid imaginary line. This condition will, of course, throw the crater off center, and there you are. If I am in any degree wrong in this reasoning, I shall be glad to be corrected.

A RECORD SYSTEM FOR FILMS

KENNETH R. CALDWELL, projectionist of Buffalo, N. Y., has sent in a copy of a film record book which he proposes to put on the market. The book contains 36 excellent film record blanks, each blank having space for 30 productions. Opposite each blank is a page upon which additional notes, rerouting, special shipping, etc., may be set forth. The book is well got up and should serve a very useful purpose.

A BIT ABOUT SAMUEL R. BURNS

SAMUEL R. BURNS has been elected president of the International Projector Corporation, to succeed Harley L. Clarke, resigned. Before accepting this position, Burns resigned as secretary and vice-president of the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Burns has been intimately connected with the manufacture of motion picture projectors for the past 18 years. He joined the Nicholas Powers Company as secretary in August, 1915, retaining that position for about nine years, at the end of which period he was elevated to the presidency of the company.

When the Nicholas Powers Company and the Precision Machine Company joined forces under the name of International Projector Corporation, Mr. Burns became vice-president, secretary and a director. He retained this position, or positions, until his recent election to the presidency.

Since 1930, Mr. Burns has also held the position of vice-president and secretary of the Fox Film Corporation, and the Fox Theatre Corporation, and he was on the board of directors of each.

The Operadio Dual Amplifier protects against sound failure

Interruption-free programs for theatres of 1,200 seats are assured by two complete independent A. C. operated amplifiers using type '50 tubes in the output. Control facilities enable instant changeover from left to right projector and from top to bottom amplifier.

Why tolerate uncertain reproduction when you can replace your old amplifier at low cost with the Operadio Model 64 Dual Amplifier? Your present sound head and stage speakers may be used. Write for complete information immediately!

THE SOCIETY AND THE ACADEMY

AWAY BACK in about 1914, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers took form, and since that time, it has worked hard, enjoyed a healthy growth, and has accomplished a tremendous amount for the benefit of the entire industry, all of which has been done without any considerable cost, in money, to anyone outside the Society. Many men, including myself, have donated a rather huge amount of work to the upbuilding of this splendid body and the furtherance of its objects. This these men have done willingly and cheerfully, without money or price, because of the fact that such work promised to, and later did accomplish, results of very large value to the motion picture industry and everyone connected therewith.

A relatively short while since, another body was formed on the West Coast, called the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. This body is to a large extent composed of men directly connected with the production end of the industry. It is for the most part supported by the motion picture producers and interests directly connected therewith. It has already accomplished a very considerable amount of very valuable work in the interests of the entire industry.

This body has been welcomed into the field most cordially. Just now, however, there are opinions that the Academy has not shown proper disposition to co-operate with the S.M.P.E. as it should. In the matter of the Standard Release Print and in the change in camera and aperture dimensions, for example, it cannot be denied that the Academy proceeded a very considerable distance without any apparent intention of consulting with the Society, which latter is, and for a long while has been, the governing body in the matter of standards.

Now, I do not believe that the Academy has any intention of working at cross purposes with the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, or in any way to ignore it. It would be the height of foolishness for these two great and worthy bodies to work in any but that most friendly and helpful. They must, in the very nature of things, work in perfect harmony if the greatest amount of good is to be accomplished, each consulting with and assisting the other in hearty co-operation, each working within well defined fields.

There is great need for both of these bodies. If I may venture a suggestion, it would be that the governing officers of each body meet and come to some definite understanding as to how the two organizations may function with maximum benefit at all times to the great industry they represent.

Minuets and Motions

GIVEN a man of any certain degree of mental power, what that man may accomplish in any certain period of time is dependent upon two factors; namely, minutes and motions.

In each day's work the projectionist has a certain, definite number of minutes during which much or little may be accomplished. Some men use these minutes efficiently. Without fuss, hurry or bluster they get a rather astonishing amount of work done, and well done, too!

Other men use the available minutes with enormous inefficiency, with the result that while they seem to work much harder than the quiet, unhurried man, they in reality accomplish less. Moreover, it is not in the least unlikely that their work will be lacking in excellence, as compared with the work of the man who uses his minutes efficiently. They make altogether too many motions. They usually make little or no intelligent effort to plan their work, or to arrange and keep the various tools in a convenient location.

Analyzed, this resolves itself into a situation in which one man uses his brains to good effect, whereas the other does not. Almost invariably the really efficient workman will be found working quietly and unhurriedly. Almost without exception when the inefficient workman has some hurry-up duty to perform, he will be found charging around "like a bull in a china shop."

Remember this: When you accept a position as projectionist you automatically sell the exhibitor a certain, definite amount of time, measured in hours, each day. By so doing you automatically agree that during those hours you will use all your knowledge of projection and such physical effort as may be necessary to place before his audiences the very best performance that can be obtained from the equipment and working conditions provided by the employer.

RCA EXCITER LAMP SUPPLY

E. E. VAN FRADENBURG, projectionist of the Valley theatre in Manassa, Colo., writes as follows:

"In a recent conversation with an RCA service man, he made the statement that on the new all-a.c. equipment, they use what is called a Rectox Transformer for exciter lamp supply, but that this unit does not actually contain either a Rectox unit or any other type of rectification. Also, that the exciter lamp uses straight unfiltered a.c. This service man asserts that the hum is not noticeable, except at 'full gain,' and that, of course, is practically never used. Will you inform me as to how this may be possible. It seems to me that to merely transform a.c. to an exciter lamp voltage would certainly set up a very pronounced 60-cycle hum.

"On the newer type of RCA equipment, they don't use a pre-amp., as we ordinarily think, but instead use a transformer to couple from the p.e. cell to the main voltage amplifier. It seems to me that the distortion, even in the most carefully designed transformer, would be rather large in this kind of a hook-up. Can you explain just how it works? I presume the transformer is a step-down type to increase current."

The matter was referred to RCA's engineering department, and the following reply has been received.

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I am returning herewith Mr. E. C. Van Fradenburg's letter of February 6th, inquiring about RCA Photophone a.c.-operated equipment. The special size RCA Photophone a.c.-operated equipment for theatres under 500 seats makes use of alternating current for lighting the exciter lamps. These lamps have an especially heavy filament in order to reduce the temperature variations during the alternating current cycle. This type of operation has proved to be practical and very satisfactory. It is especially so because noiseless recording is being used more extensively all the time. With noiseless recording very little light from the exciter lamp reaches the photocell during quiet intervals, therefore the hum introduced from the exciter lamp without a film in the projector disappears when a film recorded by the noiseless process is used.

"RCA Photophone equipment has never employed a photoelectric cell amplifier. A transformer has always been used to couple the photoelectric cell to the main voltage amplifier. The transformer steps down the voltage. Its impedance ratio is of suitable value to insure satisfactory operation and freedom from external pickup in the lines running from the sound head to the amplifier. This transformer is not a source of distortion and has proved to be more desirable than a photoelectric cell amplifier, as it is much less susceptible to vibrations of the projector. This method is used in the highest-grade reproducing sound heads for re-recording purposes in the recording studios."

INVENTIONS AND PATENTS

I CONSTANTLY receive requests from projectionists and others as to the advisability of securing patents on something the one making the request has invented. Many couple this with the question, "Do you think I can make money with it?"

As to the last question, anyone's guess would be exactly as good as my own. Assuming the article to be really needed, and that it is a practical thing from the commercial viewpoint (which involves many, many things), whether or no it would "pay" depends largely upon how businesslike and shrewd the inventor may be. Some men, you know, could not make money no matter how excellent the proposition. It just is not in them. Others would "clean up" if sent to Alaska with a shipload of ice.

As to my passing judgment of value upon the excellence of an invention merely from a written description and drawings, it just cannot be done. Even the inventor cannot possibly know that his brain-child will work out well in practice. Every invention must be tried out in the field before its relative merits can possibly be known. The thing that may look wonderful and work just fine in the laboratory, or in the hands of experts, may develop faults a-plenty when placed out in the field in the hands of the men who will actually handle and use it. Often they are inexpert, and not infrequently more or less careless. The invention must therefore be not only basically excellent, but also more or less fool-proof.

Then, too, it is always possible (a) that the invention may be too difficult or too costly to manufacture, (b) that because manufacturers are already tooled up for something else, its adoption by them would entail a prohibitive cost, (c) that it would force too many changes in existing apparatus to permit of its adoption, (d) that for some reason other than those named, manufacturers may not care to make the change (and the inventor, of course, cannot force them to adopt his device unless they are willing), (e) that the article has already been invented and patented, but never put into use (there are many, many cases of this sort, though of course in that event a patent would not be granted, or if, through some blunder, it were granted, it would of course be worthless), (f) that the invention may be too complicated or too delicate for use in the hands of any but experts.

There is only one intelligent course for the inventor to pursue: Have sufficient faith in his invention to protect it, and then see what he can do toward securing its adoption and getting some coin out of it —a dadbinged hard thing to do, if you ask me.

SOME VERY PLAIN TALK

SOMETIMES it seems necessary to talk very plainly concerning abuses, if one expects to secure consideration which may lead to at least some improvement. This is especially true when the abuses may be perpetrated by members of powerful bodies which believe themselves to be very nearly impregnable; immune even from criticism. Not infrequently it becomes necessary to sharply criticize an institution in which one believes firmly. Nothing human is perfect and powerful bodies not infrequently permit their power to be used by officers of the body in ways which every thinking man well knows are not right ways.

It is not in the least pleasant to be forced to criticize such bodies. One very well knows that those responsible for the wrongs will resent such criticism, but what is one to do? It resolves itself into a choice between cowardice and peace, with the wrongs uninterfered with, versus plain duty in the matter of open criticism. And there you are! Criticism then becomes the only right course.

Without naming names (I concede that much), I am going to be a bit rough. The other night I attended a motion picture performance in a theatre within the confines of Greater New York, and watched

SYNCROFILM

Examine all the sound heads on the market. Compare their design, their material, their workmanship. Listen to them in theatres changed from silent projection and in houses built specially for sound. We wait your decision with every confidence, for we know what showmen sincerely trying to give as good a show as possible will say.

Enough theatre owners did this to place Syncrofilm third in the American field and first in many foreign countries. They all bought under a satisfaction-or-money-back guaranty. Not one has asked for refund.

We are so confident of your decision in our favor because Syncrofilm has one (among many) exclusive feature that brings out every fine tone of voice and music. This one feature makes the performance of Syncrofilm so outstanding that many Syncrofilm owners cashed in on it and took all the other benefits as velvet. Ask to see their letters.

just about as rotten a performance, from the projection viewpoint, as it has been my lot to view in quite some while.

First of all, while the lighting of the picture was not distinctly poor, it certainly was nothing to boast of. This might or might not have been the fault of the projection crew. It may have been the fault of the manager or of the circuit heads. As to that, I do not know. The fact remains, however, that the picture was poorly lighted, and I believe quite unevenly lighted.

During a goodly part of the show the picture was distinctly hazy, which may or may not have been the fault of the prints. I could not determine that point without a personal examination of the prints. I did not do that for the simple reason that when the show was over I was so angry that had I visited the projection room I would probably have said things which, if two husky men were on duty, might have got me thrown out. For projection outrages do "get my goat," particularly those which are obviously due entirely to carelessness on the part of projectionists.

There were two features, one of them, "Hell Divers"—a most excellent production, by the way—was literally smeared with oil from one end to the other. The effect was nothing less than terrible. Not only was the oil-mottled screen image very hard on the eyes, but also the beauty of the picture was just plain ruined. I had previously seen "Hell Divers" where projection was excellent. I therefore knew that, granting some possible differences in prints, the photography was excellent, and the picture a beautiful one when properly projected with clean film and everything as it should be. Its failure in this case, therefore, was due at least very largely to oil, dirt which collects in oil on film, and poor lighting, the "very largely" representing some possible inferiority in prints, which, however, also may have been a bit better instead of worse.

But as though all this were not enough, in the middle of the show, at changeover, the projectionist actually perpetrated the crime of permitting a very dirty, transparent tailpiece to appear on the screen. True, the period of white screen was short, but it was there, and for that I can, at this day and age, imagine no possible excuse. Such a thing might have been tolerated occasionally fifteen years ago, but today—well, the man who permits it to occur should be disciplined.

When the show was over, I visited the manager's office, prefacing my remarks with the statement that I was going to talk a bit rough. I guess I was all of that, too, for I certainly did set forth my opinion of such a performance very frankly, directing the manager's attention to the fact that if what I had viewed was a fair sample of the projection work in his theatre, then at least a goodly number of the many vacant seats were, beyond any question of a doubt, chargeable directly to punk projection.

When the men in that projection room permitted the screen to go white at changeover, they not only disgraced and discredited themselves individually, but they also disgraced and discredited the union to which they belong. That is evenly and exactly true, and you all know it is true.

The union itself, through its officers, placed the men in this projection room. Through its wage scale it fixed their wages, hours of labor, and to a considerable extent, their working conditions. This being true, is it not just plain common sense that the union itself becomes directly responsible for the performance of these men? I am totally unable to conceive any possible grounds upon which that statement could possibly be questioned, much less disputed. Yet it was palpably evident that the manager of that theatre firmly believed it impossible, without incurring grave danger of serious trouble, to secure redress of his wrongs through the union, or perhaps I might better say, through the union officers.

I am firmly of the opinion that it is up to all unions, regardless of how powerful they may be, to deal fairly, squarely and justly with the employer. While on the statement of one manager I would make no charge of unfairness, I do say that any union which would presume to protect its members, or any one of them, in the commission of such a projection outrage as letting the screen go white at changeover, is itself unfair.

And now another thing, this time on the other side of the fence. The manager made another complaint, concerning which he and I promptly went to the mat. He admitted the production "Hell Divers" had been received from the exchange in a terribly oil-smeared condition, but objected to the fact that the projectionists had done nothing about cleaning the oil off, and right then and there I "lit" on him "all spraddled out." It is not the business or duty of the projectionist of a theatre to clean film. That is the business and the duty of the film exchange. It is one of the things the exchange gets paid for.

"It is the duty," said I, "of the projectionist to prevent oil from getting on film during the time it is in his charge. It is no part of his duty to clean film received in an oil-smeared condition. Were I working as projectionist in this theatre, I would most certainly guarantee that no oil would get on the films while they were in my charge. On the other hand, if I received oily films from the exchange, I would immediately report the condition to you. If you wanted me to clean that oil off, however, I most certainly would demand overtime for the work. It is up to the exchange to supply the projectionist with films in good condition to project."

We had quite a wordy "battle" over that, but he finally admitted that I was "partly right," but assured me that in that matter also he was entirely helpless, which, if true, is disgraceful.

DOUBLING UP OBJECTED TO

L. A. FOX, projectionist of the Capitol theatre in Salisbury, N. C., writes:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I am going to

ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO F. H. RICHARDSON SHOULD BE ADDRESSED AS FOLLOWS:

F. H. Richardson
43-28 Thirty-ninth Place
Long Island City, N. Y.

set forth my views with regard to doubling-up reels of film. I know there has already been a great deal said on the subject, but it seems that much more must be said before the process is finally stopped.

"There may be a few points of advantage in hooking two reels together, but they are so few as compared with the many objections to the process that I believe something should be done to altogether prevent it. Doubling-up not only destroys some of the sound track and some of the picture itself, but also, in the end destroys the standard leader and the standard release print changeover dots. Naturally, after a print has been doubled up many times, the destruction of frames reaches a point where the continuity of the picture is very seriously injured. Then too, every projectionist knows that to take up 2,000 feet of film, the take-up tension must be much heavier than is necessary when using 1,000-foot reels, which naturally puts an extra strain on the first few hundred feet to be taken up. Moreover, in case of fire, the chances are that twice as much film will be destroyed, and the burning of 2,000 feet of film will do much more damage to projection room equipment than is likely to be done with 1,000 feet burning.

"Another point is the saving in carbons. Often a carbon trim will be too short to project 2,000 feet, but quite long enough to project 1,000 feet. In our particular case we save 145 sets of carbons by running single reels, and that includes the extra minutes per day in which both lamps are burning at the same time. Of course, if the projectionist lets his lamps burn four or five minutes before the changeover, the carbon saving will not amount to much. We let ours burn for one minute before changeover.

"In closing I would like to say that if the practice of doubling up is to be stopped, film exchanges must find some reliable system for checking up on the theatres that are doing it. In the past we have ourselves been accused of cutting up film, when the blame was entirely undeserved. We think doubling up is a very bad practice."

Brother Fox has set forth objections to doubling up quite competently, I think. He does not seem to believe there are any possible arguments in favor of the process. I think in this case I will let projectionists who object to the 1,000-foot reels themselves set forth the advantages of doubling up, meanwhile inviting friend Fox to give a little thought to the situation as regards the thousands of theatres in which only one man is in the projection room, remembering that in such cases the man cannot possibly be beside the working projector, where he belongs, and at the same time be threading up another projector, trimming its lamp, etc., which situation must, of course, occur just twice as often with 1,000-foot reels as with 2,000.

Another thing: If the projection room be properly equipped to take care of fires, or rather the smoke and fumes resulting from fires, and if when a fire occurs the projector magazine doors be left closed, as they should be, no harm will result from the film fire to any part of the projection room equipment or to the projection room itself, except of course to the magazine in which the fire occurs—or if the fire occurs in the lower magazine, then to the magazine itself, and to some extent to the mechanism of the projector on which the fire occurs.

That is all I am going to say about this proposition at this time.

AN AMAZING ELECTRICAL DEVICE

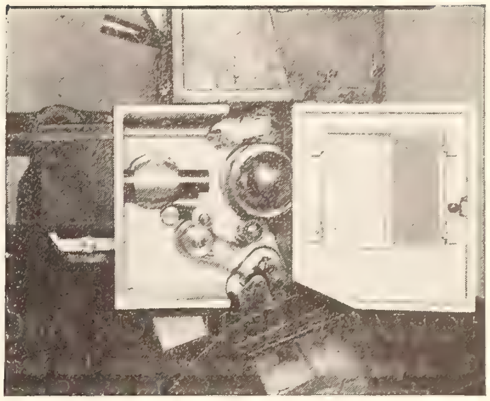
MANY of our readers have read the electric traveling sign on the sides of the Times Building in Times Square, New York City. There are only 14,800 globes in use, and the whole sign has but a mere 31,000 contacts. The voltage is 220. Eleven minutes of continuous reading can be provided. There is a total of one million three hundred and eighty thousand feet of wire used. Incidentally anyone who wishes to examine this amazing piece of work may do so when he visits New York by asking permission of the elevator starter.



LE ROY SOUND HEADS

Are the least expensive in view of the many years of trouble-proof service they will give the exhibitor.

One hundred positions for wear adjustment of the front edge film guide.

Film rollers are the highest grade ball-bearing type.

Rear edge film guides are ball-bearing mounted. (Cannot be worn out.)

Lighted interior—window in door which opens to right.

Film sprocket guide roller locks out of the way for easy threading.

Photo-electric cell located close to film, making light loss very low, with a corresponding greater volume from amplifier.

Optical system—very finest made—precision lens and highly corrected slit; although projecting maximum amount of light obtainable, will clearly reproduce 8,000 cycles and over.

COMPARE THESE FEATURES WITH THOSE OF OTHER SOUND HEADS—THEN BUY LE ROY'S.

advantage of the price breaks. That the bottom has been reached is a reasonable supposition. Consequently, it would be well to consider the advisability of getting needed improvements under way before demand starts the upward swing.

Entirely aside from the expense angle, theatre investments must be protected at all cost. Box office earning power must not be allowed to recede further, or the consequences may be disastrous. House service, equipment and inviting appearance must be maintained. Quality of projection is no less important as a factor for business success than it ever was. In fact it is more important now than ever, because the novelty of talking pictures has subsided and patrons are again becoming more discriminative about exterior appearance, comfort, atmosphere and general environment within the theatre. To say that the public is not appreciative of mechanical improvements is to defy the judgment and experience of the leaders in the motion picture industry. The exhibitor who is able and ready to buy for needed improvements now sits in the king's chair. It's a buyer's market.

PROJECTION MART

Equipment News and Comment

PORTABLE REFLECTOR ARC

● A portable reflector arc lamp has been placed on the market by the Strong Electric Corporation of Toledo, the lamp being designed for both 35- and 16-mm. projection. The lamp can be operated from any socket, with current from 8 to 16 amperes. It weighs under 25 pounds, and has an overall size of 18 x 12 x 10 inches.

ANOTHER MILESTONE

● After doing business for 24 years—practically the life of the motion picture industry—at the same old stand, 564 W. Randolph Street in Chicago, the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company (Motiograph) has removed to another address. The new quarters, in the same city, are at 4431 W. Lake Street, in a section of Chicago little more than a prairie when Motiograph came into being.

The early history of the company dates back to the days even before the motion picture, when the company was engaged in the manufacture of stereopticons for the projection of lantern slides. The trade name selected for the instrument was "The Enterprise Stereopticon." It was largely due to the selection of the name of the instrument and its optical characteristics that the name of the company—The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company—was conceived. In later years, however, the company name has been subordinated by the trade-mark of its equipment, Motiograph, and many refer to the company as "The Motiograph Company."

The early activities of this company date back to the year 1898, in which it was incorporated. At that time it manufactured a very light and portable motion picture projector. In those days the needs of the traveling exhibitor were of paramount importance, since the motion picture theatre of the type of today was unknown and exhibitions of motion pictures were given as added attraction to the stereopticon lectures. From 1909 to 1911, more permanent types of equipment became progressively necessary. In this manner Motiograph brought out the pedestal type of base, a removable double-bearing movement and a motor drive built into the projector.

In 1925, O. F. Spahr, present head of the company, who had long been associated with it, took the helm as president and general manager. The double-bearing, ball-bearing type of intermittent movement, the horizontal cylindrical rear shutter and other improvements were devised. With the advent of sound, the company designed a motion picture projector with all sound reproducing equipment built in as an integral part of the projector. The Motiograph "DeLuxe" sound projector is now the company's principal product.

O. F. SPAHR

The new quarters of the company offer opportunity for further growth and expansion and permit a more unified arrangement of the company's manufacturing units. The building being of one-story construction, affords a more modern factory lay-out with better natural lighting arrangement. The shipping department work will be appreciably speeded by an arrangement which includes an individual loading platform and enclosed space for trucks or drays. For demonstration of the equipment, the new quarters will also include a miniature theatre and projection room.

HIGH POWER RECTIFIER

● Along with a number of changes in available equipment and practices in the projection room, has come substitutes for the motor-generator capable of delivering as high as 90 amperes, or sufficient for the practical operation of high intensity lamps. Some information has been forthcoming from J. K. Elderkin, president and general manager of the Forest Electric Company of Newark, N. J., on that concern's diode-powered rectifier. The term diode comes from the application of the two-element, or tungar, tube.

These tubes carry two circuits, one through the filament, the other between the filament and the plate of the tube, which latter exists only when electrons emitted from the incandescent filament bridge the gap to the plate. The former current has the faculty of heating the filament to incandescence. The second circuit can be produced only when the plate is charged by the positive half of an alternating current cycle. Two tubes can be arranged in circuit, so that their plates are always 180° out of phase. In such a circuit, each tube functions while the other idles, giving full-wave rectification.

In the Forest rectification system, six 15-ampere tubes are employed. (15-amperes are regarded as the practical capacity of rectification tubes for theatre work), each rectifying one half of the cycle of one phase. The total rated capacity, according to these calculations, is therefore 90 amperes, with an overload tolerance up to 135 amperes.

Such rectifiers have already had some practical application, and the Forest company asserts for them a ruggedness comparable to the motor-generator. Doubtless they will acquire further tests in regular theatre service, which will of course prove whether their smaller cost relative to motor-generators gives them any advantage in long-run operation.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● An interesting use of sound equipment in sales promotion directly to the public, was made in Rochester recently in the campaign of the Genesee Motor Company on the new Ford models. A portable Mellaphone outfit was installed in the showroom, and the invisible salesman soon had a crowd around "him"—folks perhaps as curious about the source of the voice as they were about the new cars. The use of sound equipment for such purposes quite generally is indicated in the fact that Mellaphone received 11 orders for equipment to be used similarly.

Every projection room will have to be made ready for the new uniform aperture now coming into use with the new product of the studios. Doubtless every supply house is in a position to distribute the plates required for the projectors. From two, however, has come definite notification. The Chicago Cinema Equipment Company states it is already well stocked for immediate delivery. The National Theatre Supply Company also has stocked the new standard projector aperture plates, including those manufactured by the International Projector Corporation for its own Simplex projectors.

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

General Equipment News and Comment

AIR CONDITIONING UNIT

● Air conditioning equipment manufactured by the Largen Manufacturing Company of Creighton, Neb., has been placed on the market by the Scott-Ballantyne Company of Omaha. This equipment may be bought in separate units, such as fans and air washers, or as complete apparatus for ventilating the theatre.

The complete equipment consists in two major units, a metal housing for the cooling, dehumidifying and fan equipment, and a compressor, which supplies the cooling agent to the spray chamber. The air enters the spray chamber, is drawn through dehumidifiers, and passing into the fan chamber, is propelled into the auditorium.

CAPACITOR MOTORS

● An addition to the line of single-phase motors manufactured by the Century Electric Company of St. Louis, is a line of capacitor motors ranging in sizes from 1/6 h.p. to 10 h.p. These motors are furnished for single- or multi-speed operation with normal torque, high torque or low torque characteristics.

The small sizes have the capacitor box mounted on the top of the motor, but boxes can be supplied for wall mounting, which is the type furnished with the larger sizes. These motors are designed for the operation of oil burners, refrigeration units, etc., as well as for direct-connected fans and other simpler functions.

VENDING MACHINE

● A cigarette vending machine designed to be attractive for lobby, foyer and lounge space, setting on a standard with the glass container capable of being turned to bring the proper brand compartment forward to the dispensing outlet, has been brought out by Automatic Selling Associates, Inc., of New York, Loading is through either top or front. # The Theatre and the Law

founded upon a valid consideration. The generally accepted definition of a valid consideration is a benefit to the party promising, or a loss or detriment to the party to whom the promise is made. A valid consideration inuring to one of the parties may be pecuniary, or it may consist in whole or in part in the acquisition of a legal right not theretofore existing. Therefore, where a property owner rents a moving picture theatre at a stated price per month, with a provision in the contract that the tenant may "at any time during the period of the lease" convert the building into a building suitable for mercantile purposes, such a contract is valid because it is based upon valid consideration.

For example, in Martin v. Deaton (162 S. E. 399), the testimony disclosed that the owner of a theatre building and the operator of a theatre entered into a lease contract which contained a clause permitting the theatre operator to remodel the building and make it suitable for mercantile purposes.

Later, when the theatre operator decided to convert the theatre building for mercantile purposes, the owner of the building filed suit to prevent the change contending that the only reason the theatre operator decided to discontinue use of the building as a theatre was because he owned and operated other theatres in the city and desired to eliminate competition.

Notwithstanding the fact that the testimony indicated that the original purpose of the theatre operator in leasing the building was to stop its use as a theatre, the higher court held the lease contract valid and enforceable, and said:

"Under the terms of the lease involved in this case, the lessee (theatre operator) had the absolute right at any time during the continuance of his lease to convert the building into one suitable for mercantile purposes, in the event the picture show business in this particular building should prove unprofitable. Under undisputed evidence, the picture show business in the building covered by the lease did in fact prove altogether unprofitable, and the lessee accordingly had the absolute right to convert the building as provided by the terms of the agreement, and his exercise of such right could not be regarded as an act done in bad faith, such as would give ground to an action in tort for damages."

When Oral Agreement Is Void

ORDINARILY, a verbal agreement between a property owner and a theatre operator is void which provides that if the theatre operator vacates the premises before the expiration of the written lease, the property owner will cancel the lease and release the theatre operator from the further payment of rent.

For illustration, in Shillito Company v. Bassler (176 N. E. 461), it was shown that after a tenant and a property owner entered into a written lease contract the landlord verbally agreed that if the tenant would perform certain services he would be relieved from liability on the original lease contract. The tenant vacated the premises and later the landlord sued to recover damages for breach of the written contract. In holding the tenant liable, the court said:

"Since there was no defense to the suit for the rent, other than the claimed oral contract of release and oral ratification of the claimed oral release, which was no defense, the trial court did not err in directing a verdict."

Verbal Release on Note Void

THE LAW is well established that many kinds of verbal contracts are void. The latest higher court case involving contracts of this nature is Kohn v. Zaludek (38 S. W. [2d] 110).

In this case it was shown that a person named Kohn gave his note for $94.05 payable, with interest, one year from date. For some reason the holder of the note verbally cancelled it and informed Kohn that he was entirely released from liability. However, Kohn did not demand return of his note and sometime afterward the holder filed suit to collect on the note.

Notwithstanding the fact that the holder admitted that he verbally released Kohn, the higher court held the latter liable for payment, and said:

"Prior to the enactment of our Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act a verbal release of the maker of a promissory note from liability thereon without consideration was ineffective and void. . . . Now part of the article 5939 of our Revised Statutes, provides that the holder of a negotiable instrument may renounce his rights against any party thereto, but requires such renunciation to be in writing, unless the instrument is delivered up to the person primarily liable thereon. The purported release or renunciation, being verbal and wholly without consideration, and there being no surrender of the note to any of the makers thereof, was ineffective to relieve appellant from liability thereon."

Legal Definition of "Merchant"

THE WORD "mercantile," in its ordinary acceptation, pertains to the business of merchants, and has to do with trade or the buying and selling of commodities. The words "mercantile pursuits" have broader signification than "trading." It signifies, for the most part, the buying and selling of goods or merchandise, or dealing in the purchase and sale of commodities, and that, too, not occasionally or incidentally, but habitually as a business.

For these reasons the conduction of a theatre, or any business relating to motion picture films, is not legally a mercantile establishment and, therefore, is not goverened by laws pertaining to merchants.

For instance, in Educational Film Exchange v. Watson (7 P. [2d] 680), it was disclosed that a company was engaged in the business of distributing and renting moving picture films to operators of motion picture theatres. The question arose whether or not this company was affected by a state law which required payment "by mercantile establishments" of compensation for injuries to employes. In holding the company not within the range of this law, the court said:

"A corporation engaged principally in the business of renting films for moving pictures is not engaged in trading or a mercantile pursuit."

Automatic Renewals

VARIOUS courts have held that rental, lease, employment and other contracts are automatically extended for a period equal to the term of the original contract, if the same relations between the contracting parties continue after expiration of the contract.

For example, in Magnolia Company v. Davidson (38 S. W. [2d] 634), it was shown that an employer and an employe entered into a written contract by the terms of which the former agreed to hire the latter for one year and pay him $250 per month. At the end of the first year the employe was permitted to continue in the employment. At the termination of nine months of the second year the employer discharged him.

The employe sued to recover salary from the date of his discharge to the end of the second year. The employer attempted to avoid liability on the grounds that he had not contracted to employ the employe the full second year. However, since a new contract was not made at the end of the first year and the same relation between the employer and the employe continued into the second year, the higher court held the employer liable for payment of the employe's salary for the remainder of the second year. This court said:

"When one enters into the service of another for a definite period, and continues in the employment after the expiration of that period, without any new contract, the presumption is that the employment is continued on the terms of the original contract and that provisions and restrictions forming essential parts of the contract . . . continue in force. . . . The evidence was amply sufficient to support the allegation that defendant had by its acts renewed the former contract for a period of one year from the 31st day of July to July 31st of the following year."

Negligence of Concessioner

COURTS have held that the proprietor or manager of a place of amusement owes a duty to the public who are invited there to exercise reasonable care to see that the premises are safe and are kept in a safe condition, and that, if he does not discharge the duty, he may be held liable for injury to a patron, although the exhibition, or performance, or act which resulted in the injury is that of a concessioner, independent contractor, or other third person.

For illustration, in Miller v. Johnson (45 S. W. [2d] 41), it was disclosed that a patron was seriously injured when a plank broke which was used in the construction of a platform by a person who contracted with the proprietor to utilize a portion of the amusement premises for the purpose of constructing a platform on which patrons could stand to view a performance.

The patron sued the proprietor to recover damages. During the trial testimony was introduced showing that one of the boards on which the patrons were required to stand contained a large knot which weakened it to such an extent that it broke. The knot was not visible to the patrons because the top side of the plank was painted, although the knot was visible and could have been easily discovered by the carpenter who constructed the platform, or by the proprietor if he had properly inspected the platform.

In view of this testimony, the higher court held the proprietor liable in damages, and stated the following important law:

"A patron of the show stepped on the platform and was standing thereon watching the performance when the plank broke because of the defect or knot near the end thereof, allowing her to fall . . . resulting in painful and severe injuries. There was no opportunity afforded appellee to discover the defective condition of the plank, which was painted on the top side and put into the platform upon which the patrons were to stand in order to observe the performance. The defective condition could easily have been discovered by the employes in charge of the erection of the platform, the plank not being painted on the under side, and no care whatever was shown to have been exercised by appellant (proprietor), whose duty it was to use ordinary care to see that the device or contrivance was reasonably safe for the patrons invited by him to use it."

INJURY OF PATRON

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a theatre owner is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron as a result of the latter slipping on a freshly mopped floor which has not been properly dried by the theatre employe.

For instance, in Holmes v. Ginter (54 F. [2d] 876), it was shown that a patron slipped and fell on a floor that had been recently mopped and on which some water was standing. Although the lower court held the patron not entitled to recover damages, the higher court reversed the verdict, saying:

"She (patron) was an invitee, and the defendant (proprietor) owed her the duty to maintain its premises in a reasonably safe condition for use in accordance with its invitation. She had the right to assume that the floor was suitable and safe for her to walk on. From the evidence a jury might reasonably find that the floor was so slippery, either from the action of the elements, or having been recently mopped, that it was dangerous; that this condition was unknown to the plaintiff (patron) and not likely to be discovered by the exercise of reasonable care on her part."

Also, in the leading case of Judson v. American (242 Mass. 269), a patron fell upon a floor and received injuries for which suit was brought. She testified that after she had fallen she observed that the floor was greasy, sloppy and slimy. The cashier testified that the floor had been washed that morning. Upon this state of facts the Supreme Court held that the testimony indicated negligence on the part of the proprietor.

DAMAGES ALLOWABLE FOR ASSAULT

IT IS important to know that the higher courts ordinarily will not reduce an amount allowed by a jury for damages as a result of assault.

For example, in Pollard v. Vandivir (26 S. W. [2d] 495), it was disclosed that a proprietor became engaged in an argument with a patron. The proprietor struck the latter and caused him to fall, fracturing his skull at its base. The proprietor testified that he did not intend to strike the patron very hard, nor did he intend to injure him. However, the court held the patron entitled to recover $2,200 damages, and said:

"Plaintiff was 65 years of age, somewhat feeble in health, and weighed only 120 pounds, while defendant, though having only one arm, weighed about 180 pounds, was 44 years of age, and in perfect physical strength. He evidently struck plaintiff more than one very severe blow. . . . It also has not been overlooked by us that possibly defendant did not intend to inflict on plaintiff such severe punishment, and that he struck plaintiff with much more force than he proposed to do, but none of which furnishes a legal defense. Plaintiff has been most severely injured by the unlawful assault upon him by defendant, and under the law as administered he must suffer the consequences."

MISREPRESENTATION IN BANKRUPTCY

IT IS well established that a debtor who misrepresents his financial condition, and thereby obtains credit, cannot later obtain a discharge in bankruptcy. Moreover, this same rule applies to a person who makes a false financial statement for a corporation of which he is the sole stockholder.

For illustration, in Licht (45 F. [2d] 844), a bankrupt law was adjudicated which provides that "where the bankrupt has obtained money or property on credit, or obtained an extension or renewal of credit, by making or publishing, or causing to be made or published, in any manner whatsoever, a materially false statement in writing respecting his financial condition, discharge may not be had."

It was proved that a person named Licht owned the controlling interest in the H. Licht Company, which was incorporated. Testimony was given that Licht supplied a statement setting forth the net worth of the corporation to be over $400,000, whereas there was an actual deficit of substantially that same amount. Relying upon the truth of this statement a company furnished materials to the corporation. Later the corporation became insolvent and Licht personally became a bankrupt. The seller filed suit to prevent Licht from obtaining a discharge in bankruptcy.

The counsel for Licht contended that the latter's discharge in bankruptcy may not be denied on the grounds that he had made a false financial statement concerning the affairs of the corporation, if the materials were not obtained by the bankrupt for his own personal benefit but for the benefit of the corporation in which he was interested. Notwithstanding this argument the higher court refused to grant Licht a discharge in bankruptcy, and said:

"If this bankrupt issued a statement purporting to set forth the assets and liabilities of the corporation of which he was the sale stockholder, he asked the mercantile community to believe certain things with reference to his own property, because that is what the corporation was; he assured others from whom credit was sought that his equity in the corporation of which he was the sole stockholder amounted to $447,587.23; that is to say, he stated, in writing, the foregoing respecting 'his financial condtion,' and thereby brought the representation within the language of the section of the Bankruptcy Act above quoted. This would seem to be so clear, on principle, that it is difficult to grasp any argument to the contrary."

Injury Caused on Sidewalk

GENERALLY SPEAKING, municipal officials solely are bound to exercise ordinary care to discover and remedy defects of its own equipment, particularly that which is used on public thoroughfares. Moreover, it is well settled that a theatre owner is not liable in damages for injuries effected by municipal equipment, although the same is located in the sidewalk directly in front of the theatre. Also, various courts have held that a person who sues either a theatre owner or a municipality to recover damages for injuries effected by theatre equipment, or by city owned appliances on a sidewalk, is bound to prove that defective condition was the proximate cause of the injury.

For illustration, in the late case of Gatz v City of Kerrville (36 S. W. [2d] 277), it was disclosed that a city, which operates its own municipal waterworks system, maintains a water meter box in the center of a paved sidewalk on one of its principle business streets. The top or lid of the box lies flush with the surface of the sidewalk, and has been so situated for six years or more. During all that period pedestrian traffic has passed constantly back and forth over this contraption without mishap.

One day a pedestrian stepped upon the lid, which tilted out of place, and her foot and leg went down into the meter box, whereby she was injured. She sued for damages. During the trial there was no evidence that a defect caused or contributed in any degree to the accident.

In holding the property owner not liable, because the meter box was owned by the city and, also, holding the city not liable, this court said:

"When the city elected to place and maintain the meter box in a much traveled sidewalk, it assumed the duty of using at least ordinary care to equip and secure it with such safeguards as were reasonably necessary to prevent injury to persons lawfully using this public way. . . . There is nothing in the evidence to warrant an inference that its (lid's) position was rendered insecure, or that it got out of position on this occasion, by reason of faulty construction or negligent maintenance."

Effect of Rent Failure

DELAY OF a theatre operator, or other lessee, in complaining of a defect in a lease, or his failure to pay the agreed rental, will estop him from obtaining relief in a later litigation involving the lease. In other words, complaints should always be filed promptly, otherwise a theatre operator is duty bound to pay the rental in accordance with the terms of the lease contract.

For example, in Johnston v. National Company (134 So. 369), it was disclosed that a property owner leased property to a lessee who agreed to pay a minimum rental of $250 per month to preserve the lease. The lessee failed for 18 months to pay rentals. At the end of this period legal controversy developed over validity of the lease. The lessee contended that the lease was valueless and introduced certain testimony substantiating his contention. However, the court held that failure to pay rent or complain for 18 months estopped him from objecting to defects in the lease contract.

When Contract Is Fraudulent

AN IMPORTANT point of the law relating to contracts is that any person who sells real property, as a result of fraudulent representations, is liable in damages to the purchaser.

Planning the Theatre

This department, conducted by Peter M. Hulsken, architect, to answer inquiries concerning problems in theatre construction and remodeling, is omitted from this issue because no such problems were submitted for answer suitable to publication. It is to be expected that inquiries of the type answered in this department will be submitted prior to press-date of the next issue of Better Theatres, in which event the department will make its usual appearance.

For illustration, in the leading case of Martin v. Harris (236 N. W. 914), it was disclosed that the owner of a farm agreed to trade it for city property. The contract contained the following provision:

"There have been no representations of the reasonble value of any of the properties herein described made by or to either party to this contract. Each party is relying upon his own judgment of such values after a personal inspection of the properties."

Later the owner of the city property filed suit against the other party to recover damages and rescind the contract on the grounds that the farm owner had misrepresented the value of the farm. The counsel for the farm owner argued that the city building owner was not entitled to a judgment because he had signed the above statement and also because he had opportunity to inspect the farm.

However, it is important to know that the higher court held the city property owner entitled to recover $53,120 damages, and said:

"An inspection of the farm, if fully made, would not have disclosed the false representations. . . . The circumstances were such as to permit a recovery for fraud, notwithstanding the stipulations to avoid the consequences of fraud."

Liability for Damage to Machine

A BAILEE, as one who lawfully possesses property of another, is required to exercise "ordinary care" to safeguard such property against injury or loss. In other words, if the property is destroyed through no fault of a bailee he is not responsible to the owner. However, any special contract is valid by the terms of which the bailee agrees to assume full responsibility.

In Kennedy v. Clark (154 Atl. 577), it was disclosed that a property owner signed a contract to purchase a machine. This contract contained the following clause:

"This outfit is subject to 30 days' free trial. . . . The buyer agrees that the title and right of possession of the goods ordered shall remain in the seller until actually paid for in cash, but this does not relieve the buyer from complete responsibility for the care and safety of the property meanwhile."

Within a day or so after the machine was received by the buyer it was destroyed by fire without any negligence on his part. He contended that he should not be held liable for the loss of the machine since it was on trial and he used care as an ordinary bailee to safeguard it. However, on account of the above provision in the contract the court held the property owner liable, and said:

"The parties are not agreed as to the nature of the contract in question, but we think it clear that it was a sale 'on approval,' or, 'on trial,' or, 'on satisfaction' . . . Under bailments of this nature the bailee, in the absence of a special contract fixing the degree of care to be exercised by

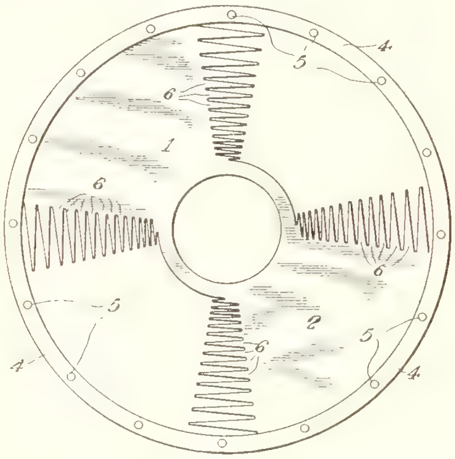
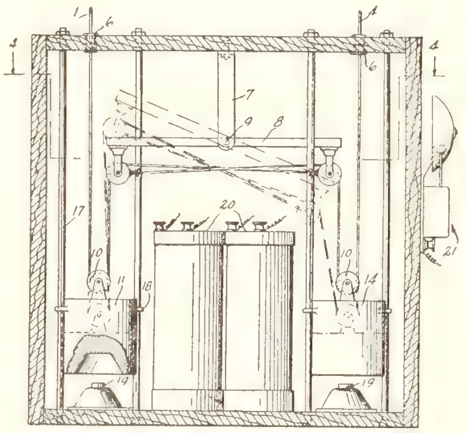
1,802,709. PROJECTION MACHINE SHUTTER (COMB) FOR MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION MACHINES. Augusto Dina, Jersey City, N. J., assignor to International Projector Corporation, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed Nov. 30, 1928. Serial No. 322,699. 5 Claims. (Cl. 88—19.3.)



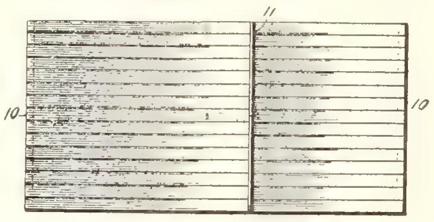
1. A shutter for motion picture machines comprising a blade, a series of teeth on a lateral edge of said blade, the length of said teeth being proportional to the distance of the teeth from the center of the shutter.

1,802,805. FIRE ALARM. Francisco Castronovo, Oakland, Calif. Filed July 5, 1927. Serial No. 203,436. 2 Claims. (Cl. 177—355.)



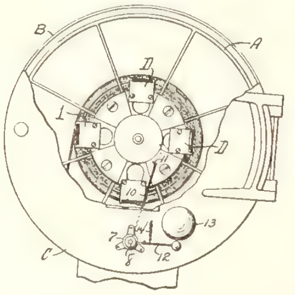
2. A device of the character described comprising weights, a bar, pivotal mounting means for the bar, engaging the bar substantially at the center thereof, pulleys, means for securing a pulley to the top of each weight, cords extending into an area to be protected from fire and anchored at one of their ends and passing around the respective pulleys and anchored at their other ends to respective ends of the bar, an electric circuit, an alarm in the electric circuit, circuit closing means for the electric circuit positioned below each of the weights and adapted to be actuated thereby, said pivoted bar rocking to drop each weight upon breaking of either cord.

1,802,826. SOUND-REPRODUCING MEANS. Adriaan Nagelvoort, Wilmington, Del., assignor to Delaware Chemical Engineering Company Wilmington, Del., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed July 3, 1929. Serial No. 375,728. 8 Claims. (Cl. 181—32.)



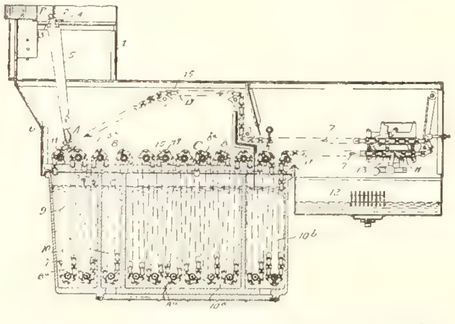
1. In a sound reproducing diaphragm, a panel composed of a plurality of parallel abutting, mutually damping slats of differing resonance.

1,803,241. FILM CHANGE OVER SIGNALING BELL. Morris Finkel, Drifton, Pa. Filed Oct. 8, 1930. Serial No. 487,344. 3 Claims. (Cl. 116—67.)



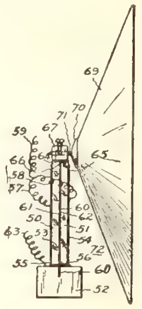
1. A film change-over alarm comprising a signal device, an arm associated therewith for operating the same when the arm is moved, a support carried by the film reel, a tongue pivotally and movably connected with the support, a spring for normally holding the tongue out of the path of the arm, said tongue being adapted to be placed under a part of the film wound on the reel so that the spring will swing the tongue into the path of the arm when the tongue is free of the film, a stop member for holding the tongue in the path of the arm, said arm moving the tongue off the stop member after it has been swung to a certain position by the tongue.

1,803,002. PHOTOGRAPHIC DEVELOPING APPARATUS. Arthur W. Caps, Rochester, N. Y., assignor to Photostat Corporation, Providence, R. I., a Corporation of Rhode Island. Filed Nov. 27, 1928. Serial No. 322,265. 5 Claims. (Cl. 95—94.)



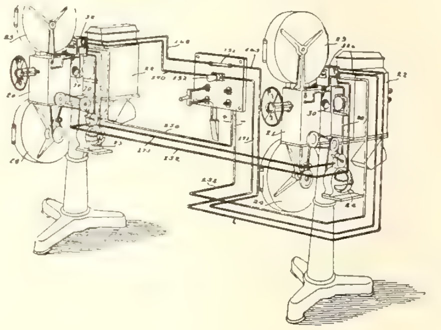
1. In a photographic developing apparatus, the combination with a receptacle adapted to contain a metallic salt in solution, of a chain arranged to run through the receptacle submerged in the solution and to carry a photographic print, said chain comprising a series of articulated links joined together, some of the links being metallic and separated by other intervening non-metallic links of a material incapable of joining in galvanic action.

1,802,782. PIEZO ELECTRIC DEVICE. Charles B. Sawyer, Cleveland Heights, Ohio, assignor, by mesne assignments, to The Cleveland Trust Company, Cleveland, Ohio, a Corporation of Ohio. Filed May 6, 1927. Serial No. 189,443. Renewed Nov. 18, 1930. 4 Claims. (Cl. 179—110.)



1. In an acoustic device, a sound amplifying diaphragm, a plurality of portions of piezo-electric material, each portion being mounted in opposed electrostatic relation to an adjacent portion and having a common electrode in contact with said portions, whereby when said element is subjected to an electrostatic field a bending motion of the element is produced, and means coaxial with said diaphragm directly connected with said portions perpendicular to the axis of bending thereof, whereby said bending motion may be transmitted to said diaphragm.

1,802,248. MOTION PICTURE APPARATUS. Roy M. Geyer and Charles M. Sweet, Mussoorie, India. Filed Dec. 18, 1928. Serial No. 326,900. 8 Claims. (Cl. 88—17.)



1. An arrangement for controlling the operation of a plurality of projectors in sequence comprising a pair of motor circuits, a switch in each circuit, a magnetic means adapted when energized to control the operation of a switch, a second switch shunted across the terminals of each magnetic means, one of the second switches being retained in open position by a film, a shutter normally closed by gravity but moved to open position by the magnetic means when energized, and for causing opening of the first mentioned switch and breaking one of the motor circuits, and a resistance adapted to be placed in circuit with a magnetic means by the first mentioned switch, and preventing energization of said magnetic means to prevent opening of a shutter connected with said means, the switches associated with one projector being adapted to control the circuits associated with the other projector.

him, is liable only for such injury to the property as results from his failure to exercise due care and diligence in its use and preservation. . .. But, bailees of this class may, by special contract, enlarge or restrict the obligation that would otherwise by implication of law be imposed upon them."

What Is Legal Eviction?

IT IS WELL settled law that if a landlord legally evicts a theatre operator the latter is not bound to comply with the terms of a lease contract. Legal eviction means that the landlord has performed some act by which the theatre operator is prevented from retaining legal possession of the property. Therefore, legal eviction is an act on the part of the landlord or his agent which results in impossibility of the theatre operator retaining and enjoying possession of the theatre proprety.

For illustration, in Vailsburg Amusement Company v. Criterion Investment Company, (156 Atl. 114), it was disclosed that a building contains a moving picture theatre and two stores. One of the provisions of the lease held by a theatre operator, who leased the building, required the theatre operator to deposit with the owner of the property the sum of $12,000 as security for the faithful performance of the terms and conditions thereof. The lease was for a term of fifteen years, the annual rental being $12,000 for the first ten years payable in equal monthly installments, plus the payment of the annual taxes assessed against the property. Later the street in front of the theatre was improved by the city with the result that the level thereof was raised about a foot and a half higher than the level of the doors of the theatre. Shortly after that a license for operation of the theatre was denied upon the ground that since the raising of the grade of the street there were no proper exits leading into it.

Thereupon the theatre operator abandoned the further use of the theatre, refused to pay installments of rent thereafter accruing, and demanded the return of the $12,000 deposit, although he continued to collect rents from the sub-tenants occupying the stores up to the time of the suit. It was contended by the theatre operator that since the city had elevated the street and refused to issue a license for conduction of the theatre that this fact automatically cancelled the lease and was in fact legal eviction.

However, under the circumstances, it is interesting to observe that the higher court held the theatre operator not entitled to recover the $12,000 deposit from the landlord, and said:

"It is entitrely settled by our decisions that, in order to impose upon the landlord the penalty of a suspension of the entire rent during the continuance of an eviction of a tenant from a portion of the premises, it is necessary that it appear that the eviction was brought about by the landlord himself, or by his agency or procurement. The facts already recited demonstrate that the defendant (property owner) was not in any degree responsible for the raising of the grade of the street, and the refusal of the municipality thereafter to grant a permit to the plaintiff for the carrying on of the theatre. . . . The landlord was entitled to retain the possession of the deposit at least until the end of the term specified in the lease, or until the lease was earlier terminated by the consent of the parties, or by operation of law. The course pursued by the plaintiff of continuing to collect rents due from the sub-tenants occupying the stores demonstrates that the primary lease was still in effect at the time of the institution of the suit, and as a result thereof the defendant (landlord) was under no obligation to return the deposit money to the plaintiff."

Filing Mechanic's Lien

ALL STATES have enacted laws which require contractors and materialmen to file mechanic's liens within a specified period after the construction job is completed. Various courts have held that "completion" of a construction job is from the date the last material is supplied or labor is performed. This ruling has resulted in considerable discussion with respect to what actually is "legal" labor and materials.

It has been held that supplying insignificant items or labor cannot be utilized by the contractor to extend the time for filing a lien.

For instance, in the late case of Northrop v. Guy, (134 So. 738), it was shown that a contractor, after completing the construction of a theatre building, purchased a pane of glass and one or two planks for shelving and repaired a leak in the roof. In holding this service not sufficient to extend the time for filing, the court said:

"The appellant (contractor) contends that it filed its lien within sixty days after it last delivered material or performed services or labor upon the building and, in the alternative, that it recorded its lien within sixty days from the date the building was completed. . . . The correcting of defects, which may appear from time to time in the work, after the building is considered and treated as completed, are not to be counted or deemed as part of the labor contemplated by the statute, in fixing the time, nor should material or services furnished for that be so regarded."

Radio Infringement

SOME DISCUSSION has arisen from time to time whether or not a theatre owner may be liable in damages for receiving over a radio a copyrighted musical program to which theatre guests are permitted to listen. Therefore, it is important to know that in a recent case (283 U. S. 191), the Supreme Court of the United States decided this question:

"Do the acts of a proprietor, in making available to his guests, through the instrumentality of a radio receiving set and loud speakers installed and under his control and for the entertainment of his guests, the hearing of a copyrighted musical composition which has been broadcast from a radio transmitting station, constitute a performance of such composition within the meaning of the Copyright Act?"

The Supreme Court held that under these circumstances a proprietor may be liable in damages for copyright infringement. Also, in the late case of Buck v. Jewell, (51 F. [2d] 726), the higher United States Court was presented the question involving the amount of damages for which a proprietor is liable for infringement. The court said:

"Unless the number of infringing performances of a copyrighted musical composition exceeds twenty-five, the minimum allowance of $250 must be made. Where more than twenty-five infringing performances are proved, and there is no showing as to actual loss, the court must allow the statutory minimum, and may, in its sound discretion, employ the scheduled $10 a performance as a basis for assessing additional damages."

Portents of Danger

by
MARTIN
QUIGLEY

¶ There is an idea pervading certain quarters in the motion picture industry that the road to profitable business lies along the way of providing for the American public entertainment which is actually obscene and suggestive or, at least, is distinctly on the borderline.

¶ The idea is being seized upon rashly and frantically as a short-cut to popular attention. It seems to bear some relationship to the difficult business conditions that obtain and to a certain frenzy to quicken the attention of the public toward motion pictures.

¶ If the whole question of the industry's responsibility to the public and the American public's insistence upon clean entertainment had not been so conclusively proven time after time, and if the sheer stupidity of suggestive pictures as an industry policy were not so plain, the scheme which is now showing up would at least be understandable—if not excusable.

¶ Why it should not be understood—although it is not—that there is a smoldering rebellion against motion pictures throughout the country because of the destructive effect of some of them upon the accepted standards of sex morality is exceedingly difficult to fathom. The warning has been shouted in no uncertain terms from every watch tower of public opinion—from Congress, the churches, the schools, the newspapers and even from the Man in the Street.

¶ Even in the absence of the development referred to above, the situation is distinctly alarming to every person whose sense of public decency is not either perverted or intentionally blinded. In face of what now seems to be approaching, the very existence of the industry as a great business is being thrust into jeopardy.

¶ Unless the industry preserves its position as the great purveyor of mass entertainment, it is doomed. We do not say that the motion picture is doomed; this institution will go on, but the business fabric upon which it rests will be crumpled into pieces as the result of what is likely to prove one of the great blunders in business history.

¶ And its position as the great entertainer of the masses cannot be preserved with product that is repugnant to American ideals, destructive to the standards upon which the progress of the country is based and a negation of the efforts of parents, churches and schools to guide the footsteps of youth.

¶ The motion picture is in no jeopardy; while it may suffer a temporary lapse, it will recover and it will go on, rightly directed, to greater usefulness and great effectiveness.

¶ But the present management of the motion picture, if the alarms now being expressed find eventual justification, will lapse into a permanent, unsung and unpleasant obscurity.

INDUSTRY AGAIN THREATENED BY TAX ON TICKETS OVER TEN CENTS

Exhibitor Leaders Gather at Washington to Launch Protest As Senate Gets Committee Report; Field Forces Join Fight

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Decision of the finance committee of the Senate at Washington late last week to adopt many of the original tax recommendations of the Hoover Administration, including a 10 per cent levy on all amusement tickets of 10 cents and over, places the motion picture industry, for the time being, in exactly the same position as it found itself in February when the ways and means committee of the House began hearings on exemptions under 10 cents. Many weeks of vigorous opposition by leaders of the industry, headed by Charles C. Pettijohn and Abram F. Myers, have been washed by the boards and now they must start all over again if the Senate or the conference committee are convinced that the industry cannot possibly stand a 10 per cent levy on tickets over 10 cents, which would affect practically every theatre in the country.

Strongly defending its action with respect to the low admission tax exemption of 10 cents, the Senate finance committee on Wednesday formally submitted to the Senate its report on the revenue bill which will be taken up for consideration Thursday.

Almost immediately the industry launched plans for a nationwide protest against the new proposals, with circuit executives instructing men in the field to join in the protest to legislators.

Industry leaders are gathering for the fight to raise the exemption to 46 cents. M. A. Lightman, M. E. Comerford, Frank C. Walker, Charles L. O'Reilly, Abram F. Myers and other exhibitor leaders are to be in Washington Thursday to launch a protest.

Adopt Original Proposals

Reducing the 45-cent exemption from admission taxes granted by the House of Representatives to 10 cents, the Senate finance committee late last week, following the appearance before of it of Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills, who scathingly denounced both the bill and the Senate committee's dilatory tactics, ceased its search for new avenues of taxation, adopted many of the original suggestions of the Treasury and left the legislation to the tender mercies of the Senate.

Possibly never before in the history of tax legislation at Washington as such confusion existed as has been experienced during the past two weeks of committee wrangling. The committee, from day to day, reversed itself, changed rates only to restore the original figures later, and fought bitterly over a number of controversial items.

The inability of the committee to follow any well defined course of action was to some extent manifested in its treatment of admissions. The House had repeatedly rejected the recommendation of the Treasury for a 10-cent exemption and had sent the bill to the Senate with a provision that the tax should apply only to admissions of 46 cents or more. During the hearings before the finance committee there were indications that the exemption would be increased to at least 50 cents, but during the sessions which followed the hearings it appeared that inimical forces were at work and, on the motion of Senator Couzens of Michigan, who was making a strong effort to minimize the taxes on automobiles by raising as much revenue as possible elsewhere, the exemption was reduced to 44 cents. The committee, however, it was later learned, had rejected a motion by Senator Walsh of Massachusetts to reduce the exemption to 30 cents.

The committee's acceptance of the Treasury recommendation for a 10-cent exemption in the last hour of its work on the bill is said not to represent the sentiment of its members with respect to this question, but is said to be rather a frantic effort to scrape some kind of a bill together and get rid of the task.

See Higher Exemptions

It is now up to the Senate to say what it feels the exemption should be. There is every prospect that a figure higher than 10 cents will be fixed by the Senate unless it, too, gets all tangled up and decides to have the measure written by a conference committee. Even if the Senate adopts an exemption of less than 45 cents, there will still be a chance for that figure, for the bill will eventually be written by the conference committee, composed of members of both Houses.

The measure carries normal individual income taxes of 3 per cent on the first $4,000 of net incomes, 6 per cent on the next $4,000 and 9 per cent on all above $8,000, and compared with the House rates of 2, 4 and 7 per cent, with surtaxes ranging up to 45 per cent, against the House maximum of 40 per cent, from which $155,000,000 is expected.

The committee provided a corporation income tax rate of 14 per cent, as against the House rate of 13½ per cent, but eliminated the exemption of $1,000 granted by the House to corporations with net income not exceeding $10,000. The committee also eliminated the House provision for an additional tax of 1½ per cent, making a rate of 15 per cent, for corporations filing consolidated returns. The corporation tax provisions are expected to raise $52,000,000. Changes in the administrative provisions, and the estate and gift taxes will raise an additional $85,000,000.

Other Levies Included

A number of other levies are included in the bill which will directly or indirectly affect the film industry, among them taxes of 4 per cent on automobiles, 3 per cent on trucks and 2 per cent on accessories, excepting tires, to raise $73,000,000; a tax of five cents per pound on imported crude rubber which will probably be reflected in tire prices, to raise $53,000,000; taxes of 5 per cent on telegrams and leased wires, 10 cents each on cablegrams, 10 cents on long-distance telephone messages costing between 50 cents and $1, 15 cents on messages between $1 and $2 and 20 cents on messages over $2, to raise $24,000,000; four cents per share on stock and bond transfers and 10 cents per $100 on stock and bond issues, to raise $35,000,000; two cents each on checks and drafts, regardless of the amount for which written, to raise $95,000,000, and an increase to three cents in the rate of postage on first-class mail and increased rates for second-class matter, to provide $160,000,000.

Allied's Headquarters Points Out That Committee Removed From Bill Excise Taxes on 11 Articles; Ohio MPTO Protests

In the meantime, leaders of Allied States Association have issued a call to its members to rally against the new proposal, and in a statement issued early in the week they flayed Secretary Mills who, it is said, "has been the unrelenting foe of the small theatres throughout the struggle."

"The Senate Committee on Finance after wallowing helplessly in a welter of politics and ineptitude for several weeks finally allowed Secretary of the Treasury Mills to persuade them to adopt a program of taxation which includes an admission tax on all admissions above ten cents," said the Allied statement. Continuing, it is charged by Allied that "the history of the admission tax features illustrates the complete demoralization that has set in in Washington. Following Secretary Mills' first recommendation of a tax on all admissions above ten cents hearings were had before the Ways and Means Committee that proved conclusively that a tax on the lower admissions would be ruinous to the theatres and unproductive to the Treasury.

Continuing, Allied leaders said: "There is great eagerness on the part of committee members to disclaim responsibility for this sudden denouement and the task of the independent theatre owners and their friends will be to hold these men to accountability for their participation in the affair.

"Not one—not even Chairman Smoot—claims that this action has any great significance, recognizing that the bill will have to go over the bumps in both the Senate and House. Therefore, you must bring every ounce of influence to bear on your Senators to raise the exemption to and including 50 cents. And while you are about it, do not fail to stiffen the backbones of your Congressmen also.

"Bear in mind that while the Committee was lowering the exemption on admission taxes to 10 cents, it also removed from the bill excise taxes on eleven articles, namely, furs, toilet articles, boats, refrigerators, firearms, sporting goods, cameras, matches, soft drinks, produce exchange and safe deposit boxes."

P. J. Wood, of the Ohio MPTO, immediately dispatched word to members of his association in which Wood said the bill "will undoubtedly pass unless every theatre owner puts his shoulder to the wheel and puts forth every ounce of energy within him to raise the exemption to at least 50 cents."

EXHIBITORS TO DISCUSS BUYING PROBLEMS AT MEETING OF ALLIED

Atlantic City Group Is Expected To Take Further Action on Ten Points Discussed by Directors at Chicago Session

Leaders of the national association of Allied States have decided to call a meeting of independent theatre owners to discuss film buying problems and their relationship with distributors in view of the proximity of the new sales season of 1932-33. The meeting is an outgrowth of the national board of directors sessions at Chicago on April 28 and 29, and is tentatively set for Atlantic City in a few weeks when the New Jersey state Allied unit is supposed to have its annual discussion. It is proposed by Allied's national officials that the gathering shall assume the proportions of an eastern conference of independent owners and in addition to Allied officers, delegations are promised from all units east of the Mississippi.

In the meantime, efforts are being made by the Jersey Allied group to secure special rates for members for Bermuda and if this move is successful, convention activities of that organization will be switched from the Jersey resort to the island. Allied's national officials, however, will meet at Atlantic City in any event.

10 Proposals Up Again

Alleged "evils" and socalled "ills" of the distribution branch of the industry will again be taken up by Allied at the Atlantic City meeting, and further action is expected on most of the ten propositions which came before the directorate at Chicago late last month, including several resolutions:

1. "Resolved to continue unrelenting warfare against unfair and unreasonable protection and to recognize as binding resolution offered at Detroit Convention, but inadvertently put aside to cooperate in various proceedings involving this subject.

2. "Resolved to bend every effort to secure the passage of the Brookhart Bill by acquainting the public with the purposes of and need for the same and to incur expense within certain limits for that purpose.

3. "Resolved that counsel issue a statement outlining the position of Allied in reference to the announced policy of Fox requiring the return of posters and that Allied cooperate in a test case involving the legal questions provided a clear-cut case arises in Allied territory.

4. "Approved with certain modifications proposed contract with Movie Stamps, Inc., looking to the stimulation of business in certain territories by the use of trading stamps.

5. "Approved report of Investigating Committee recommending rejection of certain proposed tie-ups for screen service.

6. "A Committee on Ways and Means was authorized to report to the next meeting a plan for carrying out financial program approved by the convention and any other plans which they may devise.

7. "A Committee consisting of Messrs. Richey, Yamins, Samuelson, Saperstein and Herrington appointed to consider the matter of organlogues.

8. "In answer to trade paper suggestions that Allied desired the 5-5-5 contract reference was made to the resolution of the Detroit convention outlining the position of Allied on this subject.

9. "The board reiterated its stand against percentage and authorized counsel to issue a statement outlining the reasons for this opposition. The board was of opinion that exhibitors should resist to the utmost the efforts of the exchanges to put over percentage deals during the ensuing buying season."

As suggested in the ninth proposition taken up at the directors' meeting, counsel for Allied immediately drafted a lengthy statement on the association's attitude toward percentage playing. It was made public this week, and follows:

"The Allied board of directors calls on all independent theatre owners to resist to the utmost the efforts of the distributors during the coming selling season to put over extortionate percentage contracts. The only general prosperity ever enjoyed by the exhibitors was during a period when they bought their pictures on a flat rental basis, paying only what their business judgment told them they could afford. When a good picture came along they reaped the fruits of their business acumen and profited by the added returns. Under the percentage system the exhibitors, assuming responsibility for the entire overhead of their theatres, contract for pictures on percentages which generally exceed the average of fair film rentals, and then take in the distributors as participants in the profits. There are several varieties of partnership known to the law but this is the only one where one partner stands all the losses and the other shares only in the profits.

"The unfair nature of these arrangements is all the more manifest in cases where the stipulated percentage obtains up to a designated gross figure, after which it automatically increases to 50 per cent or more of the gross. This gives sole credit to the feature picture for the drawing power of the house, puts aside as of no value the efforts, advertising and showmanship of the exhibitor, and assigns to the distributor the benefits of enlarged patronage which rightly should go to the man who bears the hazards of the enterprise. Care in the buying and skill in the exhibition of pictures are set at naught by a system which transfers all the benefits of the same to the exchanges.

"If percentage contracts and split-figure contracts work unfairly, what is to be said of the selective-percentage contracts insisted on by certain distributors last year? These contracts are sold on a high percentage basis because of the supposed high quality of the product, but the right is reserved by the distributor to lift a certain number of pictures, after their drawing power has been fairly estimated, to resell to the exhibitor at a still higher rate. Thus the very pictures on which the exhibitor relies to justify the high average are withdrawn, leaving him only the run-of-mine pictures. The extent to which this privilege may be abused was illustrated by the action of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in withdrawing "Emma" and insisting that the theatres accept two patched-up reissues in order to repurchase it. Such arrangements are a standing invitation to the practice of hoggishness by the distributors.

"Industry leaders have not yet learned that the prosperity of the industry depends upon the successful operation of the theatres, hence they continue to insist on deals which make only a paper record for them and are surely drying up the market for films by forcing theatres to close."

The statement by Allied then proceeded with a general discussion of the current economic situation, claiming that it will bring about still more severe sales policies.

Allied Calls on Independents To Resist Distributor Efforts To "Put Over Extortionate Percentage Contracts"

Simultaneously with the statement on percentage booking, Allied's national headquarters at Washington released the text of a resolution passed at Detroit by the annual convention early in the spring and in which Allied made clear its stand on the 5-5-5 contract situation.

In commenting further on the forthcoming exhibitor get-together at Atlantic City, Allied national leaders stated:

"The sales policies and product of the several distributors will be fully and fairly analyzed; methods employed by successful theatre owners in the exploitation of pictures will be explained and discussed; plans for enlarging the influence of the independent theatre in the community will be considered.

"The program being arranged under the supervision of Mr. Sidney E. Samuelson, vice-president of Allied and president of the New Jersey association, will be constructive and educational and designed to enable the independent theatre owners to weather the storm that is just ahead and retain their theatres for what lies beyond. Incidentally it is believed that the diversions of the shore between sessions will do much to renew the energy and courage of a sorely tried class of men."

Metro Experiment Strikes Opposition

Metro's experimental sales practice, involving the sale of exclusive run privileges in certain localities, is meeting with opposition at Wilmington, Delaware. In this situation, as in several others throughout the country, Metro is not selling certain productions to subsequent-runs.

Loew's Parkway theatre, at Wilmington, a house that had been dark for some time, was renovated and reopened recently with "Tarzan of the Apes," and the advertising proclaimed that the picture would never be exhibited in any other Wilmington theatre. George Long, Loew's district manager, is reported to have told local exhibitors who were curious that the exclusive run idea was part of a plan to improve Loew's Wilmington business "by getting the Wilmington public into the habit of patronizing Loew's theatres."

With indications that the Parkway would remain open to show other Metro pictures on an exclusive run basis, Wilmington exhibitors convened to devise methods of combating a continuance of the policy. Organization of an independent buying combine, contingent upon the participation of a minimum of 150 theatres, was one of the moves suggested, according to report.
